Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

By ROBERT ALEXANDER WASON

He [illegible] and calm like a [illegible] and I knew that he [illegible] hope they would be [illegible] by themselves; but [illegible] already made up his own [illegible] to be settled and [illegible] to have it settled [illegible] matter whose feelin's [illegible]

He had planned for years of lolly [illegible] and then after the [illegible] had this first couple [illegible] wanted the lords of wisdom on [illegible] stakes. Now, the real [illegible] his life was ripe and he [illegible] harvest it [illegible] last up [illegible] in a regular riot.

I knew that while they were talkin', he was thinkin' of the time when that other Kate had stood with the strange gladness of love in her heart, and he with the taut muscles of [illegible] had wrecked both their lives like that ball that cut the [illegible] stove.

Douglas talked big and bold like a strong young man, his father talked wisely and mutual like a weak old one, and Kate just kept silent and let them have it out as they would, while I kept my eyes on old Josiah's face and could tell by its changes how the wind set. The few words he had dropped before leavin' the room had took, and in the argument between father and son, the old man kept edgin' more and more into old Josiah's way o' thinkin'.

"Kate," sez he, after what seemed to me a long time, "do you love this young man?"

"Only him, father," sez Kate in a low voice.

"And you'd be willin' to cut out the real world and live like a hunted animal?"

"I could live with him, father," sez she. The old man made queer [illegible] sounds and Douglas stamped [illegible]

Kate [illegible] [illegible] more like insanity than reason [illegible] but I'm not goin' to forbid you. If I could look back on my own life and say I had reaped happiness by 'them' practiced what I would forbid you; but I can't do this.

"Your own mother married me without loving me, and she never did love me; she never did. I loved her. I loved her more than my own honour; but she never did love me, and though she was a good wife and a good mother, her very goodness was a torture to me. She never complained or reproached me but at night in her sleep I'd hear her whispering over and over the name of the man she did love, and when she came to die when the chains of duty had slipped away from her, her last words weren't to me or to her children; but she held up her hands and the old smile came to her lips, the free, full smile I never had seen after she married me. 'Stephen, Stephen, Stephen' she called, and I still hear her calling it."

The old man's voice gave out, and I could hear Kate sobbin' softly in the next room, but I wasn't heedin' them just at that time. I was all thrilled up at how faces are goin' to look in Heaven. The old hermit sat on the edge of his chair with his hands held wide and his fingers spread, as though throwin' his very heart open. His head was tilted back and his face seemed to glisten with a white light. For a full round second he stayed his way, and then he drew a deep breath, squeezed his eyelids together, clinched his hands, shrugged his shoulders, and stood up.

He noticed me sittin' in the shadow and walked over and put his hand on my shoulder. "That was my revenge, boy," sez he in a low whisper, "and one lifetime was a cheap price to pay for it."

Well, after Kate's father had rid his system of the idy that Kate was nothin' but a piece of property, there wasn't much left for the son to say, and so he pouted. Even Tom Smith didn't have the nerve to hang back on his better judgment with the still, small voice of Kate's instinct yellin' at him from out her shinin' eyes, and so they all fell into an awkward silence, and old Josiah had to take the reins, after all.

He stepped into the room and gave old man Kastle a grip of the hand. Kastle felt unusual clean inside and so the old hermit's spirit flowed right into his heart and warmed it up, but I was sorry he couldn't know just whose hand it was he was grippin'.

"I think you've come to the right conclusion," sez he, just as though they really had come to some conclusion, "and I can help you out. Judge Henderson of Paris, Texas, is one of my best friends, and he'll be glad to marry you. I'll go along, with my boys, and dogs, we'll follow the trails of my own people and on the way we'll tell them to prepare a fitting place. After you're married, I'll take you up to them and they will look out for you, while I sift this out and find out what is the best thing for this boy to do. I wanted you to take what life held out to you, Kate, and I don't ever intend to desert ya."

"Uncle Josiah," sez Kate with a little quiverin' in her voice, "I can't let you do any more for me."

"No," sez he with his steady-goin' vanity, "nor you can't keep me from it. I'm old enough to know purt' nigh what it is I want to do; and any way, child, I got regular rights in you, and if you don't pester me with questions, mebbe some day I'll tell you what they are."

Kate held out her two hands and the old hermit he clutched hold of 'em, and they beamed into each other's eyes in a mighty warmin' way. "Oh, you're a comfort," sez she, "you're a whole world of comfort!"

"Run along," sez old Josiah, "run along, for we're goin' to start, right now."

And so they rode away in the hazy moonlight, the fujuns and the breed scoutin' ahead, Tom Smith and Kate Kastle ridin' side by side, touchin' hands, touchin' eyes, and not knowin' nor carin' where their hosses took 'em, and in the rear rode old Josiah Cornell with a wolf dog on each side of him.

For years the eyes of a woman had kept his own eyes lifted, for years he had heard the voice of a woman callin' to him; until, through the soul of him bein' true to this one woman, he had found the little inner voice that speaks to every man. What that voice told him to do, he did, and there were no to-morrows to be dreaded. His life had become just one long day, his body was tired with the wholesome weariness of sound muscles, he held his self-respect in the grip of his own strong hand, death was to him but the setting of a kindly sun, and the comin' of a closer and kindlier darkness; and so it was not for him to weigh by the scales of lesser men, but to do what he had to do, and to leave the rest to God.

CHAPTER FORTY-SIX.
Fillin' in the Gaps.

That was the end of the story- the way that nature tells stories, the clashes and fightin' that takes place before the male gets his mate and they go off to build 'em a home—but humans allus want to know what comes after, and so instead of readin' the tragedy or the romance in a bent-over blade of grass, or the colour of life or death or hunger or fear or love or hate that floats in every breeze, they have made 'em books to tell what happened after.

What happened this time was, that Douglas Kastle was so cold-blooded towards me that I took up Flames behind me again and rode home as fast as I'd risk Starlight's legs in the moonlight. Fact was I was considerable surprised to see the moon still up when I started, for we get so used to measurin' time by what takes place that when things come in droves, we get all muddled up.

I had thought it was the rangers who were after Belle Sterns and I wasn't much sure she would get away; but when I got back I found the rangers still enjoyin' what Monody had cooked up for 'em. They had fallen in with our boys shortly after our boys had finished what they set out to do, and had come back with 'em.

Their hosses were purty well beat out, and they didn't covet to work in company with that particular deputy anyway. Jim had filled their ears about the way the man from Paris had carried on and how wise and shrewd he was, and the rangers decided that he was entitled to all the glory he could get, so they had just eased off and appreciated the forage Jim was tickled to stack up before man and beast.

They seemed to be enjoyin' themselves hearty and thoughtless, but I was aware that when I sidled in as modest as it could be arranged, the gray-eyed lieutenant noticed it right now, and it struck me that he wasn't just simply visitin' out his vacation there at the Lion Head.

I was purty tole. 'e leg-weary and a blanket would have tasted better to me than pan vittles; but after bracin' myself with some extra stuff Jim kept in my shack, and collectin' my gun, I drew up to the table and managed to give a purty fair imitation of a starvin' man savin' his own life.

So many different incidents had milled around and jammed into each other that when I learned it was only a quarter after eleven, I sent Flames to round up an almanac so as to make sure it was still the same day; but just then another climax settled down on us.

The door was flung open, and there stood Red with Shorty just behind. As soon as Red saw the size of his audience, he swelled up and bulged out the way he allus did when plumb in the midst of his element, and after stridin' to where we all could get a worthy view of him, he posed himself up solemn and important like a big red rooster and stroked his beard until you just nachly expected to hear music come out of it. "Irr wun," sez he, wavin' his hand as though makin' a pauper a present of a thousand sections o' grazin' land, "proceed to tell the tale."

"Aw, tell it yourself," roared Shorty, who had slunk into a corner with a pie he had caught hidin' over on a shelf.

"Very well," sez Red, "I shall do so. You see, good friends, Panther Emmons got shot this afternoon and he is about to die. Just before he met with this serious accident, he had fallen under the influence of little Sunshine Cooper to such an extent that Mrs. Cooper took pity on him and had him moved into the sittin' room so he could do his dyin' peaceful on the sofy. Baldy Hagus, who has the soul of a coyote, the instincts of a buzzard, the disposition of a buffalo-gnat, and the habits of a slaughter-house fly, arrived on the scene and insisted on makin' his last moments as miserable simply because Panther had seen fit to beat Baldy up with his own wooden leg, but Mrs. Cooper wouldn't hear to this, even though Panther said it amused him and took his mind off of other things. Baldy took heart at this and began to pester Panther again, and Mrs. Cooper lost her temper and said she wished some one would wring Baldy's neck, but before Shorty had more than half finished doin' it, she changed her mind and said that all she wanted was to get rid of him; so I took him to the porch and threw him off. He lit in her flower-bed which she has been waterin' all summer and the ground was so easy that his wooden leg sank in it a foot, and he had to unstrap it to get free.

"Well, all this was so softenin' to Panther's heart that when the baby woke up he insisted on her bein' brought in for him to see, and he looked at it so gentle that Mrs. Cooper just couldn't do enough for him. Finally she asked him if he didn't have any kin or friends he'd like to leave word with, for the doctor had said right out he couldn't live 'til morgin'. He snorted and said that as far as he knew he didn't have neither kin nor friends and he was glad to be shut of all who had ever called 'emselves either.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

In the Old Clock Case

The Discovery of the Guilty One.

By CLARISSA MACKIE

The rumor that old Gabriel Morse had been murdered ran like wildfire through the little town of Hampden. Soon afterward every telephone was humming busily, and a stream of morbidly curious men, women and children passed to and from the fine old house at the head of the street.

In the dining room of the house the chief of the town police force interviewed the dead man's two servants.

The chief was an eagle eyed man of fifty, stern lipped, with grizzled hair and beetling brows.

"Now, Amanda," he said to the housekeeper, "tell me just what happened last night."

Amanda Smith pressed a handkerchief to her wet eyes and smoothed down the folds of her lavender cambric dress. She was a wholesome looking woman, and her mother had kept house for Gabriel and his father many years ago.

"It was this way, Mr. Lane," she began nervously. "Mr. Morse had his dinner at 7 as usual and afterward went into the library.

"At 8 o'clock the front door bell rang, and Professor House came in. He was quite a crony of Mr. Morse's and sometimes came every night for a week and then for a spell he would not come for a month.

"I ushered him into the library and heard Mr. Morse greet him. Later, about 10 o'clock, the library bell rang, and Mr. Morse told me I could close up the house. He would let Professor House out himself.

"So I closed and locked all the doors and windows excepting the front door, which I left for Mr. Morse to do.

"I went up to bed and didn't hear a sound until Peter came up this morning and knocked at my door, saying that Mr. Morse was dead."

Chief Lane turned to the man, coachman, gardener and house servant.

"Well, Peter?" he prompted.

"It's all as Amanda has said, sir," said Peter soberly. "I helped her lock up the house, and then I went out to my room over the carriage house and awoke about 5 this morning.

"I had a pass key to the kitchen door, so I went in and started the fires in the kitchen stove and the cellar furnace. Then I went into the library to start up the fire on the hearth. Mr. Morse always had his breakfast in there.

"I found the room in great confusion and the body of Mr. Morse huddled in his armchair. He was quite dead, I could see that, but I telephoned for Dr. Gray, and I guess he sent for you."

Lane dismissed the two servants and went into the library. He locked the door on the inside, and, pulling down the window shades to shut out the curious faces peering in from porch and veranda, he lighted the lamps and made a careful survey of the richly furnished room.

What a struggle there must have been there in that quiet room! Chairs were overturned, pictures were hanging askew, books were scattered about.

"And he was found choked to death in his easy chair!" mused the officer.

Some one was fumbling at the door-knob, and he crossed the room and opened the door.

"Oh, it's you, Gray!" he said as he admitted the physician. "I was wishing you would come down. Well, what do you make of it all?"

Dr. Gray, who had been Gabriel Morse's most intimate friend, sadly shook his head.

"It's a bad business, Lane. Murder, of course. But why?"

"Money," suggested the other.

"Nothing missing. His gold watch was untouched, and look here." He unlocked a drawer in the great mahogany desk and, pulling out a tin box, displayed it to with crisp banknotes and gold double eagles.

"I found the drawer unlocked and possessed myself of the key," he said. "The contents were undisturbed. Eliminate robbery as a motive, what next?"

"Revenge," promptly answered the other.

"Did Gabriel have an enemy?"

"Not that we know of, but he might have had one—ah!"

"What is it?" asked Lane.

"What about Professor House? Where is he?"

"The professor was suddenly called away this morning. His landlady said he was summoned by telegram."

"Let us interview Mrs. Quayle, then."

Locking up the library, the two men left the house. Pushing their way down the steps, avoiding the eager questions of the increasing crowd, they walked over toward Phoebe Quayle's house.

Professor House, a quiet, unobtrusive man of middle age, had boarded with Mrs. Quayle for two years, ever since he had come to assume the duties of principal of the Hampden High school.

Mrs. Quayle met them at the door, a silent, dark eyed, thin faced woman possessed of a melancholy spirit.

"We would like to see Professor House," said the doctor pleasantly.

"Not at home, doctor," said the woman. "He was called away by a telegram before breakfast. He left at once."

"What time did he come in last night?" asked Chief Lane.

"About 11 o'clock. I heard the front door close, and just as his footsteps creaked across the floor over my head the clock in the hall struck 11."

"Did you hear him go out again?"

"Merry, no! I went sound asleep and didn't wake up until the messenger rang the doorbell and asked for Professor House. I signed the book and took the message up and put it under his door. Ten minutes afterward he came down carrying a small bag and saying he was called to New York for a few days."

"And about the school?"

"It's holiday time, you know, sir."

"Of course it is. You don't know the nature of the message he received?"

"I know it word for word. He left it on his bureau," she returned, taking a crumpled yellow paper from her apron pocket.

The two men bent over the telegram, reading the brief message contained therein:

Time is up. Do it now or receive your reward! KEETNER.

Lane turned to the woman.

"Was Professor House in good spirits when he went away this morning?"

"Oh, yes, and he smiled and seemed quite cheerful."

"Of course he didn't know that Gabriel Morse had been murdered," observed the doctor.

"No," said the woman in a dull voice. Dr. Gray looked at her coolly.

"Now, we will take a look at the professor's room, Mrs. Quayle."

Without a word she led the way upstairs, the men following.

"Here are his rooms," she said, throwing open a door into study and adjoining bedroom, "just as he left them."

Dr. Gray looked around at the orderly rooms and then at the unmade bed.

"Except that you have rumpled the bedclothes to make it appear that he slept here, when he did not," he said mildly.

"I don't know what you're driving at, Dr. Gray," said the woman sullenly.

"The truth, Mrs. Quayle," he said.

"I've told all I know," she insisted.

"Come, Lane," said the doctor curtly.

They went down the front stairs. In the corner behind the front door was the tall grandfather's clock.

"Your clock has stopped, Mrs. Quayle," said Dr. Gray.

"It does not keep good time, sir," she said in a strained voice.

"Perhaps I can mend it," said Dr. Gray, and before the woman could remonstrate he had pulled open the door. Something bulky filled the ancient clock case.

Chief Lane blinked dazedly.

"Why, it's the professor!" he cried. "He's unconscious or dead!"

"Dead in a few minutes if you don't hurry. Help me to put him on the couch yonder. Hand me my medicine case, open the windows, then lock that woman up securely."

Half an hour later Professor House was able to sit up and give a connected account of what had happened since he had left Gabriel Morse's home the night before.

"I said good night to Mr. Morse and came home at 11 o'clock. Just as I was entering the gate I met a man coming stealthily out. He did not see me until I placed my hand on his shoulder. Then he turned and struck savagely at me.

"In the moonlight I recognized him as Mrs. Quayle's son, Andrew, who, you know, is or was serving a long prison sentence for burglary.

"He wrenched away and vanished up the road. I supposed he had escaped from prison. I felt sorry for his mother.

"The house was quiet, and I went up to go to bed, but I didn't go after all. I sat by my open window, thinking about Gabriel Morse's splendid collection of diamonds which he had been showing me that evening.

"There was no light in my room and I must have nodded off to sleep. A touch on my face awakened me. Quayle was crouched on the piazza roof, holding something wet to my mouth and nose. I recognized the smell of chloroform and then lost consciousness. You tell me that you found a saturated sponge tied about my face?"

"Yes," said Dr. Gray. "In another hour it would have been too late to revive you."

"Then it was Quayle who murdered Gabriel Morse!" broke in Chief Lane.

"Gabriel dead?" echoed Professor House.

"Oh, no!" Dr. Gray smiled cheerfully. "We thought he was—but Quayle was a coward after all—he dared not finish the job he began.

"He got in through the unlocked front door and surprised Gabriel as he was putting away the unset diamonds. They fought all over the place and finally he choked the old man into insensibility. Then he got away.

"Gabriel Morse whispered the story to me just before I joined you in the library, chief."

Lane looked chagrined. "Then there hasn't been a murder, after all."

"I hope Mr. Morse will recover. In the meantime you might begin your hunt for Andrew Quayle."

"I'll try the railroad first," said the chief, moving toward the door.

"You might begin by searching this house," advised the doctor dryly. "I stepped on a loose diamond in the upper hall."

Half an hour afterward Chief Lane unearthed Andrew Quayle in the furthest corner of his mother's attic, and the stolen diamonds were recovered.

As for Professor House's telegram, it was a clumsy forgery, prepared by Andrew Quayle to draw suspicion away from his mother's house so he could escape.

Economy is best practised by cutting out waste. One bar of N.P.S.O.A.P. costs 15¢ and contains more and better soap than four or five cakes of other kinds at 5¢ a cake. Why not save the 70% by cutting up the soap yourself? N.P.S.O.A.P. has been Made in Canada for over 33 years Eighteenth Century Tipping.

You and I complain—and not without reason—of the tyranny of the tip. But consider the unhappy plight of the eighteenth century man. Here is the anguished wail of "Constant Reader," who in 1785 writes to the Times: "If a man who has a horse puts up at an inn, besides the usual bill, he must at least give 1 shilling to the waiter, sixpence to the chambermaid, sixpence to the hostler and sixpence to the jackboot, making together 2s. 6d. At breakfast you must give at least sixpence between the waiter and hostler. If the traveler only puts up to have a refreshment, besides paying for his horse's standing he must give threepence to the hostler, at dinner sixpence to the waiter and threepence to the hostler, at tea sixpence between them, so that he gives away in the day 2s. 6d., which, added to the 2s. 6d. for the night, makes 5 shillings per day on an average to servants." And 5 shillings then meant at least 10 shillings today. —London Express.

Wroth Silver.

Of the twenty-seven dukes of the peerage, his grace the Duke of Buccleuch, who recently died, was undoubtedly one of the wealthiest. He possessed nearly half a million acres of land, the annual rental of his estates amounting to £238,401, of which amount £43,630 was derived from the English estates.

Among the latter, the Buccleuch family possess one in Warwickshire, in connection with which a quaint custom is observed every year. This custom, which is of Saxon origin, and from one to two thousand years old, is known as the ceremonial of collecting wroth silver. A number of places in what is known as the Hundred of Knightlow, Warwickshire, are according to the old custom, expected to contribute their quota of silver before sunrise on Martinmas Eve, but some amount of grace is usually allowed in this direction.

The "audit" usually takes place on an elevated position known as Knightlow Hill, just off the great London-Holyhead turnpike road, a few miles from Dunchurch, the tryst of the Gunpowder Plot conspirators. An official of the estate offices of the Duke of Buccleuch usually has charge of the proceedings, and a document termed "The Charter of Assembly" informs the crowd that about thirty parishes are concerned in the tax, the respective contributions varying from 1d. to 2s. 3 1-2d.

The Gentle Exterior.

"What I admire," said the statesman, "is the hand of iron in the glove of velvet."

"Yes, indeed," replied Miss Cayenne. "It is much more unusual than the head of bone in the hat of silk."—Washington Star.

Old Time Coining.

In the fifteenth century a skilled coiner, of whom there were but few, might be able to turn out by hand fifty or sixty coins a day, a result totally inadequate to cope with the vast quantity of treasure, chiefly silver, that shortly began to arrive from America. To multiply coiners was to multiply forgers, and thus the coining machine became a necessity of state. A laminating mill and screw coining press was invented in Italy 1547, Spain 1548, France 1553 and England 1561, reign of Elisabeth. After several trials and abandonments the mill and press were established permanently under Charles II., whose golden guineas, struck in 1662, were the first regular issues of machine coins made north of the channel.—Argonaut.

KIDNEY DISEASE CURED SWORN STATEMENT

Of Mr. Wesley Maxwell, Who Gratefully Gives All Credit to Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

It is one thing to make big claims for a medicine and quite another thing to produce irrefutable evidence that it actually cures in serious cases.

We prefer to let the cured ones speak for themselves and that is why you find in almost every newspaper the report of someone who has been cured by the use of Dr. Chase's medicines. Today we present the sworn statement of Mr. Wesley Maxwell. When a man goes to this trouble in expressing his gratitude there can be no question of the benefit he has received. Mr. Wesley Maxwell, Orangeville, Ont., writes: "I have been using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and I must tell you that before I started using them I could only make water with the greatest difficulty, and had many severe pains in the back. I am completely cured now by the use of these pills. Before that I used a lot of doctors' medicine without any benefit that I could see. I am thankful for being cured, and can recommend Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills very highly."

SWORN STATEMENT.

"This is to certify that I, Wesley Maxwell, of the Township of Caledon, was cured of kidney trouble by taking Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

"Wesley Maxwell."

"Sworn before me, this correct this 6th day of January, 1915. — Wm. Hawkins, Son, Justice of the Peace."

This statement is also endorsed by the Rev. Geo. W. Robinson, who is Mr. Maxwell's pastor.

This cure will interest a great many people who are suffering as Mr. Maxwell was with kidney and urinary troubles. It will only cost you a quarter to buy a box of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and put this medicine to the test. We are sure that you will be thankful to the writer for describing his cure to you. Theodosia Once Great Corn Port.

Theodosia, the Crimean port, bears one of the oldest names in Europe. It was founded in the seventh century B. C. by the Greeks of Miletus and became a great exporter of corn. In one year alone of the fourth century B. C. Theodosia sent 2,100,000 medimni (a medimnus equals twelve gallons) of corn to Athens. How climate influences history is illustrated by the fact that the Crimea, which had so much corn to spare in antiquity, has in our time had to be fed from Russia. "It is very probable," says Mommsen, "that the extraordinary drought, which is the chief obstacle now to agriculture in the Crimea, has been greatly increased by the disappearance of the forests of central and southern Russia, which formerly to some extent protected the coast provinces from the parching northeast wind."

Curious Insurance.

In France there is a curious form of life insurance, the peculiarity being that the longer a man lives the less his heirs become entitled to. The idea is that if a man dies young his children will require help, but that by the time he is fifty they will be old enough to earn their own living.

Fun From the Firing Line.

The course of training for a recruit is not all drudgery, says London Tit-Bits. Hardly a day passes without some amusing incident happening. The following occurred a few weeks ago in a Territorial regiment.

The day's program included practice in passing messages from mouth to mouth all along the line. In the roar of a battle it is very necessary that each man should be able to pass on a message which could not be heard if the officer in charge called it out. The officer got the men in a firing position and whispered the following message to the man on the left flank:

"Left half-company commander to right half-company commander - ammunition almost done; let us have more quickly," and ordered the message to be passed to the right. In a few minutes he called up the right-flank man and asked for the message as he receive it.

The reply was:

"Ammunition all gone. God Save the King."

There was very little order for a few minutes after that.

Not Long With French.

During the South African war the Boers were, according to Mr. Cecil Chisholm, M.A., in his authentic biography of Sir John French, the first to admit French's superiority to the other English officers if not to themselves. De Wet was once asked in the early stages of the war how long he expected to avoid capture. He replied, with a smile, that it all depended on which general was despatched to run him down. When a certain name was mentioned, the reply was, "Till Eternity." Gen. B—— was next mention. "About two years," was the verdict. "And Gen. French?" "Two weeks," admitted De Wet.

Khaki For Tartans.

The Scotch kilted regiments are threatened with the substitution of khaki for their tartans. It will be some time, however, before the change can be brought about, for it will be some months before all the units of the new army can be supplied with their khaki uniforms.

NOT HAPHAZARD.

British Use Steel With Peculiar Dash, But With Method.

One of the features of the war has been the brilliant successes accomplished by means of British bayonet charges, and time and again the boys with the cold grey steel have scattered the Germans like chaff before the wind. A modern bayonet charge is a combination of pluck and discipline, for it consists of more than a reckless rush at the enemy. Troops engaged in such an undertaking now advance towards the foe by means of a series of rushes—which is to say a battalion does not advance simultaneously, but in portions, and each unit runs for a certain distance and then takes cover. This method has proved to be more satisfactory than the old haphazard dash with bayonets which resulted in such heavy casualties amongst the participators.

During the charge the battalion is split up into three portions — right, centre, and left. Whilst one unit advances, the other taking cover or lying on the earth, keeps up a murderous fire at the enemy, and slowly the men, by numerous short rushes, creep towards their goal. The assailants take advantage of every little shrub or hillock, and even a fold in the ground is used for purposes of cover, and in this way casualties are kept down to a minimum.

One great advantage of this form of advance is that the men, when they do come to grips with the enemy, are comparatively fresh, and not ready to fall with fatigue as they would be if they had run for several hundred yards without a breathing space. The last few yards to be covered by the bayonet-fighters is taken with a fierce rush, which not only adds impetus to the charge, but also badly scares the enemy, especially when our troops shriek out their favorite war-cries at the tops of their voices. The British are generally recognized as being the best bayonet-fighters in the world, and special pains are taken to train them in this form of attack. A machine for this purpose is in use in the army which consists of a number of wires stretched across on a frame along which balls of plaited straw run downwards in an erratic fashion. The soldier stands a few feet away from the apparatus and makes quick jabs at these balls, his object being to strike them true in the centre, and, with a quick wrench, withdraw the weapon in time to make a stroke at the following ball.

Never Saw Napoleon.

King Edward VII. as a boy worshipped Wellington, who lived for 11 years after the birth of the future King. One morning the young Prince of Wales displayed with pride a drawing which he had made representing Napoleon on horseback leveling a pistol at the head of the duke, who was advancing with sword drawn to cut down the enemy. Just at this moment the Duke of Wellington entered the prince's room.

"You are just the man I want to see," cried the boy, holding up his picture in delight.

"How is that?" asked the veteran duke.

"Why, because you can best criticize my drawing," said the prince. "Now can you tell me who is on the left?" he went on, showing the picture to the duke.

"Well," said the latter, "from the waistcoat and the hat I can see it is meant for Napoleon."

"Right," said the prince; "and who is the other?"

"By the cut of the features I should say it was myself."

"Right again," answered the prince. "Now, what I want to know is — is the drawing accurate?"

The old duke put down the drawing and impressingly answered: "My boy, I am going to tell you something that the English people don't know. I never in my life set eyes upon Napoleon!"

Curable Case.

The widow Gilroy had just told a friend of her engagement.

"But, my dear Margaret," said the friend, "you don't really mean to tell me that you intend marrying a man you've only known for three weeks?"

"Oh, yes," replied the young widow. "I can easily overcome that objection in time. I hope to know him tolerably well after we have been married a couple of years."—Philadelphia Record.

I want you to understand, young feller, that our town don't stand still long enough to be photographed.—Terre Haute Express.

Instinct and Reason.

The term "instinct" is supposed to refer to the intelligence which leads to the performance of actions that are adaptive in character, but pursued without necessary knowledge of the relation between the means employed and the ends attained, while "reason" is supposed to be aware of such knowledge and to work accordingly.—New York American.

Cheese In Soup.

Cheese is almost always a nice addition to a soup. Besides being agreeable to the palate, it adds nutriment to the soup if it is not rich in itself, like the tomato and the vegetable soup. Any good yellow cheese can be utilized in this way, even ordinary American cheese. In foreign households clear consomme and other soups are often accompanied by grated Parmesan cheese.

Such Cases Are Known.

"I can say this much for Cupid," remarked the sentimental man. "He doesn't use dumdum bullets."

"Perhaps not," replied the confirmed cynic, "but a dumdum bullet brings a speedy death, while a person who is struck by one of Cupid's darts is apt to linger on for years."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Curious Lightning Display.

A brilliant and startling spectacle was witnessed a short time ago in a Tyrolean valley near Tanneheim. A violent storm arose suddenly and several globes of lightning rolled over the surface of the lake. Then a column of water arose thirty feet high from the middle of the lake and from its top small flashes darted. The spectacle lasted about three minutes.

Working Under Difficulties.

For fourteen years I have not had a day's real health. I have wakened sick and gone to bed weary, and I have done my work unflinchingly. And the battle goes on—ill or well, is a trifle, so as it goes. I was made for a contest and the powers have so willed that my battlefield should be this dingy and inglorious one of bed and the physic bottle.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

Cleverly Named.

The other day Tommy's uncle asked him the name of May's young man.

"I call him 'April Showers,'" replied Tommy.

"'April Showers?'" cried his uncle in amusement. "What makes you call him such a foolish name as that?"

"Because he brings May flowers."—London Telegraph.

How She Thanked the Conductor.

Mrs. K. got on the street car with her little daughter Sallie, and when it came time to get off the car the conductor obligingly helped little Sallie to the street.

"Say thank you, darling, to the man for helping you off," said the mother.

"Thank you, darling," said little Sallie, at which mother blushed and the passengers roared.—Indianapolis News.

Prescriptions In English.

"If a medicinal substance has any effect except upon the imagination it will have that effect as much when written in English as in perfect Latin," says the New York Medical Journal. It says doctors still write their prescriptions in Latin only because their ancestors did so and perhaps because it impresses the patient, but the names of the drugs now used "look as formidable in English as in Latin." Therefore it, urges physicians to write in English. Thus fewer mistakes will be made in putting up medicines.

First School For the Blind.

The derisive exhibition of blind men in the streets of Paris in 1784 led to the establishment of the first training school for the afflicted of this class. It is related that a Paris innkeeper to found a new attraction for a street fair took five blind men, arrayed them in grotesque habiliments, furnished them with discordant musical instruments and bade the people come, see—and laugh. The pitiful spectacle touched the heart of an onlooker, who established a school whereby the sightless might be educated.—Argonaut.

MANHOOD.

Labor, calling, profession, scholarship and artificial and arbitrary distinctions of all sorts are incidents and accidents of life and pass away. It is only manhood that remains, and it is only by manhood that man is to be measured.—Josiah Gilbert Holland.

Don't choose cheap lace curtains. If you can't afford good ones invest in nainsook cloth or plain muslin and make them at home.

Descendants of Attila.

In these later days we often hear the name of Attila, the terrible chief of the Huns. A noble family of Hungary, the Tuhki family, claims him for ancestor. This family lives in Temesvar, in Transylvania. Its members speak only the Hungarian language even when they journey in the German part of Austria. Another family that puts Attila on its genealogical tree is the Esterhazy which also claims descent from Enoch, father of Methuselah and great grandfather of Noah.—Cri de Paris.

How the Rash Comes.

In measles a rash appears on the fourth day of the fever. It is first seen on the forehead, face and neck, afterward over the whole body. It consists of raised red spots. In scarlet fever the rash appears on the second day of the fever, commencing on the upper part of the chest and neck, whence it spreads over the body. In smallpox an eruption is seen on the third or fourth day on the face, neck and wrists. In chicken pox the eruption is made of small blebs. In typhoid fever the rash rarely shows itself before the seventh day of the fever. The spots are rose colored, and they disappear on pressure.

And They Didn't Exercise.

William M. Evarts, who lived until he was nearly ninety, said he kept his health by never taking exercise. The celebrated Dr. William George Mead, who lived to the surprising age of 148 years, spent nearly all of his time in the open air and played a little golf. Dr. Mead used to drink two or three quarts of water every day, and perhaps there is a suggestion in that. Old Dubois, who lived in Canada for the better part of 119 years on the north shore of Lake Erie, never worked and never took exercise. He spent seventy-five years of his life fishing with hook and line and ate nothing but baked apples and milk and brown bread and unsalted butter.

Culpeper's Remedies.

Old time physicians prescribed even more unsavory remedies than rancid butter, which was Emperor Menelik's cure for malarial fever. In "Culpepper's Herbal," published originally in 1656 and reprinted as recently as 1820, are such prescriptions as "oil wherein frogs have been sodden till all the flesh is off from their bones," "horse leeches burned into powder" and "black soap and beaten ginger." Some of Culpepper's remedies are of a more practical nature. "If redhot gold be quenched in wine," he says, "and the wine drunk it cheers the vitals and cures the plague. Outwardly used it takes away spots and leprosis."

Investigating.

Blackstone Kent (to partner)—Have you investigated Mrs. Brown's case sufficiently to say whether we would be justified in asking a divorce? Partner—Well, I have asked the mercantile agencies for a report on her husband's financial standing.—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

Toronto's Name.

The name of the city of Toronto is of Indian origin, and its meaning is "a place of meeting." The site of Toronto before the arrival of the white man was an established rendezvous among the Indian tribes of the surrounding districts.

The Grouchy View.

Secretary (writing advertisement)—Wanted, an intelligent young man, unmarried— Old Grouch—Leave out the "unmarried." You said intelligent, didn't you?—Exchange.

Wanted More.

"Why did Kate refuse at the party to sing 'All That I Want Is Love?'"

"She refused because it wouldn't be true. She wants the vote also."—Exchange.

When men are rightly occupied their amusement grows out of their work, as the color petals out of the fruitful flower.—Ruskin.

Cordite.

Cordite, the British service propellant used in all arms, from the army revolver to the fifteen inch naval gun, may be taken as a general type of modern gunpowders. Its name is derived from the circumstance that it is manufactured in the shape of string or cord, varying from one thirtieth of an inch to nearly half an inch in diameter. It was devised by the ordnance committee over which Sir Frederick Abel presided in 1891, with Sir James Dewar as scientific adviser. It is a mixture of guncotton and nitroglycerin, with a small amount of mineral jelly to act as a lubricant and preservative.—London Globe.

A Deep Sea Mascot.

One of the favorite mascots of deep sea fishermen, to which they attach great importance, is a tiny flat stone, or bone, found in the ears of prawn and other fish. The wearer of one of these stones is supposed to be immune to the danger of drowning.

It is easy to find these stones in the ears of fish, although they are no bigger than a split lentil. Anybody who cares to look for one and to examine it will see on its surface light and dark rings, similar to those found on a larger scale in tree trunks. The number of rings tells the age of the fish, as a new ring appears each year.—Every Week.

Dwindling Captives.

Most creatures that have been tamed by man have gained in size during their long captivity, but there are several notable exceptions. The cat is one. Our house pussy is a smaller and far feebler thing than the wild cat from which she is descended. Sheep and turkeys are other instances of degeneration. The wild gobbler is considerably larger than the tame Thanksgiving bird. A full grown wild ram of the Rocky mountain species seldom weighs less than 300 pounds, and the wild sheep of the old world are said to be of equal size, while a tame ram, even of the mutton breeds, is doing well if he scales 200 pounds.—Chicago Journal.

USEFULNESS.

It is a great satisfaction at the close of life to feel that you have lived not for yourself alone, but that you have been useful to others. You may be assured also that the same feeling is a source of comfort and happiness at any period of life. Nothing in this world is so good as usefulness. It tends to the improvement of your own character.

Needed Repairs.

"Does your typewriter need repairs?" asked the meandering tinker as he entered the office.

"It would seem so," replied the employer. "She has just gone across the street to consult a dentist."

World's Debt to the Unfit.

The world owes much to the physically unfit. It would be less worth living in today but for the brilliant consumptives and cripples and blind and deaf men who have enriched it. In our craze for efficiency and for mechanizing everything we are in danger of forgetting that there are other things in the world too. We cannot do without the consumptive Stevenson, the blind Miltons, the deaf Beethovens, the hunchback Alexander Popes, the clubfoot Byrons, the helpless Proserpinas. A ruby that would have deprived Divine of an education would have been cost ly to the world. Enforced age put Alexander H. Stephens it would have deprived American history of one of its noblest figures.—New York Times.

Money Wasted.

"That young millionaire says he holds you in the kindest remembrance. He says it was at a party given by you that he proposed to his wife."

"The affair has unpleasant reminiscences for me. That was a very expensive party, and I gave it in the expectation that he was going to propose to one of my girls."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

THE BEST OF SUMMER JACKETS.

By Anabel Worthington.

The short jacket came upon us with a suddenness which seems to be the fashion of the times in many departments not connected with styles. In the earliest of spring models, displayed while winter was still with us, we found the Empire models made quite short and offering hardly any protection. Then came other suggestions and among the best is the jacket which is not too short and yet short enough, as in the example shown in our picture.

This is a clever modification of the Eton idea, plain at the shoulders, but wider at the lower edge, where the additional material in front is drawn into a soft little box pleat held in place by the strap trimming, which continues from the lower edge of the front of the garment. This meets in the centre of the back, but here the material is left as wide as it is originally cut, without any attempt to confine it by pleats or other device. At the neck is a pretty collar joined to revers, which follow the line of the front edges almost to the bottom. The sleeves are plain. They may be finished in coat style, full length, or shortened and allowed to flare a trifle, with a band trimming.

These coats are shown in taffetas, serge, gabardine and, for summer dresses, in wash corduroy. No matter how light in weight the material may be, the style affords some protection when worn over a very thin waist.

The pattern of this coat, No. 7218, is cut in sizes 34 to 44 inches bust measure. Medium size requires with short sleeves 2⅞ yards of 44 inch material.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

NOVO GEORGIEVSK FALLS TO THE GERMANS

THE UNITED STATES VIEWS ON ARABIC OUTRAGE

THE FORTRESS OF NOVO GEORGIEVSK IS CAPTURED BY THE GERMANS

Fall of Stronghold is Announced---Position Was Invested Two Weeks Ago and Systematic Battering of the Forts By the Heavy German Guns Resulted in Downfall of the City---Germans Suifer Heavy Loss in Western Fighting.

BRITISH SUBMARINE RUNS AGROUND

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, Aug. 20.—News Agency despatches to-day announce the capture of Novo Georgievsk the Russian fortress, northwest of Warsaw, by the Germans.

German howitzers have been battering at the fortress of Novo Georgievsk since the fall of Warsaw, a fortnight ago. Instead of evacuating Novo Georgievsk the Russian Grand Duke decided to leave within the fortress a garrison of about 50,000 to 75,000 men to block the German advance. Standing at the junction of the Vistula and the Bug upon a high plateau that enabled its guns to sweep the surrounding plain, Novo Georgievsk was considered one of the strongest fortretses in Russia.

The Germans first invested the city when the Warsaw garrison retired, drew the ring tighter and then began systematically battering in the forts. Four of the strongest positions were captured early in the week, and with them about two thousand prisoners.

PARIS, Aug. 20. (French Official)—The Germans suffered heavy losses in unsuccessful attacks on the French positions near St. Hubert and Maria Theresa in the Argonne last night. "The Germans also suffered heavily in the recent fighting on the crests of Lenge and Schratzmatenle," said the statement. "We found many cadavers in the captured trenches. Both German and French artillery were active last night along the Oise and Aisne, and in the Champagne region. Mine and grenade fighting occurred at several points in the Argonne.

LONDON, Aug. 20.—The British steamer New York was sunk by a German submarine to-day. Her captain and crew were landed.

LONDON, Aug. 20.—Ambassador Page held a lengthy conference with Sir Edward Grey, the British Foreign Secretary, this afternoon.

LONDON, Aug. 20.—The Spanish steamer Pena Castillo was sunk today by a German submarine. Only three of the crew were rescued.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 20.—Grand Admiral Von Tirpitz, of the German Navy, was decorated with the order "Pour Le Merite," by the Kaiser as a result of "Germany's increasing submarine successes."

LONDON, Aug. 20.—The British submarine E-13 en route to the Baltic Sea grounded yesterday morning on Saltohrlm Island. The Admiralty statement this afternoon said fifteen of the crew was saved and fifteen wounded.

QUEENSTOWN, Aug. 20—The United States Consul here officially reported this afternoon that the only Americans now missing from the sunken Arabic, are Mrs. Josephine L. Bruguiere. New York, and Dr. Edmound Wood, of Janesville, Wis.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 20.—One thousand Armenian women and children were locked in wooden buildings by Kurdish tribesmenn near Yan, and the buildings then set afire. A few women broke out, but the majority perished. In one village all Armenians but 36 were massacred by the Kurds. In another a score of women after being mistreated were bound together with some children and thrown into Lake Van.

LONDON, Aug. 20.—It is reported here that the White Star liner Bovic, 6,500, a freight liner, in the Australian service, has been torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine. The report is not confirmed by the Admiralty.

LONDON, Aug. 20.—The Petrograd correspondent of the Morning Post reported to-day that the Russians are seriously considering moving the capital from Petrograd to Moscow. This is not because of fear of a German advance on Petrograd he reported, but because it is generally believed that Moscow is more ideally situated for a governmental seat.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 20.—Though not officially advised of it, the Bulgarian Legation here did not discredit the unconfirmed report current in Washington to-day that Bulgaria had already joined the Allies. It is not impossible, said First Secretary Pilteff of the Legation, that my country has done so.

THE LATE JOHN BELCHER, C. E.

Thousands will learn with deep regret of the death of one of the oldest and best-known residents of Peterborough, J. E. Belcher, C.E., who died this morning at the age of about eighty years. Though never occupying any elective public position, the catholicity of his citizenship and sympathies brought him into contact with all classes and made his name as a household word in town and county. He was an Irishman by birth, and a gentleman of the old school. He owned Cork as his birth place, but for the greater part if his life, was a resident of Peterborough, where he practised the architectural branch of his profession for so long a time and with much success and satisfaction to his large clientele. His specialty as an architect was in church structures, and if one were asked to see his monument it could be said of him as of Sir Christopher Wren, "circumspice." He was the architect for the restoration of St. John's a generation ago, and it is to the fine feeling of his art that it can be, as is often, said of St. John's, that it is, within and without, "the most church-like church in the province." Mr. Belcher was for many years the architect of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Peterborough, and restored St. Peter's Cathedral and built many new churches in several parts of the Diocese, as well as erecting several school and community buildings. As county and city engineer for many years he became well known and highly appreciated for the high and faithful character of his services. Mr. Belcher was a prominent and useful citizen, devoted to the honourable discharge of the duties of citizenship in all its relations, and his memory will long be held as that of a public-spirited and estimable Christian gentleman.

AT THE BAND CONCERT

Last night I heard the band play in the park,
Whilst little children gambolled on the green,
Their childish laughter breaking in between
And other musing in my soul did mark
The thought of other children lying stark
Beside the spot where a home had been
And then methought the music was a keen
For rosy dawning sudden changed to dark

And then again the swelling music rose
Into a proud crescendo. Praise and pride
For Britain's soldier sons of mine and
For those who battle gainst the Empire's foes.
Avenge the little innocents who died.
And save this land of ours from Belgium's fate

A REPLY MAY BE FORTHCOMING THIS AFTERNOON

The Peterboro' Deputation Expect Tangible Results From Their Trip to Ottawa and Kingston

WILL WAIT FOR REPLY

His Worship Mayor Buller has returned from Ottawa in company with other representatives of the Speakers' Patriotic League of local people. Representations were made to the authorities for permission to raise a battalion in Peterborough to be designated the "Peterborough Rangers." The Adjutant General informed the deputation that the matter was entirely in the hands of Colonel Hemming, officer commanding the third divisional area, of which Peterborough forms a part. The deputation then took the train for Kingston, first notifying Colonel Hemming of their intention to call upon him. Col. Hemming declined to commit himself to the deputation, saying he would first report to his superior officer at Ottawa. With this information Mr J. H. Burnham, M.P., and Mr. R. B. Rogers decided to return to Ottawa and remain there until the desired information was forthcoming. A reply to the representations of the deputation is expected some time this afternoon. There is every reason to believe that the reply will be favourable, and at least partly, if not wholly in accord with the wishes of the deputation.

While in Kingston a meeting of the Speakers' Patriotic League was held, and a number of officers elected, including the Duke of Connaught, who was made Honourary President.

Driver Martin Kennedy of the Canadian Army Service Corps, Niagara Camp, is home for a few days on leave.

Is With 9th Battalion.

The many friends of Pte. W. D. Packwood, former secretary of St. John's Athletic Club, will be interested in learning that he is at Dibgate Camp, Shornclife, with the 9th Battalion. Pte. Packwood left Peterborough with the 57th Regiment detachment and was in A company of the 2nd Battalion until February, when illness prevented him going to the front. He was secretary-treasurer of St. John's Aethletic Club two years. It is interesting to note that in addition to himself eight members of the club enlisted in Peterborough. They were: Lance Corp. Hayden of the 2nd Battalion, killed at St. Julien, and Pte. A. White, also of the 2nd, missing since that battle. Ptes. W. McKinlay, Walter Flowers and Art Woodhall of the 8th C.M.R. Ptes. A. Puffen and R. Irwin of the 21st Battalion. In a letter to the Examiner Pte. Packwood says he has met a number of Peterborough boys who are convalescing after being wounded at the front. Among them were Corp. Pimblott, Corp. Ellis, Pte. J. Bills, Pte. W. E. Morgan, Pte. Bruce Mills and Pte. C. Powell.

The armouries were practically deserted to-day with the exception of the officers on duty. All the infantry recruits were away on a route march to Chemong Park.

Higher Price For Olive Oil

Examiner Special:

Speculation runs high as to the future trading of Italian olive oil. The present market is completely upset and it is difficult to say whether more favourable conditions will prevail till after the war.

Importers who placed orders in the hands of Italian packers some eight months ago are now receiving word to the effect that they are unable to ship. Previous to Italy's declaration of war Italian packers had been purchasing tins from Germany, and owing to the poor labour conditions in Italy considerable time was required to supply the tins and make shipments after she entered the war.

THE SITUATION IS VERY SERIOUS

New York Press on the Arabic Disaster—Friendly Relations Cannot Continue to Be Maintained If Wrongs Continue to be Perpetrated.

GRAVE ISSUES INVOLVED

Examiner Special:

NEW YORK, Aug. 20.—The following comments to-day were typical of the attitude of the New York press toward the sinking of the Arabic:

Times: "We reason, we appeal, we protest, we remonstrate. The written answer is evasive and irrelevant. The actual answer is defient, persistent in provocation. It should be a plain event to most war-made Germans that the friendly relations between two two countries cannot continue to be maintained if these intolerable wrongs continue to be perpetrated."

World: "No verdict can be pronounced until all the evidence is at hand, but the situation is undoubtedly serious. It is so serious and the issues involved are so grave, that final judgment must be suspended until all the facts are known beyond the possibility of a doubt."

DEATH OF ONE OF CITY'S BEST KNOWN RESIDENTS

Mr. John E. Belcher for Many Years Engineer of the County of Peterboro' and a Well Known Architect is Dead

WAS HIGHLY RESPECTED

Mr John E. Belcher, C.E., died at the family residence to-day. His death removes one of the most prominent, well known, and most trusty respected residents of the city and county where his passing away will be learned with deep regret by the large number that came to know him during his more than half century residence amongst us.

Until recently Mr Belcher was in fairly good health till about three weeks ago, and it was only within the past week that his illness assumed the fatal phase.

Mr. Belcher was a native of Cork, Ireland, where he lived till young manhood, having acquired the profession of architect and civil engineer, which he practised for some time with his late father, also of that profession.

He came to Canada in early manhood and has since been a resident of Peterborough and both as a man and an architect and engineer left his moral and substantial impress upon the community. For many years he occupied the position of county engineer and also that of city engineer and in these capacities he became widely known and held in respect for both his personal and official qualities.

He was also a well known architect and was largely employed in church architecture. He designed and conducted the restoration of St. John's church thirty-three years ago and was also architect of the new vestry providing the plans and professional supervision free of charge. Mr. Belcher's services and interests were recognized by the church warden presenting to the vestry building a watch bearing his coat of arms. He was also architect of the new rectory building. Mr Belcher was for a long time the architect of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Peterborough. He designed the restoration of St. Peter's Cathedral several years ago and designed and built many churches and ecclesiastical buildings in many parts of the diocese.

In religion Mr. Belcher was a Churchman for all his life in Canada a member of the congregation of St. John's, most faithful in attendance and in promotion of its interests, devotional ly and substantially. In politics Mr. Belcher was a Conservative, though not extreme in holding or expressing his opinions. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity, Corinthian lodge.

Mr. Belcher married a daughter of the late General Macdonald of the British Army, she survives him, as do two daughters, Mrs. Gordon Belcher and Miss Belcher. A brother Mr Samuel Belcher, C.E., of Peterborough, also survives him. Another brother, the late Mr. W. J. Belcher, who died a few years ago, was a well known resident of Peterborough.

The funeral will take place from St. John's church to Little Lake cemetery on Sunday next at 3 p.m.

WEEDS GROWING ON VACANT LOTS

A Number of Complaints Received by Sanitary Inspector Spence

Sanitary Inspector Spence is in receipt of a number of complaints concerning the nuisance created by weeds growing on vacant lots and other waste places. In the majority of cases the property owners are notified and steps taken to have the weeds destroyed. In some instances property owners are difficult to locate in which case it is up to the city to take action. The Inspector also notes an improvement in back yard and lanes. Property owners are less reluctant to clean up such places than they were when the office of Sanitary Inspector was first established. A lane at the rear of the Peterborough Hardware Company is being cleaned up and a concrete pavement laid.

BRING ON THE UNIFORMS.

It is to be hoped that the deputation of the General Committee of the Speakers' Patriotic League will, while they are about their business, arrange for the supply of uniforms for recruits. The presence of a uniform for a recruit to step into the moment he is accepted would be a considerable encouragement to enlisting. A soldier does not feel a soldier unless he is properly uniformed. There is reason to believe that there is no scarcity of uniforms at Ottawa; but their place is on the soldiers' backs, not in a warehouse. An effort should be mide to remedy this condition. Especially in the matter of boots is there need for expedition. Marching is one of the first means adopted for hardening recruits; and marching is done with difficulty in civilian boots, even of the best; and it is much more difficult with the boots some of the recruits have to wear. The provision of uniforms, though a very important matter, is a small thing for the Militia Department to attend to. If the recruit does the big thing in enlisting, the Government should be prepared to meet him half way and do the little thing in providing him with a uniform in which he can feel himself a soldier.

UNCLE SAM'S PATIENCE.

We have in the submarine attack on the Arabic, further evidence of the wantonness of the German doctrine of frightfulness, destruction of life and property without military or naval advantage — destruction for mere destruction's sake. This is, or should be, a further stimulus to renewed activity in ending this monstrous state of things. Every man with red blood in his veins is called upon to help end the war.

The sinking by torpedo of the troopship Royal Edward was a fair act of naval warfare as fairness in war goes in modern times. It had a distinct military value; and as an act of war was justifiable. It was part of the game. But the sinking of passenger ships and the drowning of peaceful travellers, comes within no rules of war that humanity can recognize. The Germans had an excuse, even if it was a lying one, for the sinking of the Lusitania. It was falsely claimed that she carried munitions of war; and she was headed for a British port, where, if she had had munitions aboard she could have discharged them. But even if such a condition had existed, it was no justification for the endangering of hundreds of lives of non-combatants. In the case of the outrage upon the Arabic, another peaceful passenger ship, there was no earthly excuse. She was outward bound and, even if she were loaded to the gunwales with munitions, could not have landed them anywhere to be used against the enemy. The sinking of the Arabic was a mere act of malicious and wanton destruction, that would have shamed barbarians of any age.

Under such circumstances we should all—all the world of civilization—unite to put an end to the possibility of such outrages; and not only we of the allied cause, but every civilized nation. A despatch received this morning states that there are American passengers missing, and probably drowned. President Wilson of the United States, declared in his last note to Germany that the sinking of passenger ships without warning, especially if they carried American passengers, would demand a stern reckoning—virtually be a causus belli. What will Uncle Sam do now? He has been doubly insulted—by the murder of his citizens on the high seas, and by the direct flouting of his ultimatum. We are astonished at the self-restraint of the United States under outrages and insulting provocation. In her dealing with the German bully she has shown many of the qualities that St. Paul ascribes to charity—she "suffereth long," "seeketh not her own," "is not easily provoked," "beareth all things, endureth all things." How long will Uncle Sam continue to turn the other cheek to the buffet of the Hun? The world of civilization, will soon get tired of making distinction between patience and pusillanimity.

HOW WAR HELPS CANADA.

It is, of course, a selfish view to take, but it is a matter of gratification that war is helping Canada industrially and financially. We have the statement from Ottawa that the British Government orders for war supplies from Canada now total 230 millions of dollars. This statement is astonishing, but there is no reason to believe it incorrect. The Pall Mall Gazette, speaking of General Bertram's figures, as quoted above, says they are:

> "A remarkable demonstration of the capacity and vitality of Canada as a manufacturing centre. The more we can depend on Canada and the other dominions in this respect the better it will be. Hats off to our Lady of the Snows."

Apart from the solid value of such business, Canada has the advantage of a splendid advertisement of her resources and her industrial capacity. This will stand us in good stead when the time of readjustment and beginning anew comes at the close of the war. Then everything will be in a state of confusion and disorganization, in industrial and commercial matters. Canada with her good name, her immense areas of resources, agricultural, mineral and otherwise, will attract the attention of the capitalist, the man of enterprise, and the homeseeker.

In addition to the impulse given our manufacturing industries, there will be an unusual and immediate demand upon our agricultural products. An estimate has been made that owing to increased acreage and yield per acre, the agricultural exports of Canada this year, will amount to 500 million dollars, as compared with 225 millions last year; and it is expected that arrangements will be completed while Premier Borden is in England, by which the products of Canada can be promptly shipped at reasonable freight charges. Altogether Canada has been brought, or rather has brought herself into high favour with the Mother Land. Another recognition of our services, and of our educational standing has been the recognition of Ontario medical degrees in the Old Country, by which all Ontario physicians who are duly qualified, are entitled to register and practice anywhere in the United Kingdom.

While these things are good for Canada, we can without undue lack of modesty, claim that in one sense Canada deserves some return for what she has done in promoting the war; though in that we have done no more than our duty. What fighting we have done, and done well, has been more or less indirectly done for ourselves — in self-defence — for our interests and national and industrial well-being are as much threatened as those of Britain or France, or of the other Allies. We have done no more than we should have done, nor as much as we should do and can do. The danger still persists and the call for further help from Canada still rings loud and clear. There are many of us in Peterborough that don't realize the situation, the urgency of the need for men, and still more men. We have the enemy still going strongly; we have the enemy improving upon his diabolical system of destruction of human life and property. The submarine atrocities — sinking peaceful passenger ships—are still being waged; we have the aerial baby-killers still active; and their increased activity should stimulate us to greater activity at home. In England the last Zeppelin raid stimulated recruiting, and there was a genuine rush to enroll. If every Canadian in Peterborough would semilarly recognize our danger and his duty, and do it, there would be greater activity in recruiting.

Young men think it over and act it out.

A UNIQUE CEREMONY.

Hon. T. H. Johnson, Minister of Public Works, set a precedent today when, exactly at noon, he began opening tenders for two separate contracts on a tunnel between the new court house and the power house.

This was done in the presence of a roomful of witnesses, some of whom were tenderers, but the majority of whom were merely interested spectators who had accepted the invitation to the public to be present.

It was all over in 20 minutes. Cotter Bros., Limited, were declared the successful tenderer for "piping" at $8,970 and J. H. Tremblay & Co., Ltd., for "concrete-laying" at $6,356.14. — Winnipeg Tribune, August 12.

A few weeks ago The World called attention to the fact that the Manitoba capitol scandal found its inception in the way in which the tenders were juggled. Peter Lyall & Son put in one tender and a day later Thomas Kelly & Sons put in another. The Kelly bid was just a trifle lower than the Lyall bid, and the charge was made that the contents of the Lyall tender had been tipped off to the Kelly firm. We thereupon called attention to the vicious practice in Canada of opening tenders in secret.

In the departments at Washington sealed tenders are called for, with the announcement that they will be opened, at a time and place named, in the presence of all the tenderers. A similar practice, we are told, exists in the United Kingdom. Why has a different practice been so generally followed in Canada?

The World article was reprinted and favourably commented upon by The Winnipeg Tribune, which joined in the suggestion that the Norris Government might make a name for itself by opening all tenders in public. The excerpt from The Tribune quoted above indicates that good advice is not wasted upon the Norris Government.

The opening of some tenders in public by Hon. Mr. Johnson in Winnipeg is hailed as a unique ceremony. We would be sorry to believe that the Dominion Government and the other provincial governments are lagging behind Manitoba. The presence that it would be unfair to the unsuccessful tenderers to have their tenders made public is not one to command respect. Those who aspire to do public business must be prepared to face publicity.—Toronto World.

"ONLY INCREASES GERMANY'S DIFFICULTIES.

If the Russian army has been extricated in safety from its perilous position between the jaws of the German pincers, the campaign has been indeterminate and leaves the dual alliance with an eastern battle front a thousand miles in length against which the Russian pressure will be unrelaxing. To make this line as invulnerable as the three-hundred-mile battle front in France and Flanders would seem to call for all the Teutonic forces in the eastern theatre of war. Had a Russian army been crushed, the German pressure on the western line might have been instantly and enormously increased. But the present indications are that Germany has gained territory, glory and a longer line to defend, but no advantage which increases the chances of final triumph. Rochester Post-Express

CANADA'S WAR DEBT,

Canada has not dealt in billions of dollars and millions of men, but Canada has nevertheless made commensurate war sacrifices in money, suffering and blood. The temper of the Canadian soldier has already been proven and approved in the theatre of war, but the same bravery of the home people in facing a rapidly rising public debt has had a much less spectacular setting. France, England and even Belgium are fighting and making sacrifices but no greater sacrifices in proportion in the midst of a struggle that actually threatens their existence, but Canada is giving lavishly of her best blood and money without any thought that physically at least she is in danger from the Teuton. Both life and money are more precious, too, to a country just entering upon a period of national development. Canada is giving humanity one of the real returns of a frightful war. It is the triumph of the purest patriotism and unselfish devotion to the mother country.—Chicago Tribune.

FUNCTIONS OF THE RED CROSS AND THE NEED FOR ASSISTANCE

In the generous economy of nature every poisonous or destructive thing has somewhere its remedy. The anodyne and antidote of war is the Red Cross.

If you feel a pang at heart at the misery and suffering of the human race today, if you, as a human being, feel culpable of complicity in the great holocaust of destruction, you can ease your smart of conscience by assisting the work of the Red Cross.

The cardinal Red Cross idea is universal charity and sympathy which are the basic principles of civilization. In spite of wars mankind will continue to exist as a great human brotherhood, by virtue of the binding of the Red Cross idea. A world without the Red Cross would be unthinkable. The Red Cross is indeed a balsam and bandage which binds together all human society.

The aim of the Red Cross is to assist all misery regardless of creed, colour, or race. If you believe in universal charity you are at least a passive member of the Red Cross Society. In fact all men are, by conviction, members of the Red Cross.

The great need of to-day is that all these passive members should become active, that the Red Cross idea latent in every man's heart should germinate and blossom in good works.

You believe in the Red Cross. Have you as yet done anything to assist it? If not you should not delay any longer to make your contribution.

Have you ever thought that a dollar given to the Red Cross is a mighty good investment?

Even if yu cared not a fig for human suffering, you would still find that you derived a direct pecuniary profit from investments in Red Cross security.

Sentiment aside, the Red Cross is a great National Assurance Co., in which every hard-headed citizen ought, out of regard for his profit, take a direct interest.

We are all familiar enough to-day with the idea that human lives are valuable. A good workman, with twenty years' prospect of life, is an asset that can be valued at $30,000. Hundreds of thousands of such valuable Canadian assets are being risked in Europe. Every one of them who is saved through Red Cross work represents just that much saved for Canada.

Yu should give to the Red Cross not only because you are sympathetic, not only because you are patriotic, but because the Red Cross is the best possible mode of insurance for Canadian lives, and because you can see that the Red Cross nurse is one of the most valuable assets to your business.

The Red Cross is one of the most profitable of Canadian industries, and you can never purchase too many shares in it.

The Scope of the Red Cross.

The scope of the Red Cross is practically unlimited. The idea of universal charity which actuates this Samaritan Society, is capable of indefinite extension. The war has been like an immense micro-scope which has revealed Red Cross opportunities in increasing magnitudes.

The primary intention of the founder of the Red Cross was to give the wounded help, and that is its immediate attention.

The Red Cross now aims not only to succour the wounded in the actual firing zone, but also to nurse them back to complete health in base and convalescent hospitals. It has further extended its scope to include prisoners of war, and it is now beginning to see that all misery occasioned by the war, even in its most ultimate effects, is a proper object of Red Cross activity.

The War Executive of the British Red Cross has lately decided that the care of those totally incapacitated by the war is work that probably devolves on the Red Cross, provided that the funds permit. It is thus evident that though armies may disband, the Red Cross never can disband. It has become one of the most fundamental institutions of modern civilization. Its success and prosperity are the supreme test of our humanitarianism. The state of the Red Cross treasury is a decisive index of our capacity in univer-al sympathy.

The immense task which confronts the Red Cross should stimulate the public to endow this worthy society in a permanent way. The movement on foot in a great many Canadian towns to provide the Red Cross with a certain and annual income is a policy which should be encouraged and developed. A flourishing Red Cross is as much a criterion of true national greatness as a triumphant army.

Details.

The chief reason why letters addressed to soldiers go astray is that the public in many instances do not address their letters properly. Soldiers are divided into two classes: those who are on active service with their military unit, and those who are sick, wounded, or prisoners, and therefore outside of active organization.

In each of the two cases there is a different mode of address.

Complete instructions have been issued by the Information Department of the Canadian Red Cross in London, England, as to the procedure in each instance.

In addressing men serving actively with the Canadian Expeditionary Force, write first the military number of the person addressed, then the number of his battalion and the number of the Division to which his Battalion is attached.

The following is a sample official address, correct in every detail.

Private J. D. Smith,
1st Canadian Battalion,
1st Canadian Division.

If the soldier is known definitely, and to a certainty, to be in France, or Flanders, add the words "British Expeditionary Force." If he is known to be at the Dardanelles, add the words, "Mediterranean Expeditionary Force."

In addressing sick, wounded or prisoner Canadians, in addition to the military rank, number and name of the individual and the number of the Battalion, as above, and instead of the number of the Division, the words care of Information Department, Canadian Red Cross, 14 Cockspur Street, London S. W. England. The address "P. O. Dept., Canadian Record Office, Millbank, London S. W. England."

Notice that letters are only sent care of the Red Cross when the soldier is sick, wounded, or prisoner.

"Nothing Succeeds Like Circulation"

It is the circulation of The Examiner that gets it so many "Want" and "For Sale" advertisements a circulation that gives the advertiser every confidence of producing quick results.

When you write a "Want", tell all the important facts. If you are advertising for help, tell just what is to be expected of the applicants. As a matter of fairness, those who seek employment should know all the principal facts regarding a position.

"For Sale" advertising in The Examiner will show the facility with which you can turn "used things" that are no longer needed, into money quickly.

NAVAL POLICE POPULAR

They Check Jack Tar in Many Little Ways

A battleship's police maintain discipline in general, constantly patrolling the ship to see that everything is in order. Having investigated an irregularity, they bring the culprit before the commander for judgment, and keep a record of all punishments, as well as checking the wines and spirits coming into the ship. They take charge of all prisoners in cells or awaiting punishment, and of all men's effects who are in hospital, sick, on long leave, or in prison; they attend the "issue" of all spirits, clothing, money, and 'baccy, and see that no unwholesome food comes into the ship.

Letters and parcels are delivered and dispatched by them, and they look after the midshipmen's hammocks, seeing them up and down at the proper time. Besides all these duties, they have the supervision of the men's messes, and are responsible that the proper hands go away in the boats and attend their "guns' crews," etc. The police have a difficult role to fill, being always connected with punishments, which is naturally disliked; still, their unpleasant duties are ably done, and many of them are most popular in spite of everything.

Foresight Saves Poverty

One of the passengers aboard the Lusitania was a commercial traveler for a big English firm. When he was instructed to visit America, he considered, in view of the presence of submarines on the trade routes, that the firm ought to insure his life against danger at sea for the sum of $25,000. The firm at once agreed, and the insurance was effected for $125. The widow of the traveller will now receive the $25,000.

THREE BRITISHERS KILLED SIX GERMANS

Canadien, Irishman and Scot Fought to a Finish With Twice Number of Huns

The following incidents were related by Private J. E. MacRae, of the 75th Seaforth Highlanders, to Corporal E. S. Mitchell, Royal Montreal Regiment, who were both wounded and taken to Gardenhurst Hospital, Bexley, England.

"This incident shows how three Britishers were more than a match for six Germans, and how a Canadian accounted for four of them, though badly wounded before he accounted for the last two. On this occasion three men, all suffering more or less from gas poisoning, a 78th Seaforth Highlander, MacRae, a 16th Battalion Canadian Scottish, and a Dublin Fusilier, got away from their respective regiments, and about dusk were trying to find their regiments. Without any warning they stumbled into a small party of six Germans entrenched. They were probably a party of scouts or a listening patrol.

A Terrific Struggle

"The Germans were as much surprised as our chaps, but opened fire at once, a bullet hitting MacRae's rifle on the butt, breaking it, and causing it to fall out of his hands. He (MacRae) stooped down and saw a Canadian bayonet on the ground, which he picked up. The German thrust his rifle into MacRae's chest and was about to pull the trigger, but he seized the barrel by his left hand and pushed it away from him, the bullet entering his forearm and inflicting a bad wound. MacRae, pluckily using the bayonet as a dagger, stabbed the German in the head, killing him instantly. The Dublin Fusilier shot a man, but was killed, a bullet entering his brain. The Canadian, grabbing his rifle by the barrel and using it as a club, gave a mighty swing and hit one of the Germans on the head, smashing his head in like an eggshell. Continuing the swing, he treated another likewise. He was then badly wounded in the shoulder, but looking around he saw one of the remaining Germans on the point of shooting MacRae, who was crouching down. The Canadian, firing from the hip, blew the German's head off.

Bayoneted the Last German

"The remaining German then put up his hands saying 'Me good comrade, no shoot,' but the Canadian, saying 'You——, I'll comrade you,' plunged forward with his rifle with so much force that the bayonet stuck several inches out of the German's back. By this time the two Jocks were weak from loss of blood, but bandaging each other up as best they could, they stumbled and staggered to the dressing station near St. Jean. The doctor in charge here told them they had better get on farther as the station was being shelled. They had only gone a few hundred yards when a shell burst inside the station, blowing the doctor and wounded to bits. They finally managed to get to Ypres, but as all the dressing stations had so many bad cases to attend to, they had to go without being dressed. They got into an ambulance starting for Poperinghe. As they were going through Ypres an ambulance just in front of them, full of wounded, was hit by a shell and blown to bits. They finally arrived at Poperinghe, and getting into a Red Cross train had their wounds dressed, and started for Boulogne.

DERIVATION OF WAR TERMS

British Have Only One Item to Their Credit

With the exception of the shrapnel, named after its inventor, an English colonel, there are very few war terms which have a British origin. Sword, musket, grenadier, dragoon are all alien terms. "Grenadier" is of German birth, and orginally war "granatier," the force owing their name to the hand-grenades with which they were armed.

The word "musket" has an Italian derivation—"moschetto," which was really a species of small sparrow-hawk. In ancient times and in the middle ages the name musket was used to designate a small mortar which threw arrows.

When gunpowder was invented a small cannon was baptized "musket," and later the rige of the ordinary infantryman earned the name, while the whole unit was called "musketeers."

Both "dragoon" and "cuirassier" come from the French. The dragoons had a dragoon painted on their shields, and the cuirassiers carried a breast protector made of copper—in French "cuivre."

The first body of troops to occupy Aldershot consisted of four officers and a hundred men.

Sir Edward Grey is the only commoner who is a Knight of the Garter.

In Western Manitoba wheat is a heavy crop, but very green, and will require very bright fine weather to make wheat-cutting general by the last week of August.

STRANGELY WON V.C.'S

Air and Submarine Exploits Would Astonish Queen Victoria

Twice during the great war has the Victoria Cross been won in a way that could by no possibility have been foreseen when the decoration was first instituted. For Queen Victoria, of course, never even dreamed of the possibility of an aerial duel between the two types of aircraft such as gained for the late Flight Sub-Lieutenant Warneford the coveted bit of bronze. Neither could she, now any of her advisers probably, have imagined the episode in the Dardanelles, when Lieutenant Holbrook dived his submarine under five rows of Turkish mines in order to torpedo the battleship Messudiyeh, thereby winning the first naval V.C. of the war.

Even in the days gone by, however, many Crosses have been won in quite curious and exceptional circumstances. Admiral "Tug" Wilson, for example, got his for bowling over half-a-dozen Arabs with his fists at El Teb, after his sword had been broken off short at the hilt, a feat which also earned for him his popular nickname, the original "Tug" Wilson having been an English boxer who, about that time, gained a certain brief notoriety by standing up to John L. Sullivan, the heavyweight champion of the world.

Nor was Wilson the only British officer who earned the V.C. through skill in fisticuffs. At Jeerum, in India, during the Mutiny, the late General James Blair knocked down several armed mutineers in almost precisely similar circumstances, his sword having been broken off early in the scrimmage; while at Inkermann Captain Hugh Rowlands saved his commanding officer, Colonel Hay, by bowling over with a straight left-hander a gigantic Russian who was running up to bayonet him as he lay wounded on the ground. Both these officers received the V.C. in due course.

ACTORS AS SHIRKERS

Englishmen Who Went to American Stage Are Very Unpopular

In these days when every Englishman is needed at least in the service of his country in whatever capacity he is best fitted for, considerable bitterness is being expressed in the newspapers and by the public over Englishmen in America who do not return home to perform their duty. The English actors now in the United States are singled out for criticism by a number of the daily papers and also by the theatrical papers, particularly by the Era.

The number of English actors of military age in the United States is placed at several hundred, and they are openly charged by a portion of the press with deliberate disloyalty, and called "shirkers of duty and responsibility."

It is predicted that after the war such actors will be shunned by other actors who have done their duty, and refused engagements by managers, or hissed from the stage if they do succeed in appearing before the public. Several theatres print in their advertisements, and on their programs, the following line: "No actor in this theatre is eligible for service with his Majesty's forces."

The war has produced an English poetess, who is attracting attention, in Gertrude Emily Crosby, who is a maid servant in the employ of a wealthy Bayswater woman.

Cocoanut Oil Makes A Splendid Shampoo

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, the less soap you use the better.

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle and is very harmful. Just plain mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and entirely greaseless), is much better than soap or anything else you can use to clean your hair, as they can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten your hair with water and rub in. One or two teaspoonfuls will create an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excess oil. The hair is soft, fluffy and lustrous, and takes a beautiful gloss. It dries quickly, too, and evenly, so that it can be easily managed.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at most any drug store. It's very cheap and a few ounces is enough for several months' use. Try it!

Won V.C. With White Flag

A V. C. has been gained by raising the white flag. But it was raised by a Medical Staff Corps man as a sign that he had wounded under his care. The hero of the exploit was Corporal Farmer, who at Majuba Hill waved a white handkerchief as a signal to the Boers to cease firing, and when hand and "flag" were shot away raised the latter aloft again with his other sound hand, until that, too, was shattered by a bullet.

THE LATE SIR SANDFORD FLEMING

"THE life that counts must toil and fight."

When I was a little girl I recollect setting out one summer morning for the Schoolhouse on the hill, and suddenly coming across a long line of stakes driven into the ground; a tiny flag was floating from each little "masthead," seemingly having sprung during the night. I remember how excited I was, for at some distance away a large white tent was set up and several young men (piratical looking fellows in slouch hats, their trousers tucked into high boots, all carrying themselves with an air of mystery, whilst one - seemingly the leading "Pirate" took pictures," as I informed the class later.

Before the sun was at its zenith that day I learned that the tiny flags outlined the future route of the Intercolonial Railway, that the man "taking pictures" was using a Theodolite, and that sleepy old Dalhousie had suddenly awakened to some commercial importance, all the old Rip-Van-Winkles coming to their doors and rubbing their purblind eyes in amazement. At noon that day I heard my father say "Sandford Fleming is here! He's going to bring in the Railway, an shure I believe it'll be a great thing for the Town"!

That was my first view of one of Canada's great men. My recollection of the young engineer shows him standing against the green hillside, his keen eye "sighting" the curve below the Ice Hill. Down below the river ran, bearing upon its breast a far reaching boom of ice fresh from the silent forests, their deeps as yet virginal and free. Beyond lay the old French Citadel upon the pebbly beach the "Old Woman," that time worn Rock of Ages, threw its dark shadows against the darker rocks behind, an Eloquent motionless stillness, sense of life held all things in thrall. The coming of "Young Fleming" was to change all this. His was the touch to change this primeval drowsiness and languor into pulsing motion. Soon the great work was in full blast; the town, from a quiet little bird's nest of interwoven grass and leaf, became an eaglet eerie on the heights. Business became active, the salmon wiers flashed in the sunlight, the hum of Moffatt's Mill became a shriek, competition set men's minds in motion, tourists flocked in, and dreamy old Dalhousie took its place in the world of commerce, all this through the concern of one man, Sandford Fleming, the young Engineer!

It had been my good luck to be one of a small band of argonauts who had trekked it overland, homesteading in far away Assiniboia. One of those who had waited, watching hope against hope, for we had no communication with the world without. I well remember the first announcement. It was made by the Toronto Globe, and stated that "Sandford Fleming had been appointed by the Government to ascertain the possibility of finding a passage through the Rocky Mountains." If the words awakened dying hopes the name thrilled all. If any man living could decide this momentous question that man was Sandford Fleming. A new sun shone in the western heavens from that hour. As is well known, Mr. Fleming set out afoot, pack on his back, and he walked the entire distance from Winnipeg, the gateway, to Vancouver the Wall of the West. This was in 1870, up to which time the rock bound fastness of the impregnable hills stood garrisoned by the Furies who had defied all human power. But the Furies hadn't reckoned with Sandford Fleming. The granite heart of Nature closed for a thousand years gave admittance to the Man Who Never Turned Back. He was to conquer the unconquerable for box ton, gully, mountain height and wide abyss yielded to his call. That rumors true of the man gave to Canada that wonderland of the hills. More it brought about the welding of Empire, it linked East with West, disproving the saying that never the twain shall meet, for strong and firm today are the bonds, racial and commercial of the trail. More still, this single achievement saved British Columbia to the Confederation of the Provinces. It opened up a hitherto unexplored tract of country, giving to congested Eastern hemisphere a playground for unborn generations, as it gave to England one of the most brilliant pages of her history. Followed the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, an epoch in Canadian history. An Engineer made the Road and the Road in turn made the Engineer famous. Many years afterwards I heard again the name of Stanford Fleming. It was on board Vancouver Island, where I was a passenger on the little steamer, "Tees," touched at an isolated spot marked Barclay Station on the map. This lone spot with its two solitary buildings is the great Pacific cable Station from whence the southern seas receive the world's news. On the Pacific Ocean. I went down to the shore of that small enclosed place and saw where the ocean-penetrated cables entered the waters of the great mysterious ocean and as I thought in wondering at the ingenuity of the thing, my companion, a station officer said: "Here you get the great idea of a great man"!

Sir Sandford Fleming has won for himself a Royal Land of Letters. Colleges have crowned him, Learned Geographical Societies have lauded him, to her Councils and Channelled in business matters, but he still found time to write scientific and historical papers, write a message of Christian manliness in his work on Family Prayer. But to Canada's greatest work, his great achievement was swinging the steel links across that impassable barrier of the storm; towards the Rocky Mountains. To him, and to him alone is due the opening up of that Wonder-Way of the West, his best work was, perhaps, the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

THE GERMAN ATROCITIES AS OFFICIALLY REPORTED BY BRYCE COMMISSION

Killing of the Wounded and of Prisoners.

The cases to which references are given present features generally similar, and in several of them men who had been left wounded in the trenches when a trench was carried by the enemy were found, when their comrades subsequently retook the trench, to have been slaughtered, although evidently helpless, or else they would have escaped with the rest of the retreating force. For instance, a witness say: "About September the 20th, "our regiment took part in an engage"ment with the Germans. After we "had retired into our trenches a few "minutes after we got back into them "the Germans retired into their "trenches. The distance between the "trenches of the opposing forces was "about 400 yards. I should say about "50 or 60 of our men had been left "lying on the field from our trenches. "After we got back to them I distinctly "saw German soldiers come out of "their trenches, go over the spots "where our men were lying, and bay"onet them. Some of our men were "lying nearly half way between the "trenches."

Another say: "The Germans advanced over the trenches of the "headquarters trench where I had "been on guard for three days. When "the Germans reached our wounded "I saw their officer using his sword "to cut them down." Another witness says: "Outside Ypres we were in the "trenches and were attacked, and had "to retire until reinforced by other "companies of the Royal Fusiliers. "Then we took the trenches and found "the wounded, between 20 and 30, ly"ing in the trenches with bayonet "wounds, and some shot. Most of "them, say three-quarters, had their "throats cut."

"In one case, given very circumstantially, a witness tells how a party of wounded British soldiers were left in a chalk pit, all very badly hurt, and quite unable to make resistance. One of them, an officer, held up his handkerchief as a white flag and thus attracted the attention of a party of about eight Germans. The Germans came to the edge of the pit. It was getting dusk, but the light was still good, and everything clearly discernible. One of them, who appeared to be carrying no arms, and who, at any rate, had no rifle, came a few feet down the slope into the chalk pit, within eight or ten yards of some of the wounded men. He looked at the men, laughed, and said something in German to the Germans who were waiting on the edge of the pit. Immediately one of them fired at the officer then three or four of these ten soldiers were shot, then another officer, and the witness, and the rest of them. "After an interval of some time I sat up and found that I was "the only man of the ten who were "living when the Germans came into "the pit remaining alive, and that all "the rest were dead."

Another witness describes a painful case in which five soldiers, two Belgians and three French, were tied to trees by German soldiers apparently drunk, who stuck knives in their faces, pricked them with their bayonets, and ultimately shot them. We have no evidence to show whether and in what cases orders proceeded from the officer in command to give no quarter, but there are some instances in which persons certainly desiring to surrender were nevertheless killed.

(b) Firing on Hospitals or on the Red Cross Ambulances or Stretcher Bearers.

This subject may conveniently be divided into three absolutely separate heads, firing on

(1) Hospital buildings and other Red Cross establishments.

(2) Ambulances.

(3) Stretcher bearers.

Under the first and second categories there is obvious difficulty in proving intention, especially under the conditions of modern long range artillery fire. A commanding officer's duty is to give strict orders to respect hospitals, ambulances, etc., and also to place Red Cross units as far away as possible from any legitimate line of fire. But with all care some accidents must happen, and many reported cases will be ambiguous. At the same time when military observers have formed a distinct opinion that buildings and persons under the recognizable protection of the Red Cross were wilfully fired upon such opinions cannot be disregarded.

Between 30 and 40 of the depositions submitted related to this offence. This number does not itself seem so great as to be inconsistent with the possibility of accident. In one case a Red Cross depot was shelled on most days throughout the week. This is hardly reconcilable with the enemy's gunners having take care to avoid it. There are other cases of conspicuous hospitals being shelled in the witness's opinion, purposely.

In one of these the witness, a sergeant-major, makes a suggestion which appears plausible, namely, that the German gunners use any conspicuous building as a mark to verify their ranges rather than for the purpose of destruction. It would be quite according to the modern system of what German writers call "Kriegsraison" to hold that the convenience of registration is a sufficient military necessity to justify disregarding any immunity conferred on a building by the Red Cross or otherwise. In any case, artillery fire on a hospital at such a moderate range as about 1,000 yards can hardly be thought accidental.

(2) As to firing on ambulances, the evidence is not explicit.

In one case the witness is quite clear that the ambulances were aimed at.

In another case a firing at an ambulance from the range was quite short.

In another a Belgian Red Cross party is stated to have been ambushed.

On the whole we do not feel prepared to [illegible] a general or systematic [illegible]

FINED $100 FOR SPEAKING TO A GERMAN OFFICER

Examiner Special.

LONDON Aug 19 (by mail) Telegraphing from Rotterdam James Dunn says:

Some two months ago the Germans decided to make Ghent an important military centre and in consequence Ghent is at the moment the most interesting town in Flanders. In addition to its immense service as a railway junction it is largely used as a depot for stores and ammunition, recruits are drilled in its squares, while a Zeppelin shed and aeroplane sheds have been established north and south of the town.

Since the enemy made Ghent the Aldershot of Flanders little reliable information has been permitted to cross the frontier. Roads and canals are strictly guarded, for along the waterways pass the submarines built in Antwerp for Zeebrugge and over the roads come fresh troops to relieve the jaded soldiers in the Yser trenches. Yesterday, however, I met a neutral who had just left Ghent after twelve years residence in the city, and from him I obtained an account of life in Ghent under the German occupation. Plainly told, history is one of Prussian arrogance and official tyranny. German soldiers treat the Belgian civilians with contempt, harsh fines are inflicted on the slightest pretext, and an army of spies make life unbearable.

"During the last few weeks," said my informant, "war talk has been forbidden in Ghent. The place is full of soldiers, who always arrive at night, and the noise of shunting trains and marching of men make sleep difficult. All kinds and conditions of soldiers are drilling or resting in the city. The majority are raw youths, troops who are being knocked into shape, but there are many physically unable to stand the strain of soldiering. Every Friday troops come from the trenches for a three days' rest, while officers usually arrive on Saturday and remain till Sunday night. Three days in the week a German band plays in the large square, but few Belgians attend the concerts. Everything has at least doubled in price, but wealthy people may still obtain luxuries. The Germans themselves pay in bonds.

"I used to think the Germans were a decent people, but my experience of them in Ghent has changed my opinion. They are worse than I could have imagined. Anyone who is not a German is treated like a dog. I could give you hundreds of instances of brutality and tyranny. Loudly shouting "Circulate! Circulate!" German people shove and hustle peaceful pedestrians. The other day one of these policemen shoved a Belgian lawyer, an elderly man nearing sixty. The lawyer turned and looked at him more in surprise than reproach. Just then a German officer came along and asked what was the trouble. "This man won't move quickly enough," said the policeman. "Then why don't you arrest him?" replied the officer.

"The lawyer was roughly seized by the collar, marched off, and fined $40 or a fortnight's imprisonment for looking at a German policeman.

"Another case was that of a well-known Belgian citizen, more than seventy years old. He was riding in a tramway car which carried the full complement of thirteen passengers. A German officer boarded the car, and the old gentleman mildly pointed out that no seats were unoccupied.

"Oh, are they?" exclaimed the officer. "Then you come out and let the civilian come out as well."

"The old man was fined $100 ... for speaking to a German officer."

IMPRESSIVE CEREMONY AT MOUNT ST. JOSEPH

The most haunted and impressive ceremony in connection with the annual reception of novices into the Order of Mount St. Joseph took place on Wednesday morning, when ten novices took their first and final perpetual vows. The event was the occasion of the gathering of a large number of clergy and prominent citizens. High mass was sung by His Lordship Bishop O'Brien, who afterwards addressed the Sisters, emphasizing the dignity of the religious life and encouraging the new Sisters to persevere in God's work. The Sisters who took their first vows were Sister M. Ursula, Sister M. Lucina, Sister M. Rachel, Sister M. Teresa, Sister M. Isabel, Sister M. [illegible], Sister M. Theodosia, Sister M. Hilda and Sister M. Rosalie.

Mr. J. H. Larmonth Has Resigned

Was Formerly Connected With the Peterborough Radial Railway System

J. H. Larmonth has resigned as superintendent of the Edmonton street railway systems. He has held the position since April 1st, 1914, prior to which he was engaged in private practice as a consulting engineer in Toronto, and was formerly in charge of the construction and management of the Peterborough street railway. He was also General Manager of the Electric Power Company for some time. On the occasion of his leaving the Edmonton position Mr. Larmonth was the recipient of an address eulogizing his able and conscientious administration of the street railway affairs during his tenure of office.

Local Red Cross Organizes For The Winter Work

A special meeting of the Peterborough Branch of the Red Cross Society was held yesterday afternoon to discuss the winter's work. A committee reported that the Assembly Room at the Public Library had been secured by the Society for the use of any who were willing and able to make hospital supplies.

As the society has outgrown the rooms at Simcoe Street, which were so kindly loaned by The Toronto Savings and Loan Company it was decided to move to the Library on September 1st.

A resolution, thanking the Board for the use of the assembly hall at the Public Library, was passed.

An outline of the work to be done there was read, discussed and adopted.

It was decided to send the following letter to these organizations in this section of the city who are working at hospital supplies for the Red Cross Society:

Dear Madam:—Realizing

I. The great difficulty in securing suitable quarters in which to make hospital supplies.

II. The unnecessary expense in carrying them back and forth from one place to another.

III. And the most important of all, the fact that the supplies do suffer from extra handling.

The Red Cross Society has decided to open a room where this work can be done, and invites you to make use of their room for this purpose.

The room is to be open not only to members of the Red Cross Society, but also to all who are interested in Red Cross work. All supplies for this room will be furnished by the Red Cross Society, and owned in common by all who have provided the means to purchase them, but it is hoped that all will contribute to the common fund.

By this, the Red Cross Society does not mean to discourage individual effort on the part of societies far from that they would urge them to continue their work in other departments. That is, the making of sheets, pyjamas, bedding, comforts, etc., but they would urge all societies to concentrate their efforts in this one feature, the making of hospital supplies, in order to make the General work room a success.

The centralizing of this work would simplify the task of packing and would enable the Society to forward to Headquarters weekly, a regular amount of this work, which is so greatly needed. Believe me,

Yours sincerely,

Laura J. Davidson,

Secretary Peterborough Branch of the Red Cross Society.

An early response to this letter is hoped for by the Society.

A committee was appointed to advertise the Jam Shower for which the Society is arranging next month with Mr. P. Campbell as convener. The members are looking forward to a lecture by Dr. Rorison, Surgeon-in-Chief of the Red Cross, who will be here early in September, and it is hoped the public generally will make a point of hearing this well-known Red Cross worker.

2,000 Acres Hailed Out

Special to The Examiner.

MOOSE JAW, Aug. 20.—Reports received by telephone at the office of General Superintendent Taylor, Canadian Pacific Railways, are to the effect that 2,000 acres of the crop in Pelican district, near the Assiniboia, were hailed out yesterday in a terrific storm which passed around this city from northeast to southeast.

Reports are also to hand that the storm, which was accompanied by terrific wind, did great damage east of Toxford.

A 380 POUND CHEF WHO WANTED TO DON KHAKI

Recruiting Sergeant Harry Watson nearly secured a recruit last night and the Lovett and Meyerhob shows almost lost the biggest and best cook between New Orleans and the North Pole, but wait or rather weight. Some one whispered to the genial sergeant that Frank George, who runs and operates the big dining tent at the carnival, wanted to enlist and accordingly he made a special trip to the Exhibition grounds to secure his man. When he located George he took one look and gasped. George is some cook—quite some cook—to be exact 380 pounds of cook.

"There is no question about the chest measurement anyway," said the startled sergeant. "Can you walk or will I have to get a motor truck?"

The big chef remarked that he could walk, but he wasn't going to just then. However, the doctor may get a chance to look over him today. Meanwhile the news got around the grounds that the culinary pride of the carnival was off to the front and there was a rush to say good-bye. "Cyc" Williams and other concessionaires were very much affected by the news, and tearful good-byes were exchanged.

Naturally the carnival is not anxious to lose George. His dining establishment is as complete as a hotel and as for his cooking ability, nothing too good can be said. And on top of it all the big fellow has a heart as big as his fighting weight. Show men still talk of the days at Savannah, Georgia, last year when concessionaires were to be left and right and were fed scumptiously free of charge by big hearted Frank George, who took care of the starving show people to such good purpose that he went broke himself, arriving home with $12 to show for his season's work.

George's dining tent is just inside the carnival grounds and is largely patronized by show people and the public alike.

WHEN WILL THE GERMAN FLEET COME OUT

One year has passed since Germany's battleships abandoned the sea and withdrew into the seclusion of their country's inner harbours. Uncontirmed reports state that British submarines have sought them even to the entrance of the Kiel Canal only to find that the ships of the High Sea fleet had found refuge inside the canal itself, the entrances of which were effectively blocked.

In the meantime the Allies have reaped every advantage that an overwhelming victory could have yielded. While German colonies have disappeared and German commerce has been swept from the ocean, the Allies continue to transport their troops and supplies and carry on their overseas commerce almost as in peace. The guerilla warfare as practised by German submarines has as yet yielded no military results of value.

The complete failure of their naval aspirations can be nothing less than a crushing disappointment to the German people, and particularly to the one million members of the German Navy League. The Navy law of 1907 had announced the policy that Germany's sea power would be [illegible] that the greatest navy would not dare meet it without imperilling its own supremacy. Pan German lecturers had extolled the superiority of the Krupp guns which would make their fleet superior to the British fleet when "the Day" arrived to engage in battle.

Will the two mysterious dreadnoughts lie in the Kiel canal throughout this greatest of wars without firing a gun?

It seems incredible. But it is clear that German naval policy has for the first year accepted the principle that a fleet in being is more valuable than a fleet at the bottom of the sea, while Germany besieged, clings to her submarine campaign with desperation in a futile struggle to escape strangulation.

The safety of the Empire rests as ever with the navy. Somewhere in the North Sea the Grand Fleet of Admiral Jellicoe keeps its ceaseless watch, content with the knowledge that each day is a new disaster for the beleaguered enemy and another victory for the Allies. The submarines are helpless to restore the German flag to the seas. The British dreadnoughts remain the final arbiter of the war. In this fact lies the greatest lesson of the war. If this lesson is heeded the resources of the United States will make for safety.—New York Herald.

[illegible] is the leading state in the production of beet-root earth, having to [illegible] 1914 more than 75 per cent of [illegible] and value.

The Supply Is Not Adequate

First Quality Eggs Are Much in Demand

The following comment on the market situation as regards food stuffs will appear in Canadian Grocer this week

Office of Publication,
Toronto, Aug 17th, 1915.

While there is a temporary easiness in the new-laid egg market this week, the general trend is firmward. We quote new-laids to the trade at 25c Wholesalers are oxering 16 1-2c to 17c at country points. The true reason for this firmness is the fact of export in large quantities to Great Britain. It will be remembered some time ago in these columns Canadian Grocer took up this bulletin and pointed out that for several years this country has not been exporting to Great Britain new-laid eggs to the extent that it should have been doing. We pleaded too for a revival of interest in this branch of production, and this year, for the first time, eggs are being exported in fairly large quantities to Great Britain. Thus if the market is somewhat firmer here it is for the Empire's good inasmuch as Great Britain can take all the eggs she can possibly get, on account of the fact that the Danish supplies are tied up by lack of bottoms. Eggs are inclined to be firm and possibly higher too on account of the fact that the eggs which come down from the west, owing to sultry weather, deteriorate in quality. The firmness in the market arises probably from the fact that there are few first quality eggs more than from any other reason. First quality eggs are very much in demand and the supply is not adequate.

Cheese prices have again been reduced. For some time now there has been a continual reduction in cheese, just as up to a certain point, prices went higher and higher. This is the reaction, the make is large, and the demand not so very great because for one thing the British call is not so large as before.

Butter prices are fairly steady and there is a firmness in the market due to the fact that storage demand and the trade are taking care of what supplies there are.

KAISER GIVES BRICKS FOR EAST PRUSSIA

Examiner Special:

BERLIN, (by Wireless Telegraph to Sayville, L.I.) Aug 20 — Among the news items given out for publication by the Overseas News Agency are the following:

"At the brick kiln on the private estate of Emperor William at Cadinen immense quantities of bricks are being manufactured to help in the building up of the devastated regions of East Prussia. Long trains, laden with building material donated by the Emperor, are being forwarded daily.

"The imperial German post forwards daily, excluding Bavaria and Wurtemburg, an average of 26,000,000 letters and small packages. In the last year of peace the daily average was 17,000,000. This increased volume is being handled notwithstanding the fact that almost half of the subordinate postal officials and more than 80,000 other postal employees are performing army service.

"The first shipment of incapacitated German and Austrian soldiers, exchanged for Russians, reached Sassnitz, Prussia. The street of the city and the ships in the harbour were decorated, and a reception was given by the authorities to the injured men who wept for joy."

RATEPAYERS REFUSE GARBAGE COLLECTION

New Collector Started on the East City Route This Morning

The private garbage collecting system inaugurated with the approval of the Sanitary Inspector's department, for the benefit of ratepayers residing outside the municipal garbage collecting area, is reported to be languishing for want of nourishment in the form of patrons. The system, to be self sustaining, must have a certain number of patrons who are willing to pay ten cents a week for the service. The first collector to undertake the work of establishing a route in East City has thrown up the sponge and a new man embarked upon the project this morning. The latter is confident that it will be possible to get together a sufficient number of ratepayers who will be willing to avail themselves of the opportunity offered to participate in what has come to be recognized as a necessary public service. It is interesting to note that the two East Ward representatives have so far refused to patronize the newly-inaugurated service. Some of the ratepayers claim they would rather utilize the refuse for the chickens, than have it collected by the garbage collectors. Others prefer to dump it in a ravine or some other out-of-the-way place.

THE STONEY LAKE 'LUNGE ARE LOSING THEIR TEETH

By Sam Hunter.

Raincoats are again in order. After two days of sunshine, "Juniper Pluvius" as William John Lytle classically puts it, "has ag'in turned on the tap." The summer is passing and has passed in tears. A one piece bathing suit has been the one and only costume suitable to a residence in this latitude for the past two months. A white haired and disgusted guest of one of our summer hotels said to-day: "I've had a peculiar sensation along the middle section of my spine for the past two weeks. My wife examined it last night, and blamed if I haven't developed a dorsal fin as big as a four pound bass's. I'd go home to God's country to-morrow only my last home paper say the hull state's under two foot of water, and all the henery people have sold out or been drowned out and are going in for raising ducks and water cress." In the farming country, south of us and west, much of the grain is under cover, but numerous oat fields are flat and gullied by the many storms. The one crop which weather conditions seem to favour is the mushroom crop. To one who has a safe and sure knowledge of fungi, and can discriminate between the deadly Amanita and a wholesome edible wood mushroom, a tramp through some of the big maple and beach woods here is a delight. It is no over-statement to say that twelve pounds of mushrooms have been gathered in an hour's search, mushrooms with a flavour and development in excess of any cultivated or meadow mushroom, and with a woodsy perfume as agreeable as its taste. The pure pine woods and hardwood ridges, too, are producing this year, as a consequence of so much moisture, an unusual abundance and variety of late summer flowers and fruits, toe ghostly Indian pipe, wild geranium, rattlesnake plantain, corydalis, wood lily, and also the streams the scarlet of countless cardinal flowers and, in favoured spots, the crimson swamp rose.

Of fishing one hears but little of late. "The lunge is losin' their teeth an' ain't bitin'," said an elderly gentleman from Clooney's Gut to me to-day. He had a six pound big mouth bass which he wanted to sell, but there was dead past and 'mashy' flavour about it which prejudiced the camp cook and we didn't buy. "Tur'ble weather, this," he said, recovering the fish, and preparing to backwater. "It's the fust time in up'ards 'a forty year we've had our roof leak, an' I guess it up t' me to reshingle her. I can get the shingles. But o' course," he added with a mournful shake of the head, "they ain't no shingles like them I'se had now." "Hand-made, I spose?" ventured the kid camper who like to effect a knowledge of pioneer days and rural conditions. "Yes, young man" said the old gentleman reverently, the hand of the Creator. When them shingles was put on th, was two young fellers up my way hunting', Jack Dosson an' Rod Hetherton, an' if them young fellows is alive to-day they could tell you where I got them there shingles. They helped me put 'em on. The evenin them young fellers hit our clearin. I ain't likely to forget. Th' was tur'ble high water under the fourth line bridge an' a big lunge had been seen makin' his way up the crik. Milton Wesley my oldest had got sight of him just above the bridge an' put a spear into him. Instead of tryin' t turn Mr 'lunge suddenly backed up, an' gettin' his nus mixed up with the bridge took the whole shootin' match with him. We got that there lunge with two rifle shots an' the bridge was repaired by gettin' the whole settlement to work on it next day.

O, the shingles? Well, young man the shingles that them there young fellers helped me to put on that there house was the fish scales from that there 'lunge. Lookin' like we was goin' t' have more rain, don't it?"

GERMANY'S BUSY LIAR

Asquith Hiding and London Burned the Huns Are Told

The most amazing untruths concerning Great Britain are daily circulated in Berlin for the purpose of deceiving the German public into the belief that Great Britain is in a state of panic. Here are a few of these gems which make up in humor what they lack in veracity.

"Sir John Jellicoe is to be tried for incapacity."

"The organ of the Labor party demands that the whole Cabinet shall be impeached for participation in the war."

"The Indian troops in France were told before leaving India that they were being taken to Europe for exhibition purposes."

"Half of London is burned down and Zeppelins are always hovering over it. Plymouth has also been destroyed by fire caused by bombs from the air."

"Mr. Asquith has fled from England and is hiding in Ireland."

"The citizens of London now huury hither and thither like scared mice because their battalions of football-kicking louts are melting away before the fire of the German artillery."

"The French Government pays for the support of the British troops."

"The deeds of the German fleet are already causing the Lords of the Admiralty sleepless nights, while on board the British ships fearful apprehension lurks in every corner."

"'Come into the Army,' says the British recruiting sergeant to the youths 'You shall have a villa in Rome, a bungalow on the Mediterranean, and in two months you shall be King of the Belgians.'"

Death and Ruin Follow In Storm's Path

Special to The Examiner:

DALLAS, Tex., Aug 20 — Twenty-five drowned at Galveston and its immediate vicinity, 20 at Virginia Point, 55 on the barge Sam Houston, which sank in Galveston Bay, 52 drowned at Texas City, including 12 United States soldiers, 6 at Laporte, 5 at Seabrook, 4 at Morgan Point, 7 at Hitchcock, and 2 in the suburbs of Brooklyn. This is the death list of the three days' tropical storm which swept the gulf coast, according to the estimates of newspapermen direct from Galveston. The known total is 189, but it is believed more than 25 were drowned at Galveston, as many more bodies have been seen floating in the water.

More than 500 buildings were destroyed in Galveston, including grain elevators near the water front. Besides these, it is estimated that at least 2,000 more buildings suffered damage. Although 400 feet of the sea wall was washed out in front of the Galvez Hotel, the hotel itself suffered but slight damage. The property damage at Galveston is estimated at $10,000,000, and the damage to crops in Southern Texas at as much more.

Both ends of the $5,000,000 causeway are destroyed, and a stretch of several hundred feet in the middle was washed away. The oil fields at Beaumont suffered much damage and other small towns along the coast sustained damage which it is estimated will total $2,000,000. The casualties at Virginia Point were caused by the collapse of the Causeway Hotel, to which nearly one hundred persons had gone for safety. Many of those who escaped sustained serious injuries.

More than a hundred men, women and children are marooned on Bolivar Reef.

A WONDER WORKER.

"It heals like magic" is a favourite expression where Dr. Chase's Ointment is used. It works quickly, stops all itching at once, often heals in a single night. For eczema, salt rheum, barbers' itch, skin irritations or eruptions, it is a most satisfactory treatment. Being antiseptic, it prevents blood poisoning.

Dealer in antiques: Yes, that is of historical interest; that is the identical axe that Nero played when Rome was burning.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

His Worship Mayor Boyer has returned to the city. Yesterday the Mayor accompanied a delegation to Ottawa for the purpose of presenting the city's claim to military recognition.

New Furniture Installed.

The new desks and chairs provided for the Council Chamber have been installed. They are so much better than the old ones that it will be more of a pleasure than ever to attend a meeting for a year or two.

Other Improvements.

In addition to the new furniture the Council Chamber has been renovated to the extent of some cork matting that has been placed on the floor, and has been placed on the job has been done. The only thing left undone is the Chief Magistrate's dais and the press table.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES

The Frontenac County Council will purchase three or four machine guns for the soldiers.

Must Attend Parades.

Hamilton recruits who do not attend parades after each day for overseas service will be brought up in the Police Court.

Will Keep Positions Open.

Hamilton Police Commissioner will keep open positions on the force for all the constables who enlist.

COLONEL CARRICK A MAN OF BIG IDEAS

Found Success in Promoting and Was Never Daunted by a Big Deal—Unusual Methods to Get Acquainted

Lt.-Col. J. J. Carrick, M.P., who was appointed to a position on the British general headquarters staff in France for special duty in connection with the Canadian forces at the front, and one of the first Canadian M.P.'s to volunteer for service, is one of the war's anomalies, in that he comes of peace-loving Quaker stock. He is not a Canadian by birth, being born in Terre Haute, Indiana, on Sept. 17, 1873. His parents, however, were British, and they came to Canada to live when the future colonel was but a lad. John James spent his boyhood on a farm about three miles south of Kincardine. After graduating from Toronto University as a B.A., he entered the oil business, in which his father had long been a leading figure.

Mr. Carrick was a branch manager at the Soo when F. H. Clergue was at the zenith of his fame, and there he imbibed some of the speculative tendencies which were rife, but the collapse of the boom left him with depleted finances. He landed in Port Arthur with small capital but unbounded faith in the town and in himself. Things were just beginning to flourish in the Twin Cities, and, as Carrick had begun to develop a genius for real estate deals, he found himself in his element. He speedily convinced some substantial citizens of his capabilities as a promoter, and thus assured himself of ample backing. One after another, he swung three propositions, involving well over a million dollars in the aggregate, conducting whirlwind advertising campaigns, and more than doubling the original investments.

He thinks in millions, and no project is too big to daunt him. He buys a new automobile every little while, and finds it hard to keep within the speed limit.

As a politician, he is as spectacular and unconventional as in his business ventures. In the winter of 1910, having a few weeks to spare, he secured a stereopticon outfit and some good singers, and made a tour of his riding. At each straggling settlement the residents were gathered into any available meeting place, where a free concert was given, and Col. Carrick spoke briefly, saying very little about politics, but endeavoring to learn the needs of his constituents.

Col. Carrick was Mayor of Port Arthur in 1898, and represented Port Arthur in the Legislature from 1898 to 1911, and then was promoted to the House of Commons in the election of 1911.

MOST LAUGHABLE V.C.

Foolhardy Lieutenant Wanted to Recover His German Glasses

A pair of field glasses "made in Germany" was responsible for the loss of a trench by the Germans in circumstances at once laughable and inspiring. The hero was a young British subaltern who won the V.C. The subaltern had a pair of Zeiss field glasses, of which he was extraordinarily proud. He bored everyone stiff by talking about them continually. One day his company had been compelled to fall back on their support trenches owing to a sudden German attack. All at once the subaltern shouted, "Good heavens!" and bolted through the communication trench. A sergeant, who was very fond of the young officer, went after him, and came back shortly after to the commanding officer to report: "Sir, he has recaptured the trench." The commanding officer collected his men, and again advanced to the fire trench, where he found the subaltern with a revolver in each hand, in front of a whole row of Germans, who had laid down their rifles and were holding up their hands. The commanding officer congratulated him, but pointed out the recklessness of his action.

"Sir," replied the subaltern, "I wanted to get my glasses back."

Kitchener Recognizes Women's Work

Mrs. Parker, Lord Kitchener's sister, tells an anecdote of her brother. Speaking of the tendency of men to belittle women's work, she said:

"Even my great brother, when I said I was going to belong to the British Women's Patriotic League, remarked: 'Oh, well, I don't think it will do you any harm.' Since then he has improved somewhat, but when I see him I remind him of that saying of his—for he has to acknowledge the good work being done by women's organizations."

British War Workers

A rough census of war workers has revealed that approximately three million are employed in furnishing supplies for the British army and navy and for the other allies. Of these, more than a million are engaged in shipbuilding, engineering, and the making of munitions.

ASSISTS LLOYD-GEORGE

Strenuous Career of Former Colliery Owner, Now Deputy Minister

The general opinion seems to be that in making Mr. Leonard Llewellyn his assistant in the Munitions Department Mr. Lloyd-George made a very excellent choice. Mr. Llewellyn is the very essence of "push and go"—a man of tireless energy and a marvellous organiser. Previous to his taking up the work with Mr. Lloyd-George, Mr. Leonard Llewelyn was general manager of the Cambrian Collieries. For eight years he controlled nearly thirty coal mines, employing over 18,000 men, with a wages bill amounting to $8,750,000 per annum. Mr. Llewellyn, as general manager of the Cambrian Collieries, is believed to have been the highest paid official in any public company in Great Britain.

His career is a romance of commerce. He has passed his whole life in engineering and mining industries, his boyhood being spent in Chile, where his father was mineral adviser to the Chilean Government. At a very early age Mr. Llewellyn was a commanding figure in the Welsh coalfields. When only twenty-four he was appointed manager of certain Cambrian pits, and, having travelled largely, he found the knowledge gained in other countries of the greatest help to him.

At one time or another he has inspected all the large engineering works in Belgium, France, and Germany. He has also been on engineering and business expeditions to Canada on several occasions, and in 1913-14, during a trip round the world, he closely studied industrial undertakings in Japan. Indeed, into the last twenty years of his life—Mr. Llewellyn is just over forty—he has packed a variety of experiences which would have occupied the lifetime of any other man.

Canadian Sergeant's Method

Canada not only is supplying men by the thousand for the armies in France but she also has begun to take a hand in the recruiting through her soldiers who have returned on leave from the front. One of the Canadian sergeants in particular has started out after the London "slackers" and he is said to have won more than 900 men to the colors. Sergeant Flynn does not coddle recruits into the army and his methods are thought by some to be rather harsh, but his success in filling up the ranks where others have failed is taken to justify the way he goes about it. At Trafalgar Square, where a meeting is held almost every afternoon, this Canadian gets in his best work. The writer saw a round dozen men gathered in the other day in five minutes and they went up to take the shilling rather shamefacedly after Flynn had said: "They call you men who won't go 'slackers' here in England. But I have another name for the man who can sit still and see his home and loved ones in danger. I call him a —— coward."

Turkish System of Obedience

A French officer of the Dardanelles forces narrates an incident showing how Turkish soldiers regard German officers placed over them. His trench is separated from the Turks by fifty yards. One day twelve soldiers left their holes at dawn, holding up their hands. The French allowed them to approach, and they were soon followed by 300 of their comrades. A Turkish non-commissioned officer, speaking French, said to the officer, "Come with me, and you will see something in our trench." The French officer, taking a dozen men with him, accompanied the officer. At the bottom of the Turkish trench he found the bodies of eleven German officers who had been stabbed by the soldiers.

Generals as Posers

It is difficult to imagine a general nowadays sitting for his bust at headquarters in the middle of a war. But General Von Hindenburg has granted several sittings to a sculptor at headquarters. The bust is by Prof. Stanislaus Cauer, and is to be presented to the Council House in Konigsberg. The Duke of Wellington, sat for his portrait in the middle of a campaign. The Duke was painted by the Spanish artist, Goya. It is said that on one occasion the fiery artist, irritated by some criticism on the part of the sitter, snatched a sword from the wall and compelled the Duke to beat a hasty retreat. The Duke afterwards realized that his business was not criticising pictures, and the sittings resumed after an apology.

Tragedy of the Veterans

Old soldiers supply the pathetic element in the Canadian recruiting offices. Many a veteran of the Boer War, broken by glory and attendant liquor, and even older ones of the Indian and Egyptian campaigns, come tearfully with shining medals and dissipated inwards. But the majority are the normal men, artisans, laborers, clerks, and young fellows not yet captive of any toil, who come like men applying for a construction job, calmly, as to face a business proposition.

WAR KEEPS CUPID BUSY IN ENGLAND

Weddings in London have increased 50 per cent since the war, is the statement of the registrar of marriages. Most of the bridegrooms are sensible young fellows and the brides are quiet, domestic girls according to the same authority, and they are assuming the responsibilities of life very often thickened young people away from matrimony. Superficial observers like passed in great measure since men everybody has more or less confidence to meet with grave issues than the giving up so many dinners and dances during the season and the wearing of the latest fashions and clothes. The "keeping up of appearances" has been abandoned and the lush and low have become imbued with a more wholesome desire to live simply, unpretentious lives.

Engagement announcements are rapidly multiply, most of them eminently satisfactory to Cupid, although not always so to the ambitious parents of one or the other affianced. The engagement of the eldest son and heir of the Duke of Portland, the Marquess of Titchfield to the Hon. Ivy Gordon-Lennox, the niece of the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, has, however, caused delight to both the families concerned. She is six years older than her future husband, being 28, whereas he is only 22; but she is a tactful and possesses many of the attributes which made her aunt, the Countess of Warwick, one of the most popular women in Europe a generation ago. She is a maid of honour to Queen Alexandra. Hence her title of Honourable, and her future mother-in-law the Duchess of Portland, resigned the roles to Queen Alexandra, has been largely responsible for the engagement, as she want to clinch matters, a future Duke of Portland, who will sustain the dignity of the name at once.

The duke's son was Miss Dallas Yorke, belonging to an impecunious family, and he married the duke's 18th child, a rapid court up which became quite a common thing, but met in a chatty acquaintance kept. But there have been few dukes in these days who have so well played the part according to the old traditions and the Duchess of Portland has become a marvellous match-maker with both Queen Mary and Queen Alexandra.

Lord Titchfield was educated at Eton and entered the army without going to Oxford and Cambridge as the ordinary schoolboy. Sandhurst. He is a lieutenant in the Royal Horse Guards. He will eventually succeed to one of the richest estates in the country which has descended since 1809, after the unusual law-suits of the mysterious disappearance of the man who had left communication with his family and who exposed himself to imprisonment for bankruptcy, under a name.

Should the wedding be merely a family affair it will doubtless be followed by a large number of important people with Queen Alexandra representing the royal family and a gift presented by the bridegroom's parents. The uncle of the bridegroom, the Duke of Richmond, his cousins the Earl and Countess of Percy, future Duke and Duchess of Northumberland, and maternal aunt Mrs. Dudley Coutts Stuart will uphold the prestige together with the Duke and Duchess of Portland, the Earl and Countess of Warwick, Viscount and Viscountess Helmsley, the Earl and Countess of Ancaster and the Earl of Essex and their relatives.

Lord Malcolm Charles Gordon-Lennox, the bride's father, retired from the Grenadier Guards in 1900 as a lieutenant-colonel. He is the Duke of Gordon's next brother and succeeded to the title of Lord Alcester on the death of his father, Admiral of the Fleet Sir Beauchamp Seymour, who was created a peer for his services at Alexandria in 1882.

"Mop" Receivership.

St. Louis, Mo. The Missouri-Pacific-Iron-Mountain system has consented to the appointment of receivers as requested Tuesday in a petition filed in the Federal District Court. The Missouri Pacific filed an answer stating that the allegations in the receivership suit were true.

The Commonwealth Steel Company, which brought the receivership suits against the Missouri Pacific Company and against the St. Louis Iron Mountain and Southern, agreed with the railways to urge the appointment of President Bush as sole receiver.

Operate Detroit Plant.

Detroit. The American Car and Foundry Co. has secured a large contract for war munitions and will start its Detroit plants operating full. The nature of the order is not stated.

Most of the equipment companies are now working on war business, including Pressed Steel Car, American Car and Foundry, American Locomotive and Baldwin Locomotive. Earnings of these companies are expected to reach new high records as a result of new business. Increased dividends for a number of equipment companies within the next twelve months are looked for.

London Football League Formed

London, Aug. 20. The Football Association of London clubs, who are members of the English and Southern Leagues, making 12 clubs in all, have combined in forming a London football combination, which will be conducted on league lines. The eleven London clubs are: Brantford, West Ham United, Tottenham Hotspur, Crystal Palace, Queen's Park Rangers, Fulham, Clapton Orient, Millwall, Croydon Commons, Arsenal, and Chelsea. The opening matches will be played on September 4. Professionalism will be entirely suspended, and only necessary hotel and travelling expenses are to be allowed.

Voice of The People

Peterborough, Aug. 19, 1915.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir, I visited the United Shows at the Fair Grounds last night and in one of them, saw one of the most suggestive dances that I think it is possible to see. I did not think that kind of dance would be allowed by the authorities in any city, in this "fair Canada of ours." I think they called it the Oriental style of dancing. All I can say is, God help the Orient if they allow that kind of dancing there.

Yours truly,
A CITIZEN.

ENNISMORE COUNCIL

The Ennismore Council met August 10, 1915, all the members present.

By-law No. 469, for the purpose of levying a tax on all rateable property in the said township, received its three readings required by law. By this by-law taxes for the following purposes were levied County, township, general, school, war, relief, provincial war tax, special school tax. The average rate in the dollar, exclusive of commutation tax and dog tax is 20.7 mills.

The causes of the high tax are the re-modeling of the schools and the war tax imposed.

On motion of Messrs. Perdue and Crowley, William J. Crough was paid $31.50 for timber for bridge.

On motion of Messrs. Crowley and Holland Ed. Sullivan was paid the sum of $19.25 for timber for bridge.

On motion of Messrs. Holland and Perdue, David Quinlan was paid the sum of $3 for repairing two culverts.

On motion of Messrs. Perdue and Crowley, Cornelius O'Reilly was paid the sum of $3 for standard of plow broken on road and $3 for repairing road.

On motion of Messrs Perdue and Crowley, John Conway was paid the sum of $10 for shovelling snow and breaking roads during winter months.

On motion of Messrs. Perdue and Holland, Joseph Lowes was appointed pound keeper for the year 1915, to take the place of Michael Geary.

On motion of Messrs Perdue and Holland, William B Crough, reeve, was empowered to employ a surveyor to survey the road between lots 10 and 11 in the 6th concession of the township of Ennismore.

The meeting then adjourned to meet at the call of the reeve.

The Speed of Light.

Light holds the record for high speed among all moving things that have been measured. It travels at the rate of 328,028,900 yards a second. This is faster than thinking, even by the most quick witted person. Let any reader try to think the simplest thought and then with the aid of a stop watch note how long it has taken him to think it. He will then be able to understand how slow his mental operations are compared to the speed of light.

The Mole.

The most courageous of all living things is, by common consent of naturalists, the mole. Seemingly without any sense of fear whatever, the mole will fight anything that crosses its path. Neither giving nor asking quarter, it tears away at its adversary until it kills it or is itself killed. The mole's appetite is in keeping with its courage, and it thinks nothing of eating its own weight. In appetite the spider is a close second to the mole but when it comes to fighting the mole carries the palm.

Old Time Butterscotch.

Put three pounds of light brown sugar in an enameled kettle with three fourths of a pound of butter. Place over a moderate fire to melt; let it boil until thick, stirring all the while to prevent scorching. Take the kettle from the fire and pour the boiling hot liquid into buttered tins or upon a large flat meat platter. When stiff enough mark off into big squares, and when cold break these apart and wrap each square in wax paper. Butterscotch carefully made will keep for months. It improves with age.

Sheppard's Plaid.

Of course everybody knows the popular black and white check patterned cloth "sheppard's plaid," but ninety-nine people of every hundred ascribe the origin of this cognomen to some connection with the pastoral personage which is apparently indicated. Indeed, the description is generally written erroneously by tailors as "shepherd's plaid." Sheppard was the manufacturer who first introduced this fabric, and he exhibited his invention at the great exhibition of 1851.—London Scraps.

French Military Law.

Every Frenchman not declared unfit for military service must on reaching the age of twenty serve three years in the active army, eleven years in the reserve of the active army (two trainings of one month each), six years in the territorial army (one training of two weeks) and six years in the reserve of the territorial army. Part of the conscripts, drawn by lot and the number of which is fixed every year by the minister of war, pass into the reserve after one year of active service, if they can read and write, or after two years if illiterate. Those who are not able to bear arms or belong to the active army for a period less than three years have to pay a military tax of 6 francs ($1.15).

Why Italy Loves the Army.

The Italian soldier is not only severely drilled, but he is also expected to perform a good many duties not usually regarded as falling within the requirements of military service. It is considered incumbent on every man wearing the king's uniform to give aid whenever and wherever it may be needed for the protection of life and property, against crime, accident or disaster, and whenever a calamity befalls—such as an earthquake—the first move is always to send troops to assist the suffering. That is one reason why Italy regards her army with affection as her protector at home as well as her defender against foreign aggression.—London Chronicle.

Dealing In Futures.

"It is my firm belief," announced Jasper Knox, the sage of Piketown-on-the-Blink, "that in the dim and misty future there is a faint possibility of some hitherto unknown inventive genius accidentally stumbling upon a scientific formula, the compounding of which, superinduced by a liberal and proper administration of the same to teething infants, will impart to those necessary household adjuncts a sense of propriety which will enable them to comprehend the utter folly of keeping their overworked father awake half of the night, when the high cost of living demands that he be up and doing when the cuckoo clock proclaims the advent of another day of toil."—Judge.

Criminal Negligence.

"Did you leave your card when you called?" "No; my umbrella."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Silver Coinage.

Silver was first coined in Rome in the year 269 B. C., when Fabius Pictor set up a mint.

HATRED.

Hatred is a poisonous plant, and wherever it is allowed to take root it overruns and kills the beneficent growths around it. Whatever the injury received, however we may condemn the act and blame the doer, we cannot afford to hate him. That is suicidal.

Blue Blood Versus Oil

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

Billy Perkins had the usual American assurance, but it never got into the limelight till he went to Spain as a clerk in the American embassy. Billy had means and no taste for business. Indeed, since his living was ground out for him by coupons which fell like gold leaves from sundry bonds he had inherited, what he wanted was an apology for occupation. A friend having been appointed secretary of legation at Madrid, he secured Billy a position as brevet clerk, which gave him the right to say that he was attached to the embassy, but he was seldom if ever called upon to do any work.

As an attache of the legation he received invitations, and, since Americans are considered an unconventional people, he was accorded social liberties that other men were not granted. For instance, there were families which he was permitted to visit as young men visit in America—that is, he was not forced to converse with young women from the sidewalk, they standing on a balcony high above his head. He was permitted to see certain young ladies in their homes, but not alone. Some member of the family other than the lady on whom he called was always present.

One young lady in whose house he was accorded an entrance was a daughter of Don Sebastiano Herrera, a Spanish grandee whose family tree was planted in the time of Ferdinand and Isabella. Dona Inez, the daughter, was destined for some nobleman who would be considered worthy to enter the Herrera family. As for Billy Perkins, had he ten times the fortune he possessed he was not for a moment to be thought of as a husband for her.

Nevertheless the Herreras had traveled abroad a good deal and had thrown off some of the most ultra of their Spanish conventional forms. Their daughter met men at balls, and occasionally one was invited to her home—of course only by her father or mother. Billy Perkins met her at a function given by his chief, the ambassador, and fell desperately in love with her.

Dona Inez evinced a desire to learn English, and when Billy offered to teach her her mother was much pleased with the offer. The good lady had a high admiration for the English nobility and had formed a design of taking her daughter to England, hoping that her rare beauty would catch an English nobleman. However this may be, Billy was permitted to come to the house two evenings in the week to give Dona Inez lessons in the English language. Of course her mother or some member of the family who could be relied upon was present to watch that no lovemaking passed between the two young persons. Moreover, whoever was on watch understood enough English to know if Billy were trying to work that language for the purpose of making love, though, since Dona Inez did not understand a word of English, this was hardly necessary.

Nothing is so delightful to two young persons of opposite sex as to outwit those who are placed on guard over them. Billy's method of teaching English was to have his pupil read something printed in that language or convert something printed from Spanish into the English tongue. This required the use of a Spanish and English dictionary.

One evening when the two were at work using the dictionary every few minutes, Billy, turning the leaves, stopped and put his finger on the word "your." Then he turned to the words "eyes" and put his finger on that word. In this way he spelled out "your eyes are like beautiful twin lakes, and your lashes are like the rushes growing on the borders." Then Inez took the dictionary and by the same means said, "You Americans are great flatterers." This was followed by a sentence from Billy—"There is no such beauty in America as yours."

These few communications occupied half an hour, but what time was lost in looking up words was gained in the fervor of the sentences. In two or three evenings Billy had made as much love as some men with every facility would make in a year. And Dona Inez, if she was not an apt scholar at learning English, certainly understood with marvelous facility what was said to her by this method of communication.

Before Dona Inez had learned enough English to catch a British nobleman she had been caught by an American scamp who should have been put in the stocks for daring to make love to the daughter of a Spanish grandee. However, he came out frankly at last and one morning, marching boldly into the presence of Don Sebastiano, asked him for his daughter's hand. The old gentleman looked at the American brevet clerk aghast and asked him what he meant. Billy replied that he meant exactly what he said.

"Are you aware," asked Don Sebastiano, "that our family were nobles at a time when the land in which you were born was inhabited by savages?"

"I am," said Billy, "and are you aware that my ancestors drove your ancestors out of Texas? My ancestors bought an oil tract of your ancestors, and now I am in receipt of $20,000 a month from the property?"

Billy intended by this statement to strike the nail on the head, and he did, for Don Sebastiano, with all his blue blood, was as poor as a church mouse. Billy married Dona Inez, and the pair now live in winter in Spain, in summer in America.

Why They Don't Hear.

Perhaps the limit of hymnic fatuity was reached by the writer of hym 575 in the "Ancient and Modern" collection. Here is the fourth stanza:

They do not hear when the great bell
Is ringing overhead;
They cannot rise and come to church
With us, for they are dead.

The list of things which "they" are unable to do might be indefinitely extended, and it seems a thing incredible that the author of the above verse should have written so beautiful and moving a hymn as "There is a green hill far away."—London Chronicle.

DOES GUN-FIRE CAUSE RAIN?

[illegible] Mr Elgie [illegible] Star and Weather Gossip relates that [illegible] First Lord of the Admiralty was asked by Lord Dalrymple whether [illegible] Fleet's carry out their heavy gun practice [illegible] the coast at some other period of the year than the middle of harvesting, when the resultant heavy rains might cause serious loss to the farming community.

The First Lord replied: "There is no evidence that the firing causes heavy rain. The winter months are selected for target practice owing to the bad weather, summer is generally devoted to manoeuvres, so that the spring and autumn are the most suitable periods for target practice."

On the other hand, Mr Elgie [illegible] quotes a picture of the fleet at Spithead [illegible] Coronation Day, 1911 when [illegible] sometimes [illegible] advised to it that the thunderous discharge had the effect of bringing [illegible] down rain, while a correspondent [illegible] writes to Mr Elgie to the effect that in his forty years' practical experience [illegible] he had never known heavy firing to be [illegible] by rain.

Prof. Lockyer says Mr Elgie, often advanced in support of the gun fire and rain theory that torrential downpours marked the Waterloo series of engagements. But I think we should remember that those engagements were fought in the middle of June, at a period when drenching rains may be expected in Belgium—battle or no battle. I have seen it seriously suggested even that the great storm which shattered the Spanish Armada was due to the heavy cannonading in the engagement.—Lit-Bits.

OBITUARY

MRS. J. H. SHERWOOD.

The death occurred this morning at four o'clock, at her late residence, 551 Bethune Street, of Hetty Mitchell, wife of Mr. J. H. Sherwood. The deceased was 52 years of age. She was born at Foxboro, but came to Peterborough in the early part of her married life, thirty years ago, and resided here continuously until her death She was a woman of many estimable qualities and her passing away will be deeply regretted by a host of friends.

Besides her husband, two sons and one daughter are left to mourn her loss. The sons are Messrs. Claude of Toronto, and Franklyn, at home. The daughter is Mrs. Burrill of this city.

The funeral will take place on Sunday afternoon at 2.30 from the above residence to the Little Lake Cemetery

BIG BARGAIN

Quit paying Rent. Make $1000 on this Property.

Some man with family will get a real big bargain on this property. Brick veneer house, eight rooms, bath room and all modern conveniences complete, cellar floor cemented, new furnace, and lot 50x132 ft. has good barn, vegetable garden, fruit trees, in most desirable locality, west side.

The man owning this property now lives in Toronto, and will sell at a sacrifice of more than $1,000.00. About $2,300.00 will take this place, which ought to sell for $3,600.00 or more right now. As low as $500.00 will satisfy, balance in very easy payments; larger cash payment will get slightly better price.

See us Saturday or to-night about this big bargain, which will enable you to stop paying rent and get a valuable property on which you can make a real good thing in a year or two. The owner will be in Peterborough over the week-end, and can give immediate possession.

HOW TO END IT.

Some Conservative journals persist in railing at Liberal journals and Liberal speakers because the latter persist in calling attention to the weakness and delinquencies of the Borden Administration. There is one way, and only one, of putting a stop to this hostile criticism. Mrs. A. Phipps Receives Letter From Nurse Attending Her Son, Pte. A. Phipps

Mrs. A. Phipps, 2 Fradetta Avenue, has received the following letter from the nurse who is attending her son Pte. A. Phipps of the Second Battalion, who is confined in the Farrow Military Hospital, Broadstairs, Kent England

Northumberland House
Granville Road
Broadstairs, Aug. 3, 1915

Dear Mrs. Phipps. Thank you so much for letter and handkerchiefs. I was delighted to receive them, indeed.

Your son is now nearly all right again, although he was very badly wounded, indeed, and looked like some ghost when we first got him.

However, he bore all his suffering bravely and patiently. I do hope you will soon be able to see him again. I don't think he'll be fit for active service for some considerable time as he walks with a limp.

It was kind of you to thank me for my attention to your son, but after all it was only doing my duty. I do try to do my best for all the brave fellows who come back shattered and I'm sure they are all most grateful.

Again thanking you for your kindness, I am

Yours very sincerely.

Mountains You May Not Know.

I had imagined that the Rockies were the whole show. I had not the faintest recollection of the Cordilleran system of which the Rockies and all these other ranges are but a part, while, as for the Sierra Nevadas, I remembered them only when I came to them, and then much as one will recall a slight acquaintance who has been in jail for many years.

Are you shocked by my ignorance—or my confession of it? Then let me ask you if you know that the Uinta mountain range in Utah is the only range in the entire country that runs east and west? And have you ever heard of the Pequop mountains, or the Cedar mountains, or the Santa Rosas, or the Egans, or the Humboldts, or the Washoes, or the Goslutes, or the Toyabes, or the Toquimas, or the Hot Creek mountains? And did you know that in California, as well as in New Hampshire, there are White mountains? And what do you know of the Wasatch and Oquirrh ranges?—Julian Street in Collier's Weekly.

Hungary's Wonderful Salt Mines.

The great rock salt mines of Hungary are among the wonders of the world, for the illimitable deposit of practically pure salt enables the workmen to cut it out in heavy blocks, much as marble is quarried, after which it is loaded on trucks and sent to the mills for grinding. Rock salt, it may be said, constitutes the world's principal supply of refined salt, and the Hungarian mines furnish a considerable portion of this commercial necessity. Underground passages of considerable width, resembling streets, have been cut at regular intervals, and the whole is well lighted. In one of the mines near the Roumanian boundary a large chamber, with benches and seats, has been cut, where occasional gatherings are held, and perhaps in honor of this fact it is known as the "ballroom." Here the colorings are beautiful, the walls of the cavern or hall partaking of the many shades of rare marble and color grained onyx.

Chrysanthemums of Japan.

Although the chrysanthemum has reached its highest form of development in Japan, and is still reverenced as the imperial emblem, it was taken to Japan from China, where it has been brought to its highest state of cultivation. At the imperial chrysanthemum party given by his majesty the emperor of Japan in November every year one sees the most marvelous blossoms known to the floriculturist. The number of blossoms from one root is amazing. In one case no less than 700 flowers were seen growing from one plant. The festival of the chrysanthemum dates back to the Heian era, when the great ones of the empire used to call at the imperial palace and drink to the health of the imperial house from sake cups in which floated petals of the beautiful flowers.

Rising to the Occasion.

"Maurice," said Aunt Nellie, "wasn't it hard for you to stand up before all the people and speak, at the Sunday school concert?"

Maurice straightened his small form and assumed all the dignity his five years could command. "Yes, auntie, it was pretty hard, but I swelled up to it."—Woman's Home Companion.

Castle Garden.

Only old New Yorkers know that there used to be an island 200 feet off the Battery and that it was fortified and known as Fort Clinton. The island was connected with the mainland by a drawbridge. When the waterway was filled in the island became a part of the Battery and was known as Castle Garden. As everybody knows, it is now the aquarium.

China's Salt Wells.

Salt wells in China have been operated for hundreds of years, and in the Tzelintsing district, especially, have built up a prosperous community. In some cases the wells are 2,000 feet deep. The salt is obtained in the form of brine which is raised in bamboo tubes by means of crude derricks, the motive power for which is furnished by water buffaloes.

METHOD.

Method is the very hinge of business, and there is no method without punctuality. Punctuality is important because it subserves the peace and good temper of a family. Calmness of mind, which it produces, is another advantage of punctuality. A disorderly man is always in a hurry. He has no time to speak to you because he is going elsewhere, and when he gets there he is too late for his business or he must hurry away before he can finish it.

Capt. Finch Says Ship Was Sunk While Going To Aid Steamer Dunsley

Claims His Ship Went Down in Eight Minutes---Two Boats Were Capsized While Being Launched--Was Last to Leave the Ship.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

QUEENSTOWN, Aug. 21.—Captain Finch gave the Associated Press a detailed account of the loss of the liner Arabic.

"We were forty-seven miles south of Galley Heat at 9:30 o'clock Thursday morning," he said, "when I perceived the steamer Dunsley in difficulty.

"Going towards her, I observed a torpedo coming for my ship, but could not discern a submarine. The torpedo struck one hundred feet from the stern, making terrible havoc of the hull. The vessel began to settle immediately, and sank in about eight minutes.

"My order from the bridge about getting the boats launched was promptly obeyed. Fourteen were quickly filled and lowered. Two capsized. We had taken every precaution while in the danger zone. There were plenty of life-belts on deck, and the boats were ready for immediate launching. The officers and crew all behaved excellently, and did everything possible in the circumstances, getting people into the boats and picking up those in the sea.

CAPTAIN WAS LAST TO LEAVE.

"I was the last to leave. I remained on the bridge until the water was lapping at my feet, and then dove off. When I came up my head struck some wreckage and I was slightly injured. I swam to a nearby raft, but was unable to draw myself up on it. Two women with a baby were clinging to one side. I helped them to clamber on the raft and then hung on. We were rescued about twenty minutes later."

Capt. Finch paid special tribute to the heroic conduct of several engineers and firemen who remained at their posts to the last, and sacrificed their lives to execute orders from the bridge, thus ensuring the safety of the passengers. Among those lost was the captain's nephew.

The Arabic's commander spoke appreciatively of the kind treatment received by passengers and crew aboard rescuing vessels, and likewise the arrangements made for their comfort at Queenstown. His chief regret was that he was not able to save the lives of everyone on board.

"If I had been given a little more time by the submarine," he said regretfully, "I am satisfied I could have saved everybody.

"When I saw the white wake of the torpedo it was 300 yards away," said the captain. "It struck about at right angles.

'A big stream of water spouted up to a greatt height, carrying a lot of wreckage and splintering one of the lifeboats."

"Arabic" Carried More Than Sixteen Thousand Tons of Munitions on Her Last Trip

Examiner Special:

Not since July 28 has the Arabic been seen in the port of New York. On that date she steamed for the last time for Liverpool and she was truly a floating arsenal, carrying on board more than sixteen thousand tons of munitions, which cargo included numerous automobile truck and many aeroplanes.

DYNAMITE FOUND ABOARD.

The commencement of the voyage was memorable because on the day previous two sticks of dynamite, almost ready to explode because of their deterioration, were discovered hidden in one of the women's rooms. The timely discovery of this explosive, which would have been sufficient to detonate other powerful explosives on board, resulted from the thorough search made of the vessel before she steamed.

The White Star line, like all the other English lines, maintains its own squad of detectives who are constantly in and about the steamships when in port, watching for suspicious persons and keeping account of every package that goes aboard. It was during the round of one of these detectives that the dynamite was discovered. Its presence on board was a mystery that never was solved.

The dynamite was wrapped in parrafin. The guard was not certain of the nature of his find until he turned it over to the officers of the line, who in turn handed the sticks on to the Bureau of Combustibles. There Owen Fagan, Inspector of Combustibles of the Police Department, examined the stuff and declared that it was in a seriously deteriorated condition and would have exploded upon the slightest jar.

The discovery of the dynamite was kept a secret by the officials of the line until August 6, when the affair leaked out through some channel in the Police Department.

Prior to the steaming of the Arabic numerous reports of an attempt to blow her up reached the ears of White Star line agents and in order to minimize the chances of casualties among her passengers, numerous lifeboat drills were held while at sea and the instruction of the crew in the handling of the watertight bulkhead doors and other safety apparatus on board was given with truly military attention to detail.

Carried Large Freight Cargoes.

Because of her capacity for freight and she was one of the largest cargo vessels of the White Star line, the Arabic has now been allowed to rest since the beginning of the war. Only time to unload and load her has she been allowed. Her crew was a picked one and her captain, William Finch, was a lieutenant in the British Naval Reserve. He is one of the most experienced of the transatlantic passenger captains, and when the Arabic last left here declared that he would bring her safely into Liverpool because he intended to run past the places of danger off the Irish Coast during the night.

In order to make it difficult for foes to see the vessel she was painted battleship gray. This completely obscured her superstructure from any observer more than 250 yards away unless it happened to be a sunny day.

Once before the Arabic was reported to have been attacked by a submarine. That was on the evening of March 26, when she was steaming through the Irish Sea. On her arrival at Liverpool the following Sunday Captain J. Campbell Besly, a British explorer, and J. H. Brothers, of San Francisco, declared that a submarine crept up behind the vessel and launched a torpedo. Only the skilfull seamanship of Captain Finch saved her that time.

This report later was denied by officers of the line, and no mention of it was made in Captain Finch's official report to his owners. When questioned about this reported attack, the New York agents of the line repeated their denial.

Higher Wages Were Paid

Warren Paving Company Claim Contract Did Not Call For a Specified Wage

In connection with an article taken from the Berlin Record of Ontario, and published a few days ago, it was stated among other things that the Berlin paving contract of the Warren Bituminous Paving Company called for the payment of twenty cents per hour for labour. In justice to the company it might be stated that the item in the Berlin exchange was incorrect as the contract in question did not specify any particular wage and as a matter of fact the company claims to have paid higher wages than the prevailing rates paid by the local men.

Norway Very Indignant Over Seizure

Special Morning Cable:

CHRISTIANIA, via London, Aug. 21.—The halting yesterday of the Norwegian mail steamship Haakon VII. and the seizure of mails on board by a German submarine have been followed by a protest to Berlin and a demand for the return of the mails to Norway. The Haakon VII. was bound from Bergen to England.

The Postmaster General reports that the commander of the German submarine ordering the jettisoning of all printed matter and packages destined to England, France, Italy or other countries hostile to Germany. All letters and remittance money are said to have been taken aboard the submarine.

The mail consisted of accumulations since the clearance on Monday of the previous steamship. Included were seven sacks of mail from Denmark.

What the newspapers term the 'mail theft' has aroused a storm of resentment. The Aftenposten says:

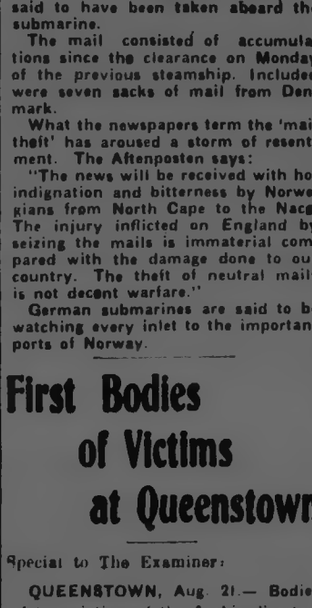
"The news will be received with hot indignation and bitterness by Norwegians from North Cape to the Naes. The injury inflicted on England by seizing the mails is immaterial compared with the damage done to our country. The theft of neutral mails is not decent warfare."

German submarines are said to be watching every inlet to the important ports of Norway.

First Bodies of Victims at Queenstown

Special to The Examiner:

QUEENSTOWN, Aug. 21.— Bodies of two victims of the Arabic disaster, the first recovered, were brought to Queenstown to-day and placed in the morgue to await identification. The patrol shin "Adventuress" picked up three lifeboats five miles from the spot where the liner was torpedoed. In one was the body of a woman, face slightly bruised by wreckage. In the second boat was the body of a man, believed to be the steward of the Arabic, who was among the list of missing. His watch had stopped at 9.45.



Great Naval Battle Is Thought To Have Been Fought in Gulf of Riga

German Fleet of Ten Dreadnoughts and Battle Cruisers With a Number of Armoured Cruisers, Appeared off Entrance to Gulf, Supposedly on a Reconnoitering Expedition.

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Aug. 21.—The greatest naval battle of the European war may have been fought in the Gulf of Riga yesterday. Every effort was being made here to-day to obtain more details of the action reported by the Russian War Office. A German fleet of ten Dreadnoughts and battle cruisers, with a number of armoured cruisers and destroyers appeared off the entrance to the gulf on a reconnoiterring expedition a few days ago. Afterward reports came that several units of the Russian fleet were bottled up inside the gulf and that Germans planned to penetrate the gulf and destroy them. Though the narrow entrance was thickly strewn with mines, the official statement fro mPetrograd indicated that the Germans are forcing their way through. The whereabouts of the Dreadnoughts of the Russian fleet, Slava, Imperator, Uavel and Taessarevitch, mounting 12-inch guns, is unknown. The Germans, according to Copenhagen reports, have orders to destroy the Russian fleet in the Baltic, thus making it possible to land troops either at Riga or on the shores of Finland.

Americans in England Declare Germany Scorns The United States

Examiner Special:

LONDON, Aug. 21.—"Something will happen" describes the opinion of every American one meets in London to-day.

This "something," of course, relates to the German-American situation resulting from the sinking of the Arabic Thursday. Two views are expressed: The first is that Germany, realizing that in spite of recent military triumphs, the allies finally will win, wishes to draw America into the war to more easily sue for peace and have America exercise on the other belligerents a moderating influence.

GERMANY HYPNOTISED ITSELF.

The second view is that Germany is hypnotised by the conviction of its power and duty to conquer the world and thus replace decadent morals and institutions of other nations with its own sound benificent "kultur." The latter view is the one more generally entertained, especially by those with personal knowledge of the German temper.

"The condition at present is not in agreement with the notion that the Germans realize the magnitude of the resources accumulating against them," said Harry Gordon Selfridge, a former Chicago merchant, who recently spent some time in Germany. "On the contrary, I am convinced they feel not only aboundingly buoyant and Imperialistic, but abundantly able to deal with any consequences that may arise from their doing exactly what they please as regards the whole or any part of the rest of the world.

SUBMIT OR RELEASE.

"For several weeks I have felt certain that all who are not willing to submit to Germany should prepare to resist her. Indeed I am sure it is the duty of Americans and every other nation that believes in freedom not only to prepare to defend itself, but strike now with those great civilized powers which are striving to defeat the latest menace to the free development of mankind."

Mr. Selfridge's language compared with that of most Americans here is restrained. Interviews with foremost Americans accessible show the deepest anger. One of the ablest financiers of America, a man enjoying highly confidential relations with officials dealing with international relations, said to me:

GERMANS SCORN, UNITED STATES.

"Germany regards us as weaklings, a prominent man in Berlin told me we had no friends in Europe and deserved none. A man in a high position under the Kaiser said America's only passion was for money, and he said we would not take the risk of going to war on either side, but would coin dollars out of blood, tears, and ruin. As this official talked his exasperation and contempt mastered him and I got the startling idea, what would happen to us if Germany gets a chance to launch her war machine against us."

British Make More Progress Near Suvla Bay

Special Morning Cable:

PARIS, Aug. 21.—The British left wing has made further progress near Suvla Bay on the Gallipoli Peninsula, the War Office reported this afternoon.

LONDON, Aug. 21. — The British steamer Benviackie was sunk. A crew of thirty were saved. The British steamer Gladiator was sunk by a German submarine. Thirty-two of the crew were saved. During the last twenty-four hours the German subs have claimed a greater toll than on any date since the war began.

NEW YORK, Aug. 21.—It was reported that the Lapland was sunk. Red Star Line officials have no information on the subject yet.

LONDON, Aug. 21.—Consul Frost reported to the American Embassy that four more Americans, in addition to the two noted, are missing from the Arabic.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21. —Secretary Lansing announced last night that he had instructed the Embassy in London to gather affidavits from Americans aboard the Arabic.

NAPLES, Aug. 21.— A Salonika despatch says 150,000 Bulgarian soldiers concentrated on the Turkish frontier, were inspected by King Ferdinand. This is significant, in view of recent reports that Bulgaria had entered the war.

Will Have Crop of 4,000 Acres

Examiner Special:

Brook Alta. Aug. 21 If the unforeseen should happen the Duke of Sutherland colony farm here will have a crop of not less than 4,000 acres.

Three thousand acres are in red fife and Marquis wheat the yield of which promises bushels. There are now hundred acres in oats with a probable yield of seventy-five bushels per acre. Two hundred acres are in barley six acres in irrigated alfalfa, and an equal area in timothy. The second crop of alfalfa is now being harvested the first yield two tons per acre.

Twelve binders will take off the crop with sixty head of horsepower. Some five hundred head of fine cattle are included on the farm.

For Freckled, Tanned, Red or Wrinkled Skin

Just beneath that freckled, tanned or reddened surface there's an exquisite beautiful skin of youthful tint and clear if you could only bring this condition to the surface, describing the discolored one. You can in the easiest, simplest, most natural manner imaginable. Just get at any druggist an ounce of ordinary mercolized wax, apply night like cold cream, removing in morning with warm water. The wax acts imperceptibly, gently peeling off the discolored particles of scorched and half dead surface skin, causing no discomfort whatever. Even cutaneous defects like pimples, blotches, liver spots, moth patches, freckles, of course disappear with the old skin. Nothing ever will accomplish such wonderful results in so short a time.

Fine lines and even deeper wrinkles often appear at this season. In such cases nothing is better than a face bath made by dissolving a few powdered saxolite in a pint of witch hazel. This is remarkably effective.

GERMAN PASTOR ARRESTED

Lutheran Suspected of Stirring Up Strife in Canadian West

SASKATOON, Sask. Aug. 20 Rev. Mr. Stetzer, German Lutheran pastor at Lanigan, was arrested by Chief Roberts. The charge against him is not known, but it is alleged he has been distributing literature favorable to Germany among the German population of the district.

By ROBERT ALEXARDER WASON

"Then she asked him if he was willin' to forgive his enemies, and he studied over this a long time, and finally he said he didn't care much one way or the other. She asked him who his enemies were and he said, 'All Iawabdin' people everywhere, and all outlaws I've ever known personal.'

This was a purty big roundup to forgive all at one stretch, and she asked him if he was willin' to forgive all those he had ever injured or tried to injure. This wasn't quite so easy for him, but he finally said he reckoned he could do it, and then she asked if he knew anything which would help anybody, and he said he did, and she asked him what was it, and he said, 'Well, when a hoss lays out on ya—when he goes clear down and can't get up again—why, if you'll just kick him a few times between the eyes, he'll get back on his feet and go four or five miles farther.'

"He said this so cheerful and earnest that Mrs. Cooper hated to disappoint him by tellin' it wasn't exactly what she meant; but she finally got it into him that if he'd tell about some crimes of which people were falsely accused, it would be the very best thing he could do for his soul. He said he doubted if he'd ha' enough time left to benefit his soul much, but he'd tell what he could while he lasted. Then he laid to and confessed all manner of things he had done and fixed so the blame would fall on others, and Mandy Hagus wrote it down as fast as he told it. He wouldn't give out the names of any of his pals, but he didn't hold back any in braggin' about his own devilment, and it seemed to ease him a lot.

"Friends," sez Red, foldin' his arms and glarin' down on us as though darin' us to prove that the tariff wasn't the mother of Trusts and the stepmother of cheap wood, "I now have a bit of news for you which may come somewhat in the nature of a surprise. The Panhandle Kid, of which most of you have heard, was nobody else except that sap-headed tenderfoot who took on with us under the name of Tom Smith."

Well, even Red was satisfied at the uproar this caused. All of our boys exclaimed and carried on; but I noticed that the gray-eyed lieutenant grinned over at me as though he purty well knew who the joke was on all thetime and was only waitin' for the proper time to spring it.

As soon as Red had let 'em mill around enough to suit him, he held up his hand like Father Time tellin' New Year's not to step his toe over the line until plumb midnight, and then he drawled along as though he didn't really have much more to tell, but would just keep on speakin' until his time allowance was used up. "Panther Emmons," sez he, "hated the entire Stern gang, but the Panhandle Kid worst of all, and tried to fix up a scrape for 'em which would give 'em a chance for rest and quiet. He was the one who had engineered the robbin' of that post office and the murder of Dave Kinsington, and the Panhandle Kid didn't have any more to do with it than little Sunshine Cooper had. Panther didn't know how to do any writin', himself, but he had a young feller in his outfit who could write any way that anybody else could, and Panther has been sendin' letters around in every direction durin' the last year tryin' to fix it so—"

We heard a queer, smothery gasp from outside where the Begum had been listenin', and next minute she tottered through the door and up to Red. Her face was all gray and mottled, like she'd been snapped around purty lively. "Do you mean that my son is really innocent?" sez she lookin' up pleadin' into Red's eyes.

"Why, o' course he is," sez Red. "A feller like Panther might stretch things a little even on his deathbed, in order to leave a reputation to suit him; but as far as tellin' a straight-out lie, why, he'd never have the nerve to do it."

"Did you get him to sign this paper?" sez she. "Oh, did you get him to sign it?"

"Yes'm," sez Red. "Panther put his mark to it, and so did me and Shorty and Mollie Cooper sign as witnesses, and I reckon it's as tight a paper as ever was framed up."

"Where is it?" sez the Begum. "Let me see it, let me hold it in my hand."

"I didn't bring it with me," sez Red; "because Mandy Hagus hadn't had time to dot the i's and cross the t's on the first goin'-oven, and she wanted time to fix it up accordin' to Hoyle."

"Go, please go and get it," sez she, "and you" turnin' to the lieutenant —"you're an officer of the law, and you must see that justice is done."

Well, the lieutenant was willin' enough to see justice done, and Jim and I and the rest of us went on over to Cooper's with him.

Panther was stretched out on the soiy gettin' cool drinks and bein' fanned, and lookin' as though dyin' was the best part o' livin'. Baldy had drove off mad, but the three oldest Hagus boys were sittin' on the floor propped up again' the wall. Mandy give the paper to Jim and he put it in his pocket.

Panther grinned at us, and especially at the lieutenant, and he told him the straight of a joke he had put on him down in Blanco Canon, which made the lieutenant look a bit foolish. And then I told about how all the law officers had kept watch over a calf in the cellar, and Panther grinned and when we told him Tom Smith's mother had also been in the cellar and hadn't screamed when Isaac and the calf came fallin' down, he said she would have suited him first rate for a mother.

Death-beds got on my nerves at that time, so I joined the Hagus boys and helped prop up the wall, but Missourie and Mex were more at home 'n ever I'd seen 'em.

"Well, Panther," sez Mex, "the way of the transgressor is hard."

"Especially on the other feller," added Missourie.

Panther didn't make much reply to 'em but he grinned to show he appreciated their attentions, and they went on quotin' solemn words o' comfort to him until they fell into a dispute durin' which Mex had Missourie by name.

"Did you come from Missourie?" sez Panther.

"I sure did," sez Missourie; and then they got to gossipin' until they discovered they had robbed the same melon patch as boys and then they recollected havin' both licked the same kid, and this made 'em boon friends. Missourie told me afterwards that Panther was the best one of the Emmonses as far as he had ever heard. He said that gettin' lynched was counted as a natural death in the Emmons family, and that Panther had done mighty well for himself in comin' West to seek his fortune.

When the night began to smell a little of the dawn, I hunted up Jim who was sittin' out in the mess hall waitin' to see if Mrs. Cooper would have any need of him, and I told him that Panther was gettin' weaker and that I intended to leave. The rangers had left and Jim had sent back word to the Begum by Flames, so we were free to go or stay whichever seemed best.

Mrs. Cooper came out of the sittin'-room and Jim asked her if she wanted him to stay until it was over. Her face was drawn and weary, but it was full of light and peace and she still stands out in my memory as bein' purt nigh the good Lord's idee of an all around woman. "There isn't any need of your stayin'," sez she. "Mex and Missourie intend to stay and the three Hagus boys have fallen asleep propped up again' each other; so you might just as well go."

They started to talk of what should be done after it was all over, and I went around to get our hosses. I had just tightened up the cinches when Dan Cooper rode up on a tired hoss, threw down the reins and hurried around the house with me after him. He was one of those even-tempered, trustful men who never make up any evil thoughts in their own minds but who never stop, once they cut loose, and I wanted to be on hand if he cut down on Jim without any openin' address.

"Now, go on home," sez Mrs. Cooper, "and get some rest. You sure need it."

Her voice wasn't a shade more tender than usual, but it did sound so to me at that time, and I made myself all ready.

"Mollie," sez Dan Cooper in an even voice, "a letter was give to me to-day by a stranger, over fifty miles from her. Have you any idee who would write such a thing?"

"Yes, Dan," sez she. "I know what's in the letter and who had it wrote, and—oh, Dan, I'm glad you're back home!"

I backed away on tiptoe, just as Mollie threw her arms around Dan's neck, and sez, "Good night, Jim," over Dan's shoulder.

I was mighty glad the way things turned out, even then; but as I look back on it now, nothin' shows me so plain what a kid I must have been, as to call up my feelin's as me and Jim rode back to the ranch-house. It seemed to me that the natural thing to do, and really the right thing, was for Dan Cooper to tie right into Jim and ask his questions afterward. O' course my own vanity had a lot to do with this view, for Dan Cooper was a big man and it would have been right stimulatin' to have grappled with him in a worthy cause, but in spite of my honest admiration for Mollie Cooper I wasn't near old enough at that time, to know how broad and deep her influence really was.

WOMAN'S MOST SUCCESSFUL MEDICINE

Known All Over The World —Known Only For The Good It Has Done.

We know of no other medicine which has been so successful in relieving the suffering of women, or received so many genuine testimonials, as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

In nearly every community you will find women who have been restored to health by this famous medicine. Almost every woman you meet knows of the great good it has been doing among suffering women for the past 30 years.

Fox Creek, N. B.—"I have always had pains in the abdomen and a weakness there and often after meals a soreness in my stomach. Lydia E. Pinkham's VegetableCompound has done me much good. I am stronger, digestion is better and I can work with ambition. I have encouraged many mothers of families to take it as it is the best remedy in the world. You can publish this in the papers."—Mrs. WILLIAM S. BOURQUE, Fox Creek, N. B.

In the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., are files containing hundreds of thousands of letters from women seeking health, in which many openly state over their own signatures that they have regained their health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, many of whom state that it has saved them from surgical operations

CRUDE THOUGHTS FROM THE EDITORIAL PEN

HOW TO WIN.

A young man from the country on going to a great city asked a noted editor how he could win fame and fortune and received the following excellent reply.

First, get rid of all "excelsior" nonsense, stay down below and let the glaciers and mountain peaks take care of themselves.

Second, do your work well, no matter what it is. Study your business. Make yourself master of it by putting your head and heart into it. If it is bookkeeping, then keep books in such a fashion that the Angel Gabriel will want to lend you his crown as a token of approval. If you are a mechanic, artisan, or farmer, be proud of your-self and the rest of the world will soon be proud of you. Nothing is needed so much in this generation as a man with skilled fingers. You may have a long pull, but the clock will strike an unexpected hour and the opportunity—which comes to everybody in turn, but which most people miss—will present itself. Study the bulldog and when you get your teeth in a big thing let them stay there.

Third, save money. The coward runs in debt, the brave man has a five-dollar surplus in his pocket. The world may laugh at you because you can't have a four-in-hand necktie. All right, let it laugh. You are your own world and the people who sneer are simply outside barbarians. When they see that five dollar bill growing bigger they will all want to shake hands with you and send you to congress. Keep well within your income and you will save yourself from skulking around the corner like a kicked dog when the dun is on your track. The handiest thing on the planet is the penny laid up for a rainy day.

Now, young sir, get rid of the nonsense that you are a genius, settle down to the conclusion that you are just an average boy and then start in. Keep yourself alert, look after your digestive apparatus, don't smoke cigarettes, get to bed early, be square-toed in all your dealings, and we will wager a cookie that at sixty you will have to look backward for those who began the race you did. Are you ready? Then go!

Many of the best friends that the boys have are looked upon as enemies because the boys have allowed evil practices to become part of themselves and will not become separated from them. They cannot fully understand how any one can hate a wrong yet love a wrong doer. They have not yet learned that those who pander to their worst passions and grossest appetites are the deadliest foes they have, who, for their own selfish ends, are willing that the light of home and the hope of loving friends should be quenched in debauchery and death. The mother loves her boy; she would fight with the fury of a tigress or brave fire and pestilence to insure his safety, or would plead and agonize until her heart strings snapped, all for love. Yet at times her burning indignation against the authors of her anguish may be mistakenly attributed to anger for the erring. Very many boys—and girls, too—are mistrustful of their best friends; friends who work with tongue and pen and purse, who willingly bear reproach as cranks and busybodies—made courageous by love and cheered by the hope that their efforts may be successful in saving the boys.

Parents should teach their children that labour is noble and holy, and disparage that foppish dudeism that has taken such a hold upon the codfish aristocracy of our country. They are too nice to work, too proud to beg and, perhaps, too honest to steal. They are much like a land turtle, they carry all they have on their backs, and are as happy as a peacock when their feather- are in good trim.

HAVE FAITH IN THE BOY.

Have faith in the boy, not believing
That he is the worst of his kind,
In league with the army of Satan
And only to evil inclined;
But daily to guide and control him,
Your wisdom and patience employ,
And daily, despite disappointment
And sorrow, have faith in the boy.

Have faith to believe that some moment
In life's strangely checkered career,
Convicted, subdued and repentant
The prodigal son will appear;
The gold in his nature rejecting
The dark and debasing alloy,
Illumine your spirit with gladness
Because you had faith in the boy.

Ah! many a boy has been driven
Away from home by the thought
That no one believed in his goodness,
Or dreamed of the battles he fought;
So, if you would help him to conquer
The foes who are prone to annoy,
Encourage him often with kindness,
And show you have faith in the boy

Have faith in his good resolutions,
Believe that at last he'll prevail,
Though now he's forgetful and heedless,
Though day after day he may fail.
Your doubts and suspicious misgivings,
His hope and his courage destroy;
So, if you'd secure a brave manhood,
'Tis well to have faith in the boy.

No language can express the power and beauty and heroism and majesty of a mother's love. It shrinks not where man cowers, and grows stronger where man faints and over wastes of worldly fortune sends the radiance of its quenchless fidelity like a mask.

Her Gift

By F. A. MITCHEL

A girl was sitting on the porch of her home thinking. Five years before on that very day of the month she had refused Henry MacMillan. She was then eighteen years old, and the indirect method in love affairs appealed to her. If a man proposed to her and she refused him she expected him to return the next day and the next and so on till she accepted him. MacMillan had no conception of this sort of lovemaking. He never said anything he didn't mean and couldn't understand any one else doing so. But his experience with women was not extensive.

On this summer afternoon Luella Travers was thinking of Henry MacMillan. She had not intended to refuse him more than once. When he came back the second time—which she naturally expected he would do—she intended to accept him and at the same time show him how long she had loved him by giving him a smoking cap, on which she had embroidered a wreath. He had no use for a smoking cap and no ambition to wear a wreath about his head, but Luella couldn't think of anything else to do for him.

Henry was as stupid about some things as he was wise about others. If a dozen persons had witnessed the refusal he received every one of them would have known that Luella was refusing him with her tongue, while she was accepting him in her heart. Henry heard her words, but saw not their denial. He had received a business offer in a distant city and wished to learn if Luella would marry him. If so he would consult with her as to its acceptance; if not he would accept it without consulting her and go where he would not be near her and consequently the better able to recover from his desire for her.

Luella was a bit surprised that Henry should have taken her reply so seriously, should have bowed, though reluctantly, to what he considered the inevitable. He left her without a murmur, and she was somewhat fearful that he might not give her an opportunity to recall her refusal. She had half a mind to call him back. But half a mind is not a whole mind, and she let him go, expecting the next time she met him to draw him to another proposal by those winning ways she understood how to apply.

She did not see Henry for several days, then she was greatly shocked to hear that he had gone to another city to engage in business and make it his home. Why she did not write him to tell him that her refusal of him was only temporary does not appear. Perhaps it was for the same reason that the myriads of other temporary refusals are not recalled. A woman must wait for a first proposal, and it is equally obligatory for him to wait for a second.

And now Luella on the anniversary of her refusal—the date was as well fixed in her mind as her birthday—was sitting on the porch wondering—as she had wondered constantly since her lover's departure—what could have made him so stupid. And yet had he seen through her game what would have been the pleasure in her playing it? It had not occurred to her that she had better have refrained from the fun and acted on the principle that a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush.

Who is that tall figure coming up the road? There is something familiar in the walk, something in the outline, something intangible, indescribable about the whole. Luella's heart stood still. Yes, it is Henry. He is heavier than he was, his step is a trifle less quick than it used to be, but it is Henry, the man she refused five years ago, to her regret ever since.

Was he coming to renew his proposal?

Luella had had fits of anger against her lover for being so stupid. Now, instead of a hope springing in her heart that he was coming to tell her that he could not live without her, with a consequent throwing herself into his arms, she was seized with a desire to punish him. For what? For having taken her refusal seriously.

Henry came on. Luella, pretending she did not see him, looked up at the sky. He stopped before the house, then mounted the steps. Luella forced a smile. He looked as gloomy as the day he had left her.

"Why, Mr. MacMillan!" she exclaimed. "What a long time since I have seen you!"

"I've not been in this town since I saw you last," he said.

"Came back to see your mother, I suppose?"

"Yes; to see my mother, but to see you, too. I've passed an unsatisfied five years since I left here. I've come back to try to persuade you to recall what you said to me just before I left you."

There was something so miserable in his appearance and tone that her desire to punish him for his stupidity broke away. Asking him to "wait a bit," she went into the house and brought out the smoking cap she had kept so long.

"I had intended to recall what I said the next day, but you didn't give me an opportunity. I had been making this gift for you for months and expected to give it with my consent."

She spoke through tears.

The man—only a genius could portray the mingled emotions expressed on his face.

Fruit for preserving should be sound and fresh, and should be preserved as quickly as possible after gathering.

An Athletic Heart.

The use of the term "athletic heart" has led to more misunderstandings than probably any other one expression. Laymen or parents, provided they are not of the medical profession, get a picture from this expression which is anything but correct. If they were told that their boy's thigh had increased half an inch in girth under the exercise that he had been doing in the gymnasium they would be pleased, but when they are told that the size of his heart is increased they are at once very much alarmed. Active participation in almost any sport which causes the heart to beat more rapidly will produce an increase of size of that muscle as in any other muscle, and a certain amount of this is unquestionably nature's normal and proper way of taking care of her economy. Some people, it is true, believe that any enlargement is abnormal, but Dr. Meylan and most of the physicians who have followed the athlete closely would not agree with this.—Outing.

Erratic Record In Golf.

The world's record for unsteadiness probably goes to a certain California golfer. There was a team match scheduled between two clubs, each club picking its five best men. When the match started it was discovered that only four men had reported for one of the teams. The captain of the team that had a missing man saw standing by a club member with a handicap somewhere around sixteen or eighteen strokes. His average game was about 98. As a rule he could be counted upon to go out in 50 and come back in 48. That day, to his own amazement and to the confusion of his opponent, he was out in 34, eleven strokes better than he had ever played the course before for the first nine holes. This was an upset, but no worse than the upset that followed, for, after being out in 34, he was back in 63. He got his 97, but as no 97 was ever got before.—Jerome D. Travers in American Magazine.

Banish Pimples!

Pimples, Boils, and other skin eruptions are an almost infallible indication that the blood is impure.

Abbey's Effervescent Salt is the simplest and most positive Blood Purifier that can be used. When we have perfect digestion we must have pure normal blood, which supplies healthful nutrition to all the organs and tissues of the body; and as a result we must have healthy functions and the absence of disease in any form. Abbey's Effervescent Salt produces this condition by ensuring healthy digestion and the elimination of all morbid matter from the system.

Pinched.

Perhaps the origin of our slang term "pinched," meaning arrested, is in Defoe's poem "Hymn to the Pillory." Immured in 1703 in Newgate, Defoe consoled himself with the reflection that, having meant well, he suffered unjustly. This is the passage:

The first intent of laws
Was to correct the effect and check the cause.
And all the ends of punishment
Were only future mischiefs to prevent.
"But justice is inverted when
Those engines of the law,
Instead of pinching vicious men,
Keep honest ones in awe."

The Earliest Lens.

The earliest known lens is one made of rock crystal unearthed by Layard at Nineveh. This lens, the age of which is to be measured by thousands of years, now lies in the British museum with its surface as bright as when it left the maker's hands. By the side of it are very recent specimens of lenses which have been ruined by exposure to London's fogs and smoke.

Pretty Thin Milk.

Old Captain Joshua Ketcham of Amityville, N. Y., was very much beloved by the summer residents who used to sail with him on the bay and catch bluefish. There was always a refreshing flavor of the sea in his talk.

One day, when a party of city men were sailing with him, the conversation turned on the difficulty of getting good milk in Amityville, and they appealed to the captain to know why that was the case.

"Well," said Captain Joshua, "it's been that way as long as I can remember. My wife made me buy a cow once. I bought her from Elbert Huff, up on the north turnpike, and gave him $40 for her. Elbert said she'd give twenty quarts of milk a day, and I guess she did, but you could see bottom in six fathoms."—Youth's Companion.

HOW CHEMISTRY TURNS WAR INTO A COMBAT OF BRAINS; LESSONS FOR UNITED STATES FROM A YEAR OF WAR IN EUROPE

ONE eminent scientist has declared this is a war of nitric acid.

"This is a war of cotton," says another, who sees in the shortage of cotton in Germany and a recent report that Germany has requisitioned cotton of all kinds—cloth, underwear, tableware, even the ladies' stockings—for explosives, the early ending of the war

"This is a war of chemistry in every branch," declares a third, who is a well known authority on explosives and ordnances.

"A war of chemists rather than of materials," says a fourth authority—"a war utilizing the services of men who can control and combine the elementary constituents to produce the necessary explosives, the shell that will explode in thin, flat pieces like a silver quarter of a dollar; that will kill men and leave only a little mark like the cut of a penknife."

Chemists who can devise shells that dig men out of the trenches like the farmer with a stick of dynamite would dig a woodchuck out of a hole.

Chemists who draw nitrogen from the air and convert it into nitric acid and save the oxygen to furnish new air for the submarines when compelled to stay under the water for many hours.

Chemists who can make new compounds or other combinations of aluminum and zinc to take the place of copper and so on through the long list of materials needed for war and for food products for those at home

Chemists who devise gases and other horrors of war to asphyxiate men, who, even though they recover, are incapacitated for the remainder of their lives.

Chemists, who are really more desirable, who can originate and make combinations of new gases that will immediately counteract this horrible mode of warfare

Technical Training Needed.

Chemist-engineers and chemist mechanics who can originate and plan out respirators and other mechanical appliances that will bring life back to the victims of the new modes of slaughter.

It is a war of men—trained men—a war in which brains must triumph.

Chemistry not only consists, when war is considered, of the necessary raw materials but of the ability to combine them, and that means chemists. A serious lack of one or many raw materials may be made up from other sources if the chemists with requisite knowledge are at hand. A deficiency which in one country would spell disaster might in another be overcome by greater technical training and preparation

To draw correct conclusions as to the effect that chemistry and chemists have had in the present war one must understand something of the manner, mode and under what conditions manufactures are carried on in Germany, England, France and the United States. Germany as a government always has been paternal as well as autocratic and quite arbitrary in her relation with different manufactures.

In our consular reports it is plainly stated that the chemists of Germany for years have been using their best energies to devise some source of supply of nitrogen so as to be independent of Chili, which has been the only commercial source of nitrogen in the form of saltpetre. Again, in the manufacturing of explosives which are dependent on cotton for part of their composition Germany has been obliged to use very strict measures and to conserve every ounce of cotton in the empire, as her supply to-day is cut off from the United States and India and Asia Minor, from which she received only a small portion, and her chemists are experimenting and working with flax and hemp and other fibrous plants to supply cellulose in place of cotton.

Again, we learn from authoritative sources that Germany has produced dyes from coal tar products for a number of years and sold them on the market at a price -there was little profit and often a loss - to prevent competition and to discourage other countries from making them for the sake of the other by products in the shape of benzol and those derivatives that are essential in the manufacture of explosives.

When it is understood the German government has an interest in practically every factory in the empire, and while a great many of their products have been put on the market at a price in which there was absolutely no profit as far as the manufacture of certain products was concerned, at the same time the by-products were utilized by the government at a fair price.

Makes Nitrogen from Air.

While Norway, with her unlimited water supply and electrical power, has been able to produce nitrogen from the air and is producing a quantity of it now in the shape of cynamid for fertilizers, and it can be made at a profit, it cannot be produced by the use of steam power, at a reasonable cost, as a commercial product. Still Germany has built and has in operation to-day one large factory of 52,000 horse power for the sole purpose of producing nitrogen from the air.

It has been the invariable policy of the German government for a number of years to educate chemists, with the ultimate idea that they should continue along these lines in the smaller manufactures, as well as the larger ones, and always with the aim of conserving some product, which they could control and which would have a bearing on the war.

Undoubtedly Germany for the last twenty years, or since the Franco Prussian war, has been storing and conserving every particle of material that she could in preparing this war for years, and, while she was not sure the raw material that the Allies are possessing at present, she has what is more needed [illegible] the technical men who are able to produce the explosives and other [illegible] for the war from elemental material

[illegible] invaded Belgium she acquired a [illegible] tion, along with other spoils of [illegible] of [illegible] And [illegible] had on hand [illegible] that acquired [illegible] it is undoubtedly a fact that she is nearing the end of her supply and must look to her chemists to supply the deficiency.

The chemists of England, France and Belgium are not so fostered by their respective countries as are the chemists in Germany, and they work along more independent lines, yet many are most brilliant and learned men in their lines. And while to-day the war game as it relates to material for explosives is about equal, the Allies have the world to draw on, and there is little question that they will catch up with Gerany in the production of explosives and ordnance.

Chemists Face New Situation.

The chemists have been called to face a situation never known before in the history of the world. While the chemists of the Allies have not been working along one definite line, as in Germany, to wit, the furtherance of war material, they have had a wide and diversified field of work in all lines—metallurgy, explosives, aeronautics, mechanics and agriculture.

Up to date there has been no really new explosive attained by the chemists in spite of rumors that come quite often. There have been some new discoveries in the matter of explosive shells. It was observed shortly after the battle of the Marne that a number of French soldiers had been killed by shells that left hardly a mark—only a little cut or slit like a wound by a knife blade. A number of subjects were sent to the hospital and post-mortem examination showed that the wound was made by a thin piece, or scale, of steel that had cut an artery or large vein in its transit through the body, and the soldier had bled to death internally.

The French commenced experiments with the aid of their metallurgical chemists, and are making shells of a high grade of steel, high in carbon, quenched from a high temperature, and not tempered by reheating. When the shell explodes it scatters the steel in thin flakes like silver quarters in size and spreads them out in a fan shape direction. These new shells can be made easier and less expensively than under old conditions. There has been a tendency to much larger projectiles and ordnance. Undoubtedly before long there will have to be some change in the explosives, but up to now the explosives have been able to accomplish the desired end.

The chemists on both sides have been called on to devise new forms and more compact food for the armies, and even for the civilian population at home. German chemists have done a vast amount of work in finding substitutes for wheat, flour and certain grains. The substitution of potato flour and rye and barley flour in certain proportions for wheat flour has given a very nutritive bread, and one that is far cheaper than an entire wheat bread. Also, the Germans are using many plants for green food, which for some time past have been considered as weeds. Peat, which is found in large quantities in Germany, is being used to a large extent in the producing of coal tar byproducts, which formerly had been derived only from coal tar proper.

The supply of gasolene has been cut off several times, and alcohol and benzol have been used as substitutes, and the chemist has been called upon to produce gasolene from sources not used before, and the mechanical engineer has been asked to do his part.

Contrast to Old Wars.

In former years when two nations declared war it was an almost invariable rule as to the following conditions

First, it was money to carry on the war.

Second, it was sufficiency of ordinances and ordinary arms.

Third, it was to have a trained army, with its competent generals and officers.

Fourth, it was to fight in the open and win by the army that was superior in strategic tactics and the bravery and morale of the army

The present war has developed an entirely new idea in the matter of warfare, as it seems to be almost entirely a matter of trench fighting, of unlimited and unheard of amounts of ammunition in the shape of high explosives and shells and in the use of gases and various forms of offensive and defensive means never before used, and small arms that rain bullets like a tropical storm, and it is up to the chemists to supply the explosives necessary

The accompanying table will give an idea of what is necessary to and what is used to make the explosives. And think of the quantities used in one hour's [illegible] as reported in a recent battle; and it is not only the explosives in the shell, but the explosives to fire them

This table, reduced to the five or six ordinary in[illegible] nitric acid, glycerine, sulphuric [illegible] and coal tar products, the chemist is now called upon to [illegible] these with [illegible] and Soon Down to Elements.

At the rate the Germans and the Allies have been using explosives they will soon be down to the elements, and the Germans at least will be down to the point where it will be the battle of the chemists to supply the demand, and the Allies to bring forth enough chemists to use the natural resources of the world in the shape of cotton, nitre, &c., to supply the demand.

"This is a war of nitric acid. That is essential for the manufacture of high explosives, such as dynamite, guncotton, nitroglycerine and trinitrotoluol," said Professor Norton, of the Department of Commerce, at Washington. "Just at this time the belligerents are about evenly matched in their ability to get nitric acid. Germany, with the best force of expert chemists in the world, is able to get all she needs from the air. The other countries, not so well equipped for the production of nitric acid in this way, have access to the natural resources of the globe to supply their stock. There are a greater number of chemists in Germany than in all other parts of the world. As a result chemistry there is further advanced than in any other country.

"Germany practically has a monopoly on the potash supply of the world, but for nitric acid she has been almost dependent up to this time. She obtained the nitric acid from Chili saltpetre. Now that supply is cut off. But in the last two years the chemists of Germany have developed a process whereby they are able to obtain a large supply of nitric acid from the air. This is accomplished by the method of Professor Harber for taking nitrogen from the air and changing it to ammonia, which is then developed into nitric acid by the method of Professor Ostwald. Large factories have been built and much nitric acid is being turned out by the combination of these two processes.

"Germany is well supplied with iron and zinc, but the amount of copper is limited. The chemists there already are perfecting a system to replace copper with aluminum and zinc in the manufacture of shells and cartridges.

Limited Copper Supply.

Belgium's natural resources are limited to iron, zinc and coal, and Germany controls them now. France is self-contained in the matter of food, producing enough beef and wheat for her own needs. She is dependent on Germany for her potash supply. The coal is abundant, but the best mines now are in the hands of the Germans. She is dependent on foreign countries for her supply of nitric acid.

"England is totally dependent on foreign countries for plant food, nitrogen, phosporic acid and potash. Coal and iron are abundant. England imports all the copper she uses. She is a large importer of meat and wheat.

"Italy is destitute of metals and coal. She is least fitted to carry on a war based on natural resources. Her chemists, too, are inferior to those of the other countries.

"The chemists of France, England and Belgium are below the standard of those of Germany.

"Russia, chemically, is behind all the other countries engaged in the conflict, but her enormous territory permits the production of sufficient supplies of food. Coal and iron are abundant. There is some copper, but Russia lacks the organization of industries necessary for the highest efficiency in time of war.

"Austria is better fitted than Italy in natural resources, however, for she has plenty of coal and some iron.

"Summing it all up, Germany is best equipped of any of the countries to carry on a war based on natural resources. On the other hand, however, the Allies have access to the markets of the world."

England Wasted Resources.

As to England, the English chemist has been for years brought up and educated to a certain amount of independence. He will not submit to any dictation, and follows along whatever lines best suit his inclination, which are for the most part commercial lines, and when there is a large enough individual profit to interest him. And he has been rather wasteful of his resources. While the coal of England will produce more coal tar than that of any other country, the greater portion of it has been allowed to go to waste, and until within a very short time ago hardly any use had been made of it.

While England, with all her colonies, is at present able to control the sea and able to get the raw products—cotton, nitre and a great many other essentials—she is by the necessary chemists and workers in her laboratories to keep pace with Germany. England has certainly some eminent chemists and men of initiative, but she lacks the trained host of technical men in the laboratory works that Germany possesses.

Belgium, while producing a large amount of iron and being able to produce at a low price many chemicals necessary for explosives, also has a number of excellent chemists and would be able to increase the effectiveness of the Allies' output of explosives were it not for the fact that Belgium is under the control of the Germans at present, and they are using it to the full extent.

France is in better shape than England, but is behind Germany in the production of chemicals necessary for the production of explosives. France has better access to the world for her crude supplies than Germany and Austria and more chemists trained along regular lines than England, but is dependent on imports for nitric acid and cotton. But her coal mines are in Germany's possession at present.

Italy is far behind either England or France and is but a small factor along these lines. While able to obtain cotton, nitre and some other elements of explosives, she has neither the factories nor the educated chemists who are able to take charge of factories producing explosives.

It will be seen from these tables that while Germany is surrounded and virtually cut off from a number of elementary supplies, still, through her superior chemical research and capacity of her laboratories, she is able to supply the deficiency for a limited time.

Expect Much from Russia.

Russia has not been counted in this list, as the quantities of her manufacture, so far as laboratories are concerned, are small in comparison with the others, but she has some brilliant and talented chemists. With her natural resources and the training of her technical men she will soon be able to contribute largely to the total of the Allies.

Table of Modern Explosives

I. Used in guns as smokeless powder:—
- (a) Nitrocelluloses, with or without.
- (b) Nitroglycerin.

II. Used in shells:—

Various aromatic nitro-compounds, as picric acid (lyddite, melinite), trinitrotoluol (trotyl), tetranitromethylaniline, tetranitronaphthalin, and many others.

III. Used in mines, torpedoes and for other purposes:—
- (a) Nitrocelluoses (guncotton).
- (b) Aromatic nitro-compounds.
- (c) Dynamite-nitroglycerin-Fuller's earth and (or) with or without other substances.
- (d) Ammoniumnitrate mixtures.
- (e) Chlorate and perchlorate mixtures.
- (f) Nitrated chlorhydrins.
- (g) Black Powder.

Exploders (detonators), fuses, &c.
Fulminate of mercury.

Raw materials:—

Cotton, wood fibre and other forms of cellulose.
Sulphuric and nitric acids.
Various organic solvents:—Acetone, alcohols, ether, &c.
Glycerine.
Sulphuric and nitric acids.
Benzol, toluol, xylol, naphthalin, phenol, aniline and many other products directly or indirectly derived from coal tar.
Nitric and sulphuric acids, solvents, &c.
Starches, glue, oils, paraffin and others.
Ammonia nitric acid, &c.
Alkaline or alkali earth bases, chlorine obtained from its salts electrolytically, or with sulphuric acid and manganese dioxide.
Glycerin, chlorin, sulphuric and nitric acids.
Charcoal, sulphur and nitrates.
Various inorganic salts and oxidizable or inactive organic compounds.
Mercury, nitric acid, alcohol
Various nitrate and other mixtures.

A country that is endowed with the elements and the natural resources required in a war or even for ordinary existence, but which has no chemists, is in a very much worse position than a country which has chemists and technical men but has the lack of certain natural resources. For it is possible for the chemist to obtain from the air certain requisites and from the ordinary products of the soil, and by chemical research and work change them into compounds that he needs, while, on the other hand, a country may possess all the cotton and nitric acid and other crude ingredients necessary, but if unable to combine them scientifically they are practically useless.

This war is not one of nitric acid, cotton or glycerine, but one in which the chemist, mechanic and others must operate together. While the furtherance of the war depends upon the strategic force of her generals and the mechanical excellence of her engineers, also the financiers, the chemist in this war has been and will be one of the biggest factors.

The question naturally arises, while we have in the United States the greatest natural resources in the world, Is it not probable that we would run short of nitrogen?

We give the opinion of one of the best authorities of to-day on nitrogen, who in a personal interview, withholding the use of his name, explained the present status of our nitrogen resources.

Chili Supplies Nitrogen to United States.

"The nitrogen of the world has until recent years come from the one great storehouse of nature, known as the Chilian nitrate beds, where through the course of ages vast deposits of sodium nitrate in varying stages of purity, but commercially available, have been deposited. Fully one-half of the government expenses of Chili have been paid by the export taxes placed upon these nitrates

"The nitrates are mined and to a certain degree concentrated and then shipped throughout the world The United States has not imported any great quantities of nitrates direct, but has bought its supplies in more concentrated form from European sources It has been stated with considerable accuracy that the supply of nitrates in Chili would at the present rate of world consumption supply the world for from twenty-five to fifty years

"The use of these nitrates in explosives and in vast quantities for fertilizer purposes has shown a tendency to rapidly increase as the nitrates of the soil have become depleted by repeated crops If the United States had war, assuming that the seas were not closed, an adequate supply of nitrate could be obtained from Chili, but if through any combination of circumstances the Chilian nitrates ceased to be available there is not enough supply of nitrates in the rest of the world which could be drawn upon.

"The United States if deriven the opportunity to use natural nitrates, would be thrown upon its own resources for the manufacture of nitric acid. There are at present in the United States no plants either equipped mechanically or with technical skill for the production of nitrates from the air either through electrification of the air or through the use of calcium carbide for the production of cyanamid. The production of cyanamid upon a comparatively small scale is in successful operation in Canada in one plant.

"While eighty per cent of our atmosphere is composed of pure nitrogen gas, no process of successfully transforming this gas into nitrogen products was developed until within the last ten years. Nature produces nitric acid by electrical discharges in the atmosphere, and the resulting nitrates are washed to the earth by the rain and in the course of ages the nitrogen supply in the soil is built up. With the use of enormous electrical power the same idea has been put into operation and the electrification of the air is one of the now successful means of procuring the nitrogen of the air in various forms for use in the arts and industries.

New Carbide Process Possible.

"Another process has been developed through the use of calcium carbide, which, when heated to the temperature of 1,400 degrees, will absorb a certain percentage of nitrogen when the air is blown through it and becomes cyanamid. From this various forms of nitrogen can be produced. Both these processes are difficult and entirely dependent upon a cheap source of power. The cheapest source of water power has been in Norway, where, owing to the enormous fall and steady supply of water close to the deep sea ports, the industry of producing nitrogen from the air and by means of calcium carbide has been developed to such an extent that approximately 300,000 horse power is thus utilized Germany gave origin to the industry and capitalized an important part of the electrification process and has recently developed works for the production of nitrogen from the air in Germany, apparently for military purposes, as commercially it would be unprofitable to produce nitrogen in this manner by the use of other than the cheapest water power.

"In case of war, which would prevent the United States from obtaining nitrogen either from the natural source or from Norway, it would be necessary for the United States to use its water power for the production of nitrogen. In an emergency like war commercial cost is of less importance than the ability to actually produce the substances needed.

"The American water powers which are used for industrial purposes not necessary for the conduct of war could be turned into sources for the production of nitrogen. While the time element and the development of skill in the production would be important factors and might delay the actual production of sufficient nitrogen to carry on the war, no doubt American genius would meet the conditions within a year.

Not Dependent on Foreigners.

"It cannot be said, therefore, that the United States would be dependent upon any foreign country for its source of nitrogen, which enters so largely into the manufacture of explosives, when the government realized its necessities and set American genius to work to meet its requirements

"Some means should be devised for the development of these industries in the United States, so that there would be no delay in the production of adequate supplies of this important element without waiting for an emergency to bring the matter to the attention of the government Had war involving the United States occurred ten years ago and by any means the supply of nitrates from Chili had been cut off, the United States would have been utterly defenseless as regards nitric acid."

"But it is a fact that we have enough chemists and technical men to operate these large plants? Is it not a fact that most of the chemists that we employ in our factories to-day are either of foreign birth or naturalized citizens?" are suggestions made by another scientist. "Would it not be a wise precaution, from what the war has taught us to the present date, for the United States to establish a technical school, the same as a post graduate college, for the training of chemists along the line of explosives and other munitions of war? Our chemists are and have been doing most excellent work along agricultural lines, which is just as necessary as explosives, but if we are to be an independent and self supporting nation, we need a great many more chemists In some manner the chemist must be encouraged as a young man to enter this field and make a life study of it

"Again, the question arises, Have we enough technical chemists with executive ability, able to start, build and equip a large plant for the production along any of the lines necessary for the production of explosives, of metals and of agriculture in its various branches?

"The recent innovation of Secretary Daniels in calling to his aid the most intellectual and highest trained minds in the country as an advisory board has met with an immediate response The United States invented and put to practice, use the aeroplane, the submarine, and the best explosives in the world are made here We certainly will be able in this wide country to find enough natural products to supply our need, possibly excepting nitrogen, to hold our own against the world

Praises Advisory Board.

"But we need an advisory board just what is now under way and we need men like Thomas A. Edison, the greatest of inventors Alexander Graham Bell, who perfected the telephone Simon Lake, builder of the submarine Orville Wright, inventor of heavier than air flying machines Hudson Maxim, inventor of explosives, Henry Ford, expert in gasolene engine construction; Nikola Tesla, electrical expert and inventor of turbines, and John Hays Hammond, Jr., who has experimented successfully with the control of torpedoes and boats by wireless.

"True, the cranks will put in an appearance, but they, too, are needed. Langley was considered a crank, yet the inception of the planes on the aeroplane was due to him"

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

HER JAMIE

A Historical Story of England and America.

By F. A. MITCHEL

It was a sorry day for me when my father came to me and told me that I must give up all thought of my Jamie and marry Sir Ernest Merivale. The one I loved, but I knew that he was unsteady; the other I respected and was sure that he would make me a good husband. There were whisperings concerning Jamie that I did not like. It was said that after the defeat of the cavaliers by the roundheads he had followed in the footsteps of so many of the king's adherents and taken to the road to make a living. As for Sir Ernest, he was as steady as a rock and as true as steel. But Jamie had won me by that sweet smile of his, and I did not love Sir Ernest.

The Merivales had lived near us for many years. Ernest and Jamie were cousins, though Ernest was a good ten years older than Jamie. Ernest was an only son, and when he came into the title and estates by the death of his father his mother urged him to marry that he might have an heir. I was then a little girl, and he said he would wait till I had grown, and he would marry none but me. But of this I knew nothing at that time, though I noticed he seemed fond of me and gave me many a trinket.

Sir Ernest did not approve of many of the king's acts and sympathized with the parliament. Though he did not take up arms against the king, the royalists were bitter against him and vowed that when they had overcome their enemies they would punish him for not defending his sovereign.

When father told me that I must give up Jamie and marry Sir Ernest I shut myself up in my room and wept bitter tears. But after awhile I grew calm and began to think, not like a foolish girl caught by a bauble, but as one called upon to decide between that bauble and the promise of a life of comfort. And yet the former was unattainable, for Jamie had no fortune, and I knew that the report concerning him was true. He had made himself an outlaw.

There was nothing left me but to marry Sir Ernest, and that I did. He was very loving and tender with me, treating me as a bit of china that he feared to break. When he said to me, "Joanna, I would not have you do violence to your heart, and I conjure you not to marry me without your love," I was ashamed that I was about to do that very thing. But I resolved that I would put Jamie out of my mind and live only for my husband.

When King Charles II. was restored to the throne those who had sworn vengeance upon Sir Ernest trumped up charges against him. Knowing that he was in great danger and wishing to keep it a secret from me or perhaps fearing that his enemies would inflict some direct punishment on me, he sent me to an aunt in Scotland to abide till the storm should have blown over and he might again feel a measure of safety.

While I was in Scotland my husband sent me letters by the post, but there came a long interval between his writings, and I wondered. When a month had passed and no word had come from him I told my aunt that I would go back to England. Then she told me that Sir Ernest had been arrested for high treason against the king, that his estates had been sequestered and that, having no home, I should remain with her in Scotland.

Despite her pleadings I left her and made the journey to London, for my husband had been sent to the tower, and I expected to find him there. Moreover, I intended to go to the king and plead for him. But when I reached the capital I found that the king was so engrossed with milady Castlemaine that I could not get a hearing. I went to the tower and asked to see my husband, but was told by the lieutenant that he was not there. He had been received there as a prisoner, but after a time had been delivered to Lord Carbondale by order of the king.

Now, I knew that Lord Carbondale was the bitterest of all Sir Ernest's enemies, and it was he who had made the threats to be revenged for my husband's support of the parliament, though this was not the true cause of his lordship's enmity. The two had been fellow students at Oxford, and Ernest had accused Carbondale of cheating at cards. I feared that this enemy, with the king's permission, had taken my husband's life or had kept him a secret prisoner. I spent months trying to find a trace of him, but no trace could I find.

One day there came news from America that the English had taken from the Dutch the town of New Amsterdam and renamed it for the king's brother, the Duke of York. In the account of these proceedings mention was made of one Merivale. Could this be my husband? If so, what did it mean that he had gone to this new country, leaving me, his wife, in England ignorant of his going? I believed that his enemies had contrived to have him sent out of the country or that he had been given the choice between death and betaking himself to a remote locality, where he could make no effort to regain his estate, which had passed into the possession of Lord Carbondale for services to the king's father during the parliamentary war. Possibly he might have fled thither, as certain regicides had done.

I saw no hope of learning the truth as to whether this Merivale mentioned as being in New York was my husband without going there to see for myself. So I took ship for that country, though my friends endeavored to dissuade me. I was sick at heart at seeing those with whom I would have to voyage for so many weeks, for they were a motley crew. Some were criminals, who had been given their lives and liberty provided they would go to the new continent. Some were broken down spendthrifts, and there were among these a sprinkling of the younger sons of gentlemen.

When I sailed up the bay to New York I saw that the country was beautiful. But the people proved uncouth—that is, they were living in conditions far different from what pertained to England. As soon as I had found an abiding place I began a search for the man I believed to be my husband; but, although there were few people in the town, I did not find him.

But one day I met a person who told me that he had knowledge of one Merivale, who had set out northward to engage in the trade of skins of wild animals. I was discouraged at this and began to think that I had been unwise in coming on so long a journey to find a husband who did not think it worth his while to inform me of his whereabouts. Moreover, my informant could not tell me what manner of man this person was, and he might not be my husband after all.

However, having come so far, I resolved to go further. I took passage in a sloop bound for a trading post on the west bank at the headwaters of Hudson's river, and reached it after a few days' travel. At this trading port, which is now called Albany, I made inquiries for the Merivale I had followed so far, only to learn that he was out trapping wild animals for their skins.

So I must needs wait for him to come in. While I waited I received a letter that had been brought by one who had come in a ship soon after I had left England and sent on to me at Albany, which informed me that it was believed my husband had been put on a ship by his enemies and sent to America, but the writer did not know for what port the vessel had sailed.

I was now encouraged to believe that the man I was looking for was my husband, though I could not understand how he could have contented himself to engage in an occupation instead of returning to me or sending for me. And yet, while making a living, he might have written for me to come to him.

But this man for whom I waited did not return, and in time I learned that he inhabited a trapper's cabin near a town to the northward called Schenectady, where skins were brought in by the Indians. This town was not far distant, and I went over there with the next party that journeyed thither. As soon as I arrived I made inquiries and learned that a trapper named Merivale had built him a cabin on the bank across the Mohawk river, near the council grounds of the Indians.

By this time I had learned much self reliance and, securing the loan of a boat, I rowed myself across the river and directed my steps toward the cabin which had been pointed out to me from the opposite shore. As I left the boat a man came out of the cabin and stood looking down at me. He did not have the appearance of my husband, but as he advanced toward me there was something in his walk that set my heart wildly beating. As he came nearer I looked upon his features with a view to noting if I had seen him before, but they were covered with a thick beard and I could not be certain. When we came close together both stopped and peered into each other's faces. I was about to fall backward in a swoon when he sprang forward and caught me in his arms.

He was my Jamie.

Then and there he told somewhat of those things that had happened to him since we had parted.

When he heard of my marriage he resolved to join those who were going to America and bury himself where he would never again see me, and where he might make a more honorable living than on the road. From New York he had drifted to Albany and thence to a point nearer the grounds where furs were to be obtained.

I had set out from England to seek my husband and had found a lover whom I had discarded for that husband. And now I must return without either the husband or the lover. But Jamie knew what I did not know. He had received information which concerned us vitally. His cousin had not been sent to America, but had been made away with. Since Jamie was thus made the legal heir to the title and estates, which were entailed, Carbondale had hunted for him with a view to turning him over to the law to be dealt with as a highwayman. If he could secure his execution none would be left to dispute Carbondale's right to the property. But of all this Jamie had not heard till after his arrival in America.

There is much to tell of how in due time Jamie and I were married, how I returned to England and secured a pardon for him from the king and how Jamie followed me and eventually, as a favor to me, his estates were returned to him. But of this more at another time. We both lived to see the Duke of York as King James II. driven to France, and William and Mary proclaimed king and queen of England.

Entire Family Stricken With Cholera.

YOUNGEST CHILD DIED.

Mrs. E. Slade, 376 Logan Ave., Toronto, Ont., writes: "When I first arrived in Canada, nearly four years ago, my entire family was stricken with cholera from which the youngest child died. Soon after a friend recommended Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, and acting on this advice I administered it to all who were suffering with the most gratifying results. Since that first attack my children have been subject to stomach troubles, but on the first symptoms I resort to 'Dr. Fowler's,' and it always brings relief. I have immense faith in this medicine and always keep a bottle on hand, also I never fail to recommend it to anyone who is similarly troubled."

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry has been on the market for the past 70 years, and has become so universally used, that many firms have gone so far as to try and produce a substitute for it, and even claiming similar names, and saying it is "The Same" or "Just As Good."

Do not accept their word for this as these no-name, no-reputation, worthless imitations may be dangerous to your health.

Hallam the Amateur.

Douglas Hallam, wounded in action against the Turks a few days ago, is remembered her almost as much for his amateur interest in the stage as for any of his other random, restless exploits. Hallam took part in one of the Press Club productions some years ago, wrote parts of the performance, had usually up his sleeve some scenario for a new play of an unconventional sort, and was usually looking round for some chance to show his peculiar ability. When he was a reporter on a Toronto newspaper, which he became just for the experience, he always had some novel way of wanting to do an assignment. When he took up with camera work he blew one of his hands nearly to smithereens with flashlight powder. At the University, he was always seething with some protest. When he went into business he always seemed to hate it. When he took up with flying it was because he was weary of routine and wanted a new sensation. His enlistment in the Navy was as a flying-man. Before he gets through with the war Lt. Hallam will have accumulated enough new experiences to last him a while, and may settle down in Toronto to do something that won't leave him eternally dissatisfied.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

A PRACTICAL HOUSE DRESS AND CAP.

By Anabel Worthington.

7190

It has become a custom for women to wear house dresses when employed in their duties in the morning hours rather than the old time wrappers, which, however comfortable, were not exactly the costume for a tidy housewife.

The dress shown in the illustration is practical and at the same time attractive. The blouse is altogether plain, with a centre front closing and an ornamental collar. The sleeves are of the raglan type, so pretty in their unusual lines. These sleeves may be made full length or shorter, as preferred.

The skirt, which is joined to the blouse with either the raised or the regulation waist line, is made with three gores and with just a suspicion of fulness at the top. This is placed in the back. Joined in at the waist line is the upper edge of a pocket which is large and serviceable, the strap attachment preventing its tearing out of the skirt, even when weighted down with its contents.

The cap is round and is gathered along the edges, but a plain band finishes the front around the face.

These dresses are always made of wash materials and generally of gingham or of linen. Plain colors are used to trim the check and striped fabrics and a contrasting color to trim the plain ones.

The pattern of this dress, No. 7,190, is cut in sizes 34 to 44 inches bust measure and will require for the medium size 5¼ yards of 36 inch material, with ½ yard of contrasting material for trimming.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

Turtle and Farina.

Turtle and farina taken together represent to those who live on the Amazon, be they white, negro or Indian or one of the numerous crossbreeds, what the salmon does to the Alaska Indian the cocoanut to the south sea islander and rice to the Mongolian. A short run of salmon in the Alaska rivers, a crop failure in the paddy fields of China, a hurricane in the south sea islands, all reduce to the same thing—famine. On the Amazon a shortage of turtles may be tided over by a plenitude of farina, or vice versa. A failure of both turtles and farina in the same year brings great and widespread distress. Farina is a crude, locally made product of the root of the manioc, a further refinement of which results in the tapioca of commerce. Farina under a number of different names is more or less of a staple with the natives in all of tropical America from the West Indies to Paraguay.

Colors and Heat.

In an attempt to illustrate graphically the relative values for summer and winter wear of different colors in dress materials an interesting experiment was recently conducted, says Popular Mechanics. Four strips of cloth made of the same material and weight, but of different colors, were placed on a cake of ice and exposed to the sun. The fabrics were white, yellow, red and black. The result showed in a striking way how white reflects the sun's rays, while black absorbs them.

The ice covered by the piece of white cloth was not melted to any appreciable degree during the test, that under the yellow strip was slightly depressed, a deep cut was formed beneath the red cloth and a groove approximately twice as deep as that covered by the latter was melted under the black fabric.

Untimely Deaths.

Probably half the deaths that do not come from old age are due to ignorance. It is knowledge organized into sanitation, diet rules, medicine and surgery that has so wonderfully reduced those terrible death rates of medieval times and will reduce them still more in the days that are to come.—Outlook.

A Strange Conversion

By F. A. MITCHEL

A tramp called for food at a handsome country residence. The lady of the house was sitting on the veranda. She was a woman to interest herself in building up those who needed building up and ordered a maid to bring a substantial meal out on to the veranda and place it on a table. Then she invited the tramp to help himself. While he ate she questioned him as to the cause of his living a life of beggarly indolence. His replies were not very satisfactory and indicated that he followed the life of a tramp because he preferred it to work.

The lady, having fed him, gave him some money, and he departed. When her husband came home that evening she mentioned to him what she had done. He chided her for wasting her sympathy on one who was evidently undeserving, whereupon she declared that all persons were in a sense undeserving; that the mere fact of a person's being in bad condition, even though through his own fault, was a legitimate object for sympathy, and in any event it was an advantage to the giver to lend a helping hand.

A year passed. The tramp was passing over the same route as before and bethought himself of the aid and comfort he had derived at the place he was approaching. He was no more worthy of help than before, felt no gratitude; he only wished to get another meal and some more money. On reaching the house he saw evidences of a funeral taking place in it. The obsequies were for the lady who had befriended him, and since she had rendered herself much beloved on account of her charities a large number of poor people were in attendance.

The tramp joined those who were passing to have a last look at their benefactress. He noticed on the finger of the dead a diamond ring. He further noticed that when the lid of the coffin was put on the ring was not removed. When the funeral procession went to the cemetery he joined the throng and saw the body lowered into the grave. Then the mourners dispersed, and the tramp, after carefully noting the position of the lot, went away.

When night came he went to the house from which his benefactress had been carried, stole a spade and a shovel from among the garden tools and, going to the cemetery, began to remove the earth that had been thrown into the grave of his benefactress. Having uncovered the coffin, he took a screwdriver from his pocket and removed the lid. Taking the hand, he was surprised that there was in it a little warmth. The diamond ring was there, and he attempted to remove it. Failing to do so, he took out his knife to cut off the finger. Feeling something warm on his hand, he struck a match and saw that it was blood.

Leaping from the grave, he ran away as fast as his legs would carry him. Then he stopped and began to think. The most likely solution of what he had stumbled on was that it was one of those very rare cases of a trance having been mistaken for death. His benefactress was lying uncovered in a grave. What should he do? If he rescued her he would be obliged to confess that he had gone there to steal the ring on her finger.

There are natures so bereft of what is good that they can only be affected by some momentous event. The tramp was one of these. A sudden revulsion came over him. Returning to the grave, he found the body as he had left it. Removing it from its cold bed, he wrapped it in his coat and carried it to the nearest house and restoratives were applied.

For a long while the invalid hung between life and death. As soon as there was any hope for her recovery her husband was notified of what had occurred, but not till this was assured was the matter broken to any other member of the family. Then they knew of it by the lady being brought to her home.

As soon as the tramp had done all in his power to save his benefactress, from whose dead body he had intended to steal a jewel, taking advantage of the excitement attending the efforts to restore her, he disappeared. When the lady became convalescent she asked what had happened, but it was not thought advisable to tell her. Seeing that her finger had been badly cut, she inquired into the cause. A story was invented to satisfy her.

One thing puzzled her. Her husband, who had formerly been unsympathetic with her charitable work, which was not a part of organized aid to the poor, but, rather, spontaneous, had suddenly become an unreasoning giver.

The tramp again visited the house where he had received aid and comfort, but not as a tramp. The lady, as at the time of his first visit, was seated on the veranda when she saw a well dressed man coming up the walk. She did not recognize him till he made himself known and told her that it was through her he had become a changed man. But he exercised sufficient caution to discover that she did not know she had been in a grave, and he did not tell her. She asked him if there was anything she could do for him, and he replied that there was. He gave one-tenth of all he earned to criminals, and he thought that his gifts would have more effect if they passed through her hands. She accepted the trust. He made his first donation, and they were continued regularly during his life.

CHILD AND WAR TALES

Should Children be Instructed on Details of Battle's Horrors?

Many parents still halt between two alternatives. Are children to be kept from war influence, or ought they to participate as far as they can in the lessons of the times? At one moment it seems that the fact of war is too vast to be allowed to strain the childish imagination, and too terrible to be allowed to sully the childish dream. The next moment we remember that the child of to-day will be the man or woman of to-morrow. But then, again, a counter-reaction sets in. The "little citizen" verges closely upon the little prig; cannot the children leave the war to bury its dead, and carry on their own new life, fresh and unsmirched, into a coming Europe that shall be quelled and pacified? It would be an infinite shame if we sent them forth into the future filled only with our own vague questionings; better leave them to think things out, later, in the clearer air that will replace the fog of war.

Should be Taught Simply

Really both these views, between which the conscious parent swings, are aspects of the same truth. Children must realize the war; but they must also keep their outlook fresh and natural. They must know, but they must not be overburdened; they must have the elementary realism without the elemental horror. This presents a difficult problem. How are children to realise, and yet to escape all the pain that realization means. We have a tendency to shirk reasons and explanations; children have not. We can avoid over-emphasis upon the facts of war by diverting the child's attention to such simple explanations of the causes of the war as he can understand. The horrors of war can be left on one side. The simple truth is paramount that mistrust and jealousy breed war as they breed other childish quarrels. Put in such simple terms, what the statesman of yesterday failed to make out can be made obvious to the child of to-day, with the great object-lesson at hand of the war of to-day.

German Surgeons Use Celluloid

The German army surgeons in the field and in the hospitals have succeeded in saving the lives, or at least the limbs, of many wounded soldiers with the aid of celluloid. The method is simple. The wounds after their antiseptic treatment, are covered with very thin sheets of transparent celluloid which are fastened around the edges with adhesive plaster. This system enables the surgeon to watch the healing process closely without removing the bandage. The celluloid sheets are practically indestructible, and can be used times and again after proper sterilization.

Belgians to Farm in America

A party of Belgian farmers is settling on the land at Wilmington North Carolina, and the colony will be known as "La Petite Belgique." French will be spoken and every effort made to maintain the good feeling of the parent country. The colony will maintain itself by producing vegetables and fruit for the New York market. The farms have been prepared, the houses built and furnished, and the farms stocked.

THOROUGH CADORNO

Stories of Italy's Veteran Commander and Greatest Tactician

The son of a famous soldier, General Raphael Cadorno, who in the great struggles of 1848-9 earned the reputation of being one of Italy's military leaders, General Luigi Cadorno, Commander of the First Italian Army, has proved himself a military genius in every sense of the term. He is a recognized authority on the wars of the past four decades, and a fine strategist and tactician, his war treatises and manuals being the guide books of every Italian officer.

The Austrians are well aware that they have fighting against them a man who knows every inch of the north and northeast frontiers of Italy, and one whose lightning strategy is proverbial in military circles throughout Europe. General Cadorno's thoroughness is illustrated by the fact that for six years he tramped the passes of the Carinthian and Tyrolese Alps, notebook in hand, making a vantage point here and a death trap there. And it was the knowledge thus gained which enabled him at ultimate manœuvres to out-general everybody and led to his rapid promotion. It is related that in the manœuvres of 1911 he set himself to play the part of a defeated general. Orders miscarried, reinforcements came late, general confusion set in, and Cadorno's troops were surrounded. Then he set himself to extricate them, and carried out a retreat which was the marvel of the Italian tacticians. Since he was a boy of ten—he was born in 1850—General Cadorno has been learning soldiering, and he is rather fond of saying that he has scarcely passed the elementary stages. A silent martinet, he never forgives incompetence in his officers. At the same time he is the friend of every man, for he loves them all, and is ever considerate of their welfare. In 1881 General Cadorno married, and has a son and three daughters, two of whom are nuns.

Holland's Growing Army

The peace strength of the Netherlands' army—that is, the permanent staffs of all the units of the first line—amounted in 1913 to 1,543 officers and 21,412 non-commissioned officers and men. The total strength of the first field army is approximately 125,000 men with 152 guns. Holland has been training all available men, and can put an army of several hundred thousands into the field. Every Dutch citizen is liable to personal service in the army (or navy) from the age of nineteen to forty. Actual service in the ranks is determined by lot, but substitution is not permitted.

As far as practicable, all men on cruisers and battleships have a bath before they go into action.

Italy's War Poet

"Viva D'Annunzio!" the people shouted in the Italian Chamber when, by 407 votes to 74, the country decided for war; and they hoisted shoulder high the greatest living poet of Italy, whose martial writings have so inspired his countrymen. It is said of D'Annunzio that he has sung Italy into war. An old cavalry officer, the poet knows what soldiering means.

D'Annunzio is a fascinating and extraordinary personality. He is the Beau Brummell of Italy, his dress extravagances having at times been the talk of the world. His wardrobe is said to be more extensive and costly than that of any millionaire living. He has a new suit for every day in the year, the sartorial artists of Rome and Paris contributing to his wardrobe. No doubt there is much exaggeration in the stories of his extravagances, but the fact remains that he has periodically set male fashions in Rome.

The poet's idea of the value of money may be gathered from the fact that when he was offered $15,000 to give a series of lectures in South America he telegraphed as follows: "I was disposed to cross the Atlantic; but not for a box of cigars. Thanks all the same."

D'Annunzio has a wonderful capacity for work, and he attributes his remarkable powers to the fact that all his work is done at night. At eight o'clock in the evening, after a substantial meal, he sits down at his desk, and as a rule works steadily on until nine o'clock next morning. One of his eccentricities is to follow the example of Mme. Bernhardt and have his own sepulchre built, requisitioning for the work the services of one of the most famous Italian architects.

When Many Won Crosses

Dr. Douglas, and four young soldiers of the 24th Regiment, named Bell, Cooper Griffiths, and Murphy, won Victoria Crosses, five in all, by what was practically a plucky exhibition of amateur lifeboat saving, they having put off in their boat to the rescue of the crew of the sailing ship Assam Valley, cast away some days before on the wild and savage island of Little Andaman, in the Bay of Bengal. This constitutes the biggest batch of Crosses won at one time, with the single exception of Rorke's Drift, for which eleven were awarded.

THE TURKS CUT OFF ON GALLIPOLI PENINSULA

100,000 TURKS ARE CUT OFF BY NEW BRITISH MOVE AT DARDANELLES

Eventual Victory and Control of European Side of the Straits Expected Within a Few Weeks, Announces Special Cable----Fooled the Turks By Landing Troops to Strike at the Line of Communications.

Special Cable:

MUDROS, Dardanelles, Aug. 21.—The latest British army moves on Gallipoli have eclipsed anything in history and eventual victory and control of the European side of the Dardanelles within a few weeks is fully expected. The British army has smashed the Turks' communications line between Constantinople and Gallipoli with tremendous force and it is thought the strategic success resulting compare with equal effect to the fall of Warsaw upon the Balkan situation. The Allies gave impression of invading Asia Minor and the Turks prepared reinforcements to defend the coast. In the night the Allies landed thousands of troops at many places from destroyers. In great force the British invaded the Peninsula at Suvla Bay where the Turks were unprepared. A large fleet gathered in the Gulf of Saros. The troops advanced four miles inland severing the communications of 100,000 Turks defending the Peninsula. Retreat is impossible. The Turks must fight or surrender. The Turks hurriedly mobilized and with reinforcements began the greatest battle yet fought. During the night 70,000 Turks mobilized and in the morning flung themselves against the British line and a terrific battle ensued all day under the Asiatic sun. At night the British line formed into a semi-circle centring on Suvla May. After dark thousands were digging trenches to secure secure the positions. The Turks threw man battalions against the diggers, but were repulsed. The Allied lines consolidated themselves beyond the range of the warships' guns.

LONDON, Aug. 21.—Pessimism over the bad news from all the battle-fronts during last week has somewhat increased, though the preparations in various fields which already are making themselves felt give rise to confidence in many circles. The new German submarine campaign will be conquered and a great change is expected in Flanders and the Dardanelles where the Canadians will share prominently in the work. The enormous losses inflicted on the German eastern armies are beginning to be felt, though the Russian situation continues dark. London expects a continuous attempts of submarine activity and Zeppelin raids, because of Germany's desire to conclude the war at any cost.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 21. — A German Zeppelin heavily laden with bombs was shot down by Russian anti-iar- craft guns while approaching the railway centre of Vilna, east of Kovno. The crew was captured.

BERLIN, Aug. 21.—Gen. Von Gallawitz's forces have captured the City of Bielsk, it was officially announced this afternoon.

A new German war loan providing $2,500,000,000 for war purposes was passed by the unanimous vote of the Reichstag to-day.

Italian Move Against Turkey ---Time Limit For Reply Expires

Formal Declaration of War Is Expected at Any Moment—Over 6,000 Austrians Seriously Wounded on the Austro-Italian Front

ROME, Aug 21. The time limit fixed by the Italian Government for Turkey's reply to Italy's final demands expired yesterday and a Cabinet Council is now in session considering the situation. The Turkish Ambassador here has not conferred with Baron Sonnino, the Foreign Minister, since the Foreign Office is communicating with the Pope exclusively through the Italian Ambassador at Constantinople.

The new offensive against the Austrians is being vigorously prosecuted. Heavy artillery fighting continues on the Tyrolean frontier. Two attempts were made to break through the enemy's lines at the Tolmein bridgehead. The first assault failed, but, nothing daunted, a second and more vigorous attack was launched with satisfactory results, part of the Austrian line being bent and the ground secured consolidated.

6,000 Austrians Wounded.

Over 6,000 Austrians, seriously wounded on the Austro-Italian front, are overcrowding the hospitals, schools and churches at Laibach. It is impossible to relieve the crowding by removing some of the wounded to other towns because of the lack of hospital trains. There are not enough doctors to handle the cases and the stock of medical supplies is insufficient for the needs of the wounded. As a result the mortality from lockjaw is very high and is increasing daily. The hospital service on the Austrian side of the Italian frontier is described as utterly disorganized.

Pope is Confident.

Pope Benedict granted an audience yesterday to Mgr. Bartolomasi, chaplain-general of the Italian army, who has just returned from the front, where he was in daily contact with King Victor Emmanuel. The Pope expressed great interest in the report made by the chaplain-general, and said that he was convinced of Italian victory. He sent his blessing to the army and apologized to Mgr. Bartolomasi for the fact that the chaplain-general's uniform, aide de camp was not allowed to enter the Vatican. The aide de camp was not allowed to enter the Vatican lest the neutrality of the Holy See should be compromised. At the same time Pope Benedict added that it was well known that his own brother and several members of his family are now on active service in the Italian army.

PUBLIC OPINION WAS CHALLENGED

Convention in Ireland Enthusiastic in Support of Irish Party and Boundless in Their Expression of Confidence in Redmond.

THE WEEKLY LETTER

(Copyright, 1915, Central News—By T. P. O'Connor)

LONDON, Aug. 19.—I have neglected Ireland lately, owing to my absorption in the war. It is time I should notice more than I have done, the very remarkable movement now on foot and in full swing, as already eabled, for the substitution of the coalition ministry, especially with Carson in its ranks, for a home rule ministry. This gave all prophets of evil who here, as in America, have dogged every step of Redmond on the road to that winning of home rule which he has now accomplished, opportunity for once more raising his voice.

It was declared that home rule was lost, and lost through Redmond's folly and timidity, and the faction proclaimed the belief that Mr. Asquith in the British Liberal party, would betray Ireland. Everything was for the worst in the worst of all possible worlds.

Redmond, Devlin, and Dillon at once resolved that this campaign should not be neglected; that public opinion in Ireland should be fully challenged and their verdict on the party be invited, whether favorable or unfavorable. Conventions were summoned in every county in Ireland, whereof nearly a dozen have taken place. These conventions were addressed by Redmond, Devlin, and Dillon, and the factionists showed their helplessness and insignificance by hiding away, while the gatherings were enthusiastic in the support of the Irish party, and boundless in their expression of affection and confidence in Redmond.

One of the most remarkable of these conventions took place at Donegal, this week.

Dr. O'Donnell, Bishop of Raphoe, the most powerful Bishop in Ireland, sent a letter wherein one sentence sums up his attitude. He wrote: "The generals in the theatre of war have more difficult strategy on hand than the Irish leaders have had for years, but none have such a record of achievement to their credit."

I make two extracts from the brilliant speech of Mr. Devlin for this optimism, his attitude in vindication of the Irish party on the war.

"It is fortunate in this war that Ireland has chosen the part which sentiment, as well as honour and self interest dictate. She has always been on the side of oppressed, struggling nationalities, even when her own fortunes were at lowest ebb, and her flag down in the dust. If her position and prospects to-day were the very reverse of what they are she would be found enthusiastically on the side of Belgium, Alsace, and Lorraine; little nations of oppressed peoples which have struggled manfully against oppressors, which are to-day in the standards of the Allies, the symbol of their triumph and guarantee of their liberties. The force and materialism of Germany is the very antithesis of our Celtic genius, which is spiritual above all things. In opposing Prussianism we are obeying the strongest instincts of our nature."

Redmond, Dillon and I are ready to adopt these words as the vindication of our action. One quotation more from Devlin, wherein he deals with the prospects of home rule, there is entirely unnecessary and often entirely dishonest apprehension.

"Does anybody imagine what Ireland has done will be forgotten when the cannons cease to roar and the battle flags are furled? Does anybody imagine Belgium's scrap of paper will be honoured, and Ireland's solemn treaty with the Empire repudiated?

"Why, if such a thing happened, Enland would go down to infamy worse than that of Germany, herself. Every selfzoverning nation within the Empire would revolt against such an act of treason. But I have no fear that any such thing will happen."

These also are my views.

Bonar Law, now that he has exchanged the position of Leader of the Opposition for that of a Cabinet Minister in an administration still mainly Liberal, must be judged with more charity than in his old fighting days; and people are beginning to appraise his gifts in the dry light of parliamentary reputations.

There are few men who have quite such a different manner in private and public. In public he has been notable for some rather rasping speeches, especially in the day when the difficulty with Orange Ulster was at its height. Then he surpassed in violence every advocate of that side

SOLDIER LADS HAD GOOD TRIP TO CHEMONG

Were Well Treated by the People of the Summer Resort—Boys Come Back in Good Condition

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

The local infantry recruits, including the Overseas Band, hiked to Chemong Park yesterday and pronounced the day's outing as the most enjoyable feature of the training here so far. The detachment, in charge of Armourer Sergeant Hart, left the armouries shortly before 8 o'clock and reached Chemong Park a little after 10, first visiting Bridgenorth. The people of Chemong gave the lads in khaki an enthusiastic reception and the boys are loud in their praises of the way they were treated. Sandwiches, lemonade and other delicacies were provided and the only regret the people of Chemong had was that they were not given sufficient notice of the visit in order that they could have prepared a reception on a big scale. Mr. and Mrs. John Glass, American visitors at the Park, were especially hospitable, and Mrs. Udy, Miss Udy, Mr. W. Glass and others assisted in the welcome. The band played a number of enjoyable selections. The detachment returned to the armouries at 4.30 in splendid shape, and were commended by Lt.-Col. Walker and Major Eastwood upon the manner in which they had carried out their first long march. Mr. T. H. Hooper had sent a barrel of iced lemonade to the armouries for the detachment and after a dusty march, Mr. Hooper's thoughtfulness was thoroughly appreciated. A route march to Lakefield is planned for early next week.

The local infantry recruits will hold a church parade tomorrow to the Salvation Army Temple, where they will be addressed by Brigadier Morris. The overseas band will head the parade. The men will be in mufti, with the red arm bands.

Another good quota for the 33rd Battalion, C.E.F., is awaiting orders to move to Kingston. The 24th Battery took a number of recruits yesterday afternoon and this morning for overseas service. The infantry also gathered several more this morning.

The members of the 57th Band who are going overseas were in khaki at last night's band concert. Bandsman Gilbert, one of the overseas band, played a trombone solo in good style.

One third of the recruits so far at Kingston in the three new batteries are Peterborough men. As recruiting for the artillery is going on all over the division this centre is doing well, and Capt. Ackerman of the 24th Battery has another good bunch of men to send in the next draft. Two Tweed boys were among the battery recruits who passed the doctor yesterday.

There is a well known Scotchman in the infantry ranks who had a grievance at Chemong yesterday. In order to pass the doctor it was necessary to have a large number of teeth extracted and just at present he is willing to stick to the national dies—porridge. Naturally he was handicapped yesterday when the good people of Chemong brought some refreshments. "I couldna eat the sandwiches," he lamented, "and then I had to give three cheers with a' the rest."

Pte. Chas. Lynn of the 8th C.M.R. is home from Barriefield camp.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Hopkins, 577 Bolvar street, received word from their son, Pte. E. W. Hopkins, who is a prisoner of war in Hanover, Germany, saying that he is in good health and received the parcel and money all O.K., which was sent to him. He also wished to thank Mr. McGee for his kindness in sending a parcel which he received. He said it was good and he enjoyed it very much.

FRENCH SUCCESS IN THE ARGONNE

Allies Exploded a Mine in German Trench and Then Charged the Position Under a Hot Enemy Fire — Counter Attacks Repulsed

THE OFFICIAL REPORT

PARIS, Aug. 21.—(French official.) —The French troops in the Argonne drove the Germans from a strong trench position near Sthubert by exploding a mine and then rushed forward and occupied a trench under a hot enemy fire.

The War Office, in reporting this engagement in this afternoon's communique, said the Germans made two feeble attacks against the French positions at Frise on the Somme, and in Lorraine. Both attacks were repulsed.

"An intense cannonade occurred during the night between the Oise and Champagne region, and artillery duels also are in progress in the Vosges.

Has Failed To Rejoin Regiment

Man Allowed Out on Suspended Sentence is Heard of Through the Ottawa Finger-Print Bureau

Chief of Police Thompson has received the following communication from Police Commissioner Sherwood of Ottawa. It refers to Russell Powell, who on Thursday last was allowed out on suspended sentence after having pleaded guilty to the theft of a watch and razor from an East City residence. Powell, who appeared in Court in uniform agreed to rejoin his regiment, which the Chief learns he has failed to do.

The communication reads as follows:

"I beg to inform you that Russell Powell, who received a suspended sentence at Peterborough, August 19th, for theft, is according to his finger impressions identical with one Richard B. Powell, whose criminal record is as follows:

June 14th, 1912, Napanee, Ont. — Larceny, six months in the Central Prison.

July 30th, 1913, Belleville, Ont. — Vagrancy, sentence suspended."

Usual Fine Imposed.

This morning's Police Court was favoured with the presence of William Baker, who pleaded guilty to a charge of being found drunk on Sherbrooke street, which thoroughfare is regarded as a public place. The usual fine of two dollars was imposed.

Exceeded the Speed Limit.

A break of the Automobile Act was written opposite the name of a driver of an automobile, who admitted having exceeded the speed limit on two occasions. He was fined five dollars in each case.

Remanded for Sentence.

The case of incest heard in the Police Court late yesterday afternoon was completed and the accused remanded until Monday for sentence.

Early Harvesting

Harvesting on the Wallar farm, North Monaghan, was completed yesterday. All the grain crop has been cut and hauled into the barns, and all saved in good condition. Considering that this is a hundred-acre farm it looks like good work to be able to have everything safely housed on the 20th of August, with so much rainy weather to contend with.

UNCLE SAM SEEMS TO BE LOOKING FOR LOOP-HOLE IN THE SITUATION

Administration Determined to Avoid a Break If It Can Be Creditably Avoided---Will Be Glad If Germany Can Show That She Did Not Mean to Disregard American Rights.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21.—The American outlook is threatening but the officials were still hopeful to-day that the Arabic affair would not lead to a break.

Explanations were looked for from Berlin. The administration's attitude is not irreconcilable, it was said on high authority. It would not submit to a slap in the face by Germany, but it has no intention of disregarding the Kaiser's foreign office if the latter has anything to say.

In short it was stated the United States Government will be glad if Germany can show that she did not mean to disregard American rights. Even if these rights were transgressed, if it should be shown that it was without intention on Germany's part, and did not involve too wholly reckless indifference to the rights in question, it was understood the administration will not refuse to take the facts into consideration.

A suggestion advocated was that Germany would declare "the Arabic was torpedoed within its armed convoys' protection zone."

"That it tried to ram a submarine or that it tried to escape in disregard of a warning to heave to for search." Even if these explanations could not be proved they would eliminate the idea of "deliberately unfriendly" German act against the United States. The situation is tense. It is recognised that a break is inevitable. The administration, however, is determined to avoid one if it can creditably be avoided. Hopes were entertained, based on conclusions rather than known facts, that this would be possible.

One Year In The Mercer

Sentence Imposed on Local Girl as Result of Raid Upon Prince Street Premises

One year in the Mercer Reformatory was the sentence imposed upon Lulu Kerr, who admitted being an inmate of a disorderly house at 281 Prince street. The woman charged with being the keeper of the premises was allowed to go on suspended sentence. The fact that she is possessed of a child, and her husband is at the front, inspired the Court to deal leniently with her case. Police Magistrate Dumble also fined Allan Wright and Lloyd Wilson, five dollars each and costs for being frequenters of the premises. Both are strangers to the city. The two men pleaded guilty to a charge of frequenting a disorderly house while the two women entered a plea of not guilty until part of the evidence was heard, when they changed their plea to one of guilty.

The raid on the premises was made last night. Two detectives and a couple of police constables participated. The house was under observation for several nights.

OTONABEE CHAPTER ON MONDAY

The "Otonabee" Chapter of the I. O. D. E. will meet on Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock in the Art Room of the Public Library for Red Cross work.

A member of the Chapter has offered the Secretary, Mrs. John Allan, the sum of twenty-five dollars towards a bed in a Canadian Red Cross hospital, if anyone is disposed to donate a like amount to complete the cost, thus enabling us to have a "Peterborough" cot, the donation will be gratefully received and acknowledged.

AN INTERESTING BARN

The steel trussed Acorn Ideal barn which has been erected on the Toronto Exhibition grounds adjoining the cattle sheds by the Metal Shingle and Siding Company, Limited of Preston, Ont., should prove of great interest to the farmers of Canada as well as the barn framers. With this new construction it is possible to supply the material and erect a barn complete with a half dozen men on a very few days, and when erected a building is provided which would prove to be superior in every respect to the ordinary type of barn, as the roof and sides are of galvanized metal, which will protect the building when struck with lightning.

Harvesting Operations

Few Days of Fine Weather Gave the Peterborough County Farmers a Chance to Put the Crop Under Cover

THE HELP PROBLEM

The fine weather of the past few days has been the occasion for much activity on the part of the farmers. Much of the grain that was standing in the shock has been put under cover while a large amount of grain that withstood the recent storms, has been cut. Farmers who were inclined to be somewhat dilatory at the outset of the season have learned a valuable lesson based on the old proverb "Make hay while the sun shines." A number of farmers residing in Smith Township, its said, decided to adopt the western plan of threshing the grain in the field. They accordingly put the binders to work and had made a fairly good start when the weather broke and the storm asserted itself in this and other parts of the province. Farmers who could have had a large part, if not the whole, of their wheat crop in were caught, and up until the beginning of this week, the major part of the crop was still in the field. It had sprouted and otherwise deteriorated in value, and much of it to-day will not serve as feed for cattle.

The Help Problem.

That old familiar cry of "more help" is still heard in different parts of the country. That is to say it is heard by all except those who are in a position to alleviate the situation. There is a decided tendency on the part of the unemployed to avoid farm labour. Some claim that the work is too hard, and others object to the isolation.

Mayor Buller Is In Port Hope

Will Discuss the Hydro-Radial Project With the Town Council

His Worship Mayor Buller and Ald. G. W. Green went to Port Hope this afternoon where they will confer with the Town Council in respect to the Hydro Radial project. The municipalities in both Peterborough and adjoining counties are asked to endorse a resolution asking the Hydro Commission of Ontario to prepare plans and specifications in connection with a proposed hydro radial line to run through the counties concerned. The Commission has already agreed to send engineers to Peterborough for the purpose named. Work in connection with preliminary survey may commence at any date.

WOMEN AND MEN AS FIGHTERS.

Mr. N. W. Royell pays a high tribute to the women of Canada on the head of what they are doing to help in the war. He asks only that the men do as well. And that means a great deal. If the men of Peterborough eligible to fight would do as much in their way as the women of Peterborough are doing in theirs, there would be no difficulty in compiling a respectable enrolment of recruits. Those who don't know, or take no means of finding out, have no idea of the amount of quiet but effective work our women are doing in the interests of promoting the success of Canadian soldiers in actual fighting. While some few women are neutral, indifferent, the great mass of the women of the city are busy as bees, making great sacrifices—for women—sacrificing social enjoyment and home ease, and bodily ease, to the cause of providing comforts and necessities for soldiers in the field, and for the relief of the wounded or sick in hospitals, or Canadian prisoners of war. If the young men of Peterborough would show themselves men as much as the women are showing themselves patriotic, loyal, devoted, self-sacrificing fighters in their own way, they would be saying good by to the women and be taking the place of men in the ranks along with others who have proved that they are men.

SPURIOUS NEUTRALITY.

Switzerland is making strenuous efforts to maintain an appearance of neutrality in this war. The government his issued orders forbidding the expression of opinion, in the press or by individuals, favourable or adverse to any of the powers engaged in the war. This is tantamount to the abolition of free speech and freedom of expression of opinion. In taking this action Switzerland does not make herself neutral—she ranges herself on the side of Germany, and makes herself the partizan of Germany. She adopts the spirit of German or Prussian methods against which this whole awful war is directed. Freedom of speech, freedom of opinion—are the essence of the British spirit of liberty, which permits a man to "speak the thing he thinks"; the spirit that involves all that British freedom and liberty represent. We in this war are fighting for liberty—for the freedom of the nation and the individual; for the right of the man to exercise the rights of a man. British government is not a tyranny; not a machine for oppression; it is simply a medium of coordinating and harmonizing to the common good the individual liberty and freedom of thought and speech of the subject.

We Canadians, we are afraid, do not appreciate the blessed freedom we enjoy under British institutions; under the British spirit of government. Nor do we, it is to be feared, appreciate the danger of losing what we have in this regard. We should begin to think how things would be if the Prussian spirit of repression Switzerland is adopting were forced upon us. There is no danger of that, however, so long as British strength is predominant. But let that fail, let Germany, as she aims to do, win world domination, and Canada would be the first outside section of the Empire to feel the force of the German spirit of tyranny. Liberty of speech, freedom of opinion, individual liberty, would disappear, and in its place would be set the spirit of German militarism, a tyranny we cannot conceive, the equivalent of the worst form of slavery, enslavement of the spirit, of the mind, of the body, of all the faculties and functions of manhood.

Switzerland is held up as the model democracy; but she abdicates her high place when in an effort to be strictly neutral, she outrages the spirit of neutrality, and adopts the spirit and practice of Germany, which can claim neither quarter nor consideration from any nation that has the slightest element of freedom in its government, or the slightest conception of the freedom and democratic liberty for which Britain and her allies are fighting to-day.

CANADA FIRST.

Australia is certainly doing her bit nobly in aiding Britain in this war. At the beginning she put her "separatist" navy at the service of the Mother Country, and by the gallant capture of the Emden performed one of the most picturesque and important naval acts of the war. She had her own navy, and by its work justified the policy of a home-built and home-owned navy for the dominions. She has done more. She has put troops in the field and they have shown themselves as plucky and resourceful and efficient as the troops Canada put into the firing line, which in itself is no small praise. Australia is still giving, and her recruiting activity is a lesson to us in Canada and in Peterborough. The recent appeal from the British War Office for more soldiers has been met with such an increase in recruiting that the Australian Government will be able to double the October and November reinforcements, making them 10,526 for each of those months instead of 5,263, the usual monthly quota. It will also be possible to send to the front in November a complete brigade of infantry and this offer has been accepted by the Imperial authorities. When the troops now ready for the front have embarked, Australia will have despatched 85,000 men to the firing line, and have to her credit 20,000 more who have enlisted for Imperial service — a grand — in more than one sense—total of 105,000 men.

Canada has also done well. We have about 140,000 men enrolled; but in proportion to population, and in proportion to what Australia has done, Canada should have an enrolment of 210,000. The population of Canada is about double that of Australia. We boast of Canada being the first of the dominions in all respects. We are greater in population, in resources, in trade, and in all the elements that can be contributory to a place of importance among the nations of the Empire.

We should also be first in the extent of our aid in saving the Empire, in whose outlying elements we occupy a leading place. Are we to take second place in the sisterhood of Dominions in this respect, to Australia? Shall Canucks in the matter of contributing to the war take second place to the Cornstalkers? Shall we allow them to beat us out as Hun-stalkers?

The answer should be no; and that answer should not be in mere words; but be recorded in the shape of your name on the recruiting booths in Peterborough and elsewhere, throughout the Dominion. Canada is first in peace, shall she be first in war too?

Young men provide the answer.

CANADA'S FINANCIAL STRENGTH

Canada has been suffering from a financial depression for a few years, due, no doubt, to her great expansion within recent times. But Canada has conquered many great difficulties, the greatest of these being perhaps her internal indebtedness. In 1913 the balance of trade of this country was unfavourable to us to the extent of $300,000,000; that is, we imported $300,000,000 more in goods than we exported. To-day not only have we overcome this deficiency in our commerce, but have actually brought about an increase in favour of our exports. And that Canada should have been able to accomplish such in less than three years speaks volumes for the inherent strength of this country.—Sir Edmund Walker.

STRENGTH OF BRITISH FINANCE

While Germany is issuing paper money at a pace which would cause anxiety to even a reckless financier, Great Britain's financial position remains unimpaired. After twelve months of war, Britain is as wealthy and as well off as she was before the war commenced. The full cost of the war has been met out of the money which otherwise would have been saved, out of extra savings, and out of an increased income. Britain is about $2,000,000,000 less well off than she would have been but for the war, but she is no poorer than she was before the war.

The faith of the British Empire in its financial strength is well founded. One of the most striking examples of this confidence was shown when shortly after the outbreak of war, Britain issued its emergency currency of ten shilling and £1 notes. Several million pounds sterling of these immediately disappeared from circulation, to be framed or pasted in albums as mementoes of the war.—Monetary Times

IN SELF-DEFENCE.

Canadians who still think that Canada is not being menaced in this war and who look upon the part the Dominion is doing as "help to England" and not actual defence for itself should note the view the Central Committee of the National Liberal Party of Germany takes on what Germany should derive from the war. "The result of this war," says the committee, "can only be a peace which, by the extension of our boundaries east and west and overseas, secures us militarily, politically, and economically against new attacks and repays the heavy sacrifices the German people have so far made."

The hypocrisy in the reference to new attacks may be overlooked since there is no one outside of Germany who admits the German contention that the allies provoked the war. But the aim of the National Liberal Party for the extension of the German boundaries overseas is directed almost altogether against Britain. By the capture of British overseas dominions that is meant. And still there are Canadians who think that the war concerns Europe alone.

Canada is fighting for Britain as a whole, but for those who look upon this Dominion as a nation separate from the British Empire, the avowed ambitions of Germany should convince them the Canadian soldiers are fighting directly in defence of Canada.—Ottawa Free Press.

Historical Consideration of the Economic Aspect of War

Transformation from King's debt to peoples debt is described in a comprehensive work on The Political Economy of War, by Mr. F. W. Hirst, Editor of The Economist, published by J. M. Dent & Sons, London and Toronto. The author briefly tells of early borrowing by pawning the Royal jewels or pledging certain special sources of revenue under the Stuarts, and the change to public borrowing following the revolution of 1689, which finally dethroned the Stuart Monarchs. For debts contracted by Charles II., on which interest had fallen into arrears, a public obligation of half the stipulated interest in perpetuity was established during the reign of William III. Debts contracted during King William's wars made the aggregate $21,15,000, which was reduced by payments to $16,304,000 at the time of the accession of Queen Ann. But the war ending with the peace of Utrecht in 1713 brought the total up to £52,145,000. Again there was a reduction during a period of peace to £47,945,000, but the war with Spain and France, beginning in 1739, ended by the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle in 1748, with Britain's debt swollen to £79,283,000. Reductions during the succeeding peace left a total of £74,382,000 at the beginning of the Seven Years' War in 1756. When the peace of Paris was concluded in 1763 the debt was £138,865,000, which was reduced to £128,583,000 at the commencement of the American Revolution in 1775.

War's increasing cost then became evident, for the debt at the peace at Versailles, in 1783, was £249,851,000. This had fallen to £244,118,000 at the commencement of the French war in 1793, but increased to £520,207,000 in 1802, when the peace of Amiens was concluded. After Napoleon retired to Elba in 1814 the debt was £742,615,000. This total is the funded debt, and the estimate of the gross debt is £885,000,000 in 1816, involving an interest charge of £32,938,000, or more than half the revenue from taxation. Many reductions brought the total down to £803,000,000 in 1854, but the Crimean War increased it to £836,000,000 in 1857. A period of comparative retrenchment reduced the total to £635,000,000 in 1899, the lowest since the Napoleonic wars, but the Boer war caused an increase to £795,000,000 in 1903. Retrenchment resulted in a reduction to £708,000,000 on March 31, 1914, although the telephones had recently been purchased by the Government.

The author's estimates regarding the cost of the present war are enlightening. Britain's ponderous heritage of debts from wars that have receded into history is exceeded by the cost of one year of the present war. It is estimated that each year of war will add £900,000,000 to Britains debt, or £3,-s10,000,000 to the total debt of the belligerents, involving on them a permanent interest charge of £220,250,000. This takes no account of the destruction of property or the loss of productive capacity through death and physical injury. Viewed in the light of political economy, war is a burden baffling in its magnitude. Aspects other than waste and loss are also subjected by the author to economic analysis, and his work is a material help in bringing the real meaning of war within the grasp of the average citizen.

The same author may some day elucidate by economic analysis the gigantic waste of unemployment and half-employment during both peace and war. This, with an analysis of the burden of the non-producer on Lloyd-George's estimate of one Duke to three Dreadnoughts, might give indirect assurance of the world's power in bearing burdens and restoring losses. It might also be well to inquire as to the personnel of the creditors to who mthe world has become so deeply indebted. If the burden of debt were repudiated or thrown off to-morrow the ordinary worker would be little or no better off, for he would have to pay proportionately more for room to live in the improved world. The weight of the Dreadnought will not bother him so long as any lightening of the load will be counterbalanced by an increase in the weight of the territorial owners. While there is foundation for this conclusion the loss involved in war will not excite indignation, but its horrors must impel all to end it by carrying to victory the cause of human freedom.

PREPARING THE LAND FOR THE FALL WHEAT CROP

Hints as to Management for Best Results—Not a Condemnation of Present Methods of Experienced Farmers, but a Suggestion for Younger Ones Who Have Not Yet Gone Over the Same Ground

The season has again demonstrated the importance of the fall wheat crop. The increasing acreage of spring wheat in the West can never put our fall wheat amongst the coarse grains. It will always be a prince among cereals.

Its uncertainty as a crop in the past has been because of improper methods of culture and inferior varieties grown. If we remedy these, we can still grow it successfully and profitably. Last year we sold $1,000 worth off 18 acres of fallow, or nearly $77 per acre, and though this sum represents the results of two years' labour, the profit is ample. This year the crop is quite as good, and though the price will likely range about $1, the profits will be satisfactory.

I am strictly truthful when I state that for the past 40 years our wheat crop has averaged about 30 bushels per acre. Some will be tempted to disbelieve this statement. I attribute our success to our favoured locality, our heavy clay soil, our method of culture, and the variety grown. I am convinced that much of the failure can be overcome.

Causes of Failure.

The principal causes of failure are sowing too early or too late, sowing on roughly prepared ground, or too loose and deeply worked seed-bed; ridging in too wide lands, and in not providing open furrows to carry off the snow water of winter and spring. If these matters were attended to, I am convinced that failures would be rare.

It is not the lack of snow covering, nor winter's thaws that causes the trouble, it is in the first place a lack of vigor in the plant itself. Such plants cannot stand against adverse conditions, and under favourable ones can never make as good a showing; therefore we must aim to make conditions of soil favourable for healthy and vigorous growth.

Here is where summer-fallowing comes in: by frequent plowing and cultivating the soil, it is brought into fine tilth, plant-food is made available, moisture is preserved, and when the seed is sown germination takes place at once. The growth is rapid and even, a good root system is made, the ground is covered and kept at a more uniform temparature, and the chances are that the crop will tide over the most trying conditions.

Do It Now.

I write this early on this subject because fallows should be "ridged up" now, or as soon as possible. Wheat hates a loose seed-bed. I called upon one of our best farmers last week. He was cutting a fine field (15 acres) of fallow wheat. I noticed that on one side of the field the stand was heavier. Asking the cause he said that the rest of the field was ridged, this part had only been cultivated, and the consequence was the subsoil was more compact, the soil mixture more uniform, and the stooling better. There were one-third more heads on this part, and the yield would be five bushels per acre more. This has been my experience.

Ridging, whether done now or later, should be done shallow, so as only to form the lands and to cut and destroy any weed growth. Deeper work will only work evil. The same rule applies to stubble land. Such land should have the present crop cut as low as possible, then well surface worked as early as possible so as to retain moisture and to start shed grain; then if ridging is necessary plough no deeper than the cultivator has gone, then roll immediately. This fines the soil and compacts it, then sow as early in September as possible with drill, then harrow after, and sow liberally from two to two and a half bushels per acre on stubble land.

Thin sowing of fall wheat is not reliable in these days (we must have a thick stand to stand the winter). On our farm we sow our summer fallows with two bushels per acre and we get a full crop; less might do, or it might not. It can never be worse, as it will only stool until the soil is covered, the only loss would be the waste of seed.

Use the Best Seed.

Sow only the largest and plumpest seed. Remember a grain is a plant in embryo (a baby plant), nicely folded up in the husk, with a certain amount of plant food in the form of starch and sugar to sustain the young plant until it is rooted in the soil and can sustain itself. It is easily seen that the plumper the seed the larger the amount of plant food, and the better the start the young plant gets.

If your own seed is not of the best, buy the best; we cannot afford to take chances. Nor can we afford to run the risk of sowing without "dressing" the seed with Formalin. (The oat crop this year is much injured by smut on this account). We use 2 oz. of Formalin to a 12 quart pail of water and sprinkle the seed until it is all dampened. This kills every smut-spore, and at the same time dampens the grain and hastens germination.

In all the various processes in the cultivation of farm crops, if there is a defective part it is sure to show it next harvest (just as the strength of a chain is its weakest link), and we must study to make all our labours produce the best results.

I write this for the benefit of young and inexperienced farmers and not to condemn the system pursued by the majority. The many splendid fields of grain now being harvested are proof of the intelligence and skill of our farmers. Nothing affords me greater pleasure than to drive through the country at this season and to see "the fields smiling with plenty." They seem to be saying: "God is good! Rejoice, rejoice!" It is a great pleasure, too, to look over crops in company with the owner and to talk over methods.

It is simply awful how inquisitive I am, but I justify my conduct when I state that I am gleaning information for you, my readers, and all I ask of you is that you will sift the matter, appropriate the good and reject the bad. In conclusion, I would state that the Dawson's Golden Chaff is still our hardiest and most profitably wheat.—Weekly Sun.

WINNING THE GAME

THIS country is a vast checker board, in which the Old Town Spirit and the New are striving for the mastery. Old ideas die hard. The Old Town Spirit is "each man for himself and the devil take the hindmost." This means the mastery of the few and the subjection of the many. But the New Spirit means the Co-operation of all. It brings LIFE and HAPPINESS to the many. Is the New winning over the Old in OUR community? And how do WE as individuals stand in this game of Community LIVING? Are YOU playing the game for your TOWN? Or are you playing it YOURSELF alone? Remember you can't stand still. On your MOVE the result depends. Then let the Spirit of Progress win.

Seized With Paralysis Could Not Walk

Most Extraordinary Cure Effected by the Use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

To have the nervous system paralyzed, to be unable to walk and scarcely able to talk, and then to be completely cured, is not a usual experience, but Mr. Hyatt tells in this letter what he passed through. Doctors told him that his case was hopeless, and when they gave up be turned to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and obtained complete cure.

Mr. Avery Hyatt, blacksmith, St. Anns, Lincoln Co., Ont., writes: "I am a blacksmith by trade and ten years ago became afflicted with paralysis. I could not walk or read or write, and could talk with difficulty, so that it was a hard matter to understand anything that I would say. Being only a young man I was nearly discouraged. Two doctors told me it was brought on by overwork, and that my case was hopeless.

"One day my father read about Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and advised me to try it. I bought 12 boxes, and when the fifth was used I saw that I was getting better. By the time the 12 boxes were used I was cured. I am well and strong and working every day, thanks to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

This statement is certified to by Mr. Edmon J. Hodgkins, J.P.

No ailment is more dreaded than paralysis. And yet how few people realize that paralysis of the nerves is only the natural result of neglected nervous troubles.

At first you do not sleep well, have nervous headaches or indigestion, find yourself easily irritated and annoyed, can hear noises which in good health you would never notice. You do not consider yourself sick, and yet you lack the usual energy and vigour and feel out of sorts.

Restore the nerves by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. 50c a box, 6 for $2.50. All dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

AGES OF GEESE

GEESE are long-lived, some instances being recorded where they attained a great age. In 1850 a goose was exhibited at the New Jersey State Fair, and her history, on a placard tacked on the coop, read as follows:

"Madam Goose is now owned by Robert Schomp, of Readington, Hunterdon county, New Jersey. She has been in his possession 25 years, and was given to him by his grandfather, Major H. G. Schomp. Robert's father is now in his 85th year, and this goose was a gift to his mother as a part of her marriage outfit. The mate of Madam Goose was killed in the Revolutionary War, being rode over by a troop of cavalry. In the spring of 1857 she laid six eggs, three of which were hatched and the goslings raised. In 1858 she made seven nests and laid but two eggs, evidence perhaps of failing faculties. Her eyes are becoming dim, one having almost entirely failed. The year of her birth cannot be known, but she remains a representative of the olden time."

Other Notable Instances

Nearly 30 years ago William Rankin, a noted breeder of geese, purchased in Rhode Island a wild gander which had been owned by one family some 50 years ago. A member of the family had wounded the gander by bring into a flock of wild geese, breaking his wing. The gander recovered from his injury and was kept for that number of years, without, however, mating with other geese. Several years ago it was reported that he was still alive, doing service as a decoy bird during the gunning season, and highly valued by his owner, although at least 75 years old.

Mr. Rankin cites the instance of a goose owned in Boxford, Massachusetts, where it was the property of one family for 101 years, and was then killed by a kick of a horse. She had laid 15 eggs and was sitting on them when a horse approached too near the nest; she rushed off, in defence of her eggs, seized the animal by the tail, and was killed by a kick from him.

In former times it was not uncommon for the farmer's daughter, on her wedding day, to receive, among other gifts, a goose from the old homestead, to become her property and accompany her to her new home. In some instances such geese were kept for many years, perhaps far beyond the life of the young lady to whom it was presented.

The Western Farmer claims that sheep will eat 400 different kinds of weeds. We never counted the weeds around home, but whatever the number was, the sheep ate them all. See the point?

Cartridges Were Tampered With

Examiner Special:

Bridgeport, Conn., Aug. 21.—A stop order involving many million rounds of small arms ammunition costing over $1,000,000, was cabled by the British Government on Friday last to the Union Metallic Cartridge Company because of alleged defective cartridge cases.

This fact is learned by the American. It is understood the stop order states that the cartridges were exploding in the barrels of machine guns and putting them out of commission. The same trouble was being experienced in rifles.

As a result of the investigation instituted by the U.M.C. Company, after receipt of the stop order was received evidences of mysterious interferences with the spelter and other metallic compounds have been discovered.

Mexican Etiquette.

There are some points of Mexican etiquette that to many foreigners accustomed to more brusque and businesslike ways seem often affected and unnecessary—such, for instance, as the oftimes protracted discussions as to which of two gentlemen shall enter a street car or doorway first or which shall be allowed to walk on the outside of the sidewalk. As a rule, however, most foreigners who live for any length of time in a Latin country finally come to enjoy the more cordial forms of greeting.—Mexican Herald.

The Greek Flag.

The Greek flag is an unpretentious piece of blazonry, consisting of nine stripes of blue and white alternately, with a white cross on a blue ground in the top left hand corner. The navy flag has a golden crown in the center of the cross. Blue and white are the national colors of Bavaria and were adopted by the Greeks as a delicate compliment to the prince of Bavaria, who accepted the invitation to ascend the throne of Greece when that country had succeeded in wresting her independence from the Ottoman empire.

TEARS AND LAUGHTER.

God made both tears and laughter, and both for kind purposes, for as laughter enables mirth and surprise to breathe freely, so tears enable sorrow to vent itself patiently. Tears hinder sorrow from becoming despair and madness.—Leigh Hunt.

"EATS" FOR THE PICNIC

THIS is just the time of year when we delight to take a "day off" and go picnicking to a bush in the neighborhood. In almost every community, too, the annual picnic, which may be under the auspices of the Farmers' Institute, the Farmers' Club, or some other organization, is held around this time of year.

Of course, a great deal of the enjoyment of a picnic is in the "eats," and as they form such a large part of the day's proceedings, it is sometimes rather a problem for us to know just what to take that will be different from the good things taken by our friends. It is poor policy, however, to overwork oneself the day before preparing good things, as the object of such an outing is recreation for all concerned, and if we work very hard in preparation for the event, it takes some of the cream off the outing. If the lunch is daintily packed and plenty of it, it is not necessary to have too great a variety.

Some suggestions from the Colorado Agricultural College as to suitable eatables for the picnic lunch may be helpful to some of Our Folks in preparing their baskets.

Meats—Meat loaf with hard cooked egg centre; cold sliced meat; "Wienies"; fried chicken; cold sliced ham; sardines.

Sandwiches—Plain, Boston brown bread; chopped ham and salad dressing; cheese and pimento; nut bread sandwiches; date; peanut.

Salads—Salmon; potato; cottage cheese; cold slaw; deviled eggs.

Relishes—Radishes; celery; olives; pickles; potato chips.

Fruits—All fresh fruits.

Sweets — Cookies, cakes, candy nuts.

Beverages—Coffee, iced tea, lemonade.

In order that the day may be one of enjoyment to all present, we should each take along a goodly supply of good humor and cheerfulness, as well as an appetising lunch. If we have a camera, it, too, will go a long way towards keeping the memory of a good time fresh before us.

There is no use in looking back and brooding over the past—forget it, and apply your energies to the future.—Duke of Wellington.

Cases of the Red Cross being abused are much more definite. There are several accounts of fire being opened, sometimes at very short range, by machine guns which had been disguised in a German Red Cross ambulance or car, this was aggravated in one case near Tirlemont by the German soldiers wearing Belgian uniform.

Witness speaks also of a stretcher party with the Red Cross being used to cover an attack, and of a German Red Cross man working a machine gun.

There is also a well-attested case of a Red Cross motor car being used to carry ammunition under command of officers.

Unless all these statements are wilfully false, which the Committee see no reason to believe, these acts must have been deliberate, and it does not seem possible that a Red Cross car could be equipped with a machine gun by soldiers acting without orders. There is also one case of firing from a cottage where the Red Cross flag was flying, and this could not be accidental. On the whole, there is distinct evidence of the Red Cross having been deliberately misused for offensive purposes, and seemingly under orders, on some, though not many occasions.

Abuse of the White Flag.

Cases of this kind are numerous. It is possible that a small group of men may show a White Flag without authority from any proper officer, in which case their action is, of course, not binding on the rest of the platoon or other unit. But this will not apply to the case of a whole unit advancing as if to surrender, and then opening fire. Under this head we find many depositions by British soldiers and several by officers. In some cases the firing was from a machine gun brought up under cover of the white flag.

The depositions taken by Professor Morgan in France strongly corroborate the evidence collected in this country. The case numbered "5 70" may be noted as very clearly stated. The Germans, who had "put up the white flag 'on a lance and ceased fire,' and thereby induced a company to advance in order to take them prisoners, "dropped the white flag and opened fire at a distance of 100 yards." This was near Nes-, on September the 6th, 1914. It seems clearly proved that in some division at least of the German army the practice is very common. The incidents as reported cannot be explained by unauthorized surrenders of small groups.

There is, in our opinion, sufficient evidence that these offences have been frequent, deliberate, and, in many cases committed by whole units under orders. All the acts mentioned in this part of the report are in contravention of the Hague convention, signed by the great powers, including France, Germany, Great Britain, and the United States, in 1907.

Conclusions.

From the foregoing pages it will be seen that the Committee have come to a definite conclusion upon each of the heads under which the evidence has been classified.

It is proved

(i) That there were in many parts of Belgium deliberate and systematically organized massacres of the civil population, accompanied by many isolated murders and other outrages.

(ii) That in the conduct of the war, generally innocent civilians, both men and women were murdered in large numbers, women violated, and children murdered.

(iii) That looting, house burning, and the wanton destruction of property were ordered and countenanced by the officers of the German army, that elaborate provisions had been made for systematic frightfulness at the very outbreak of the war, and that the burnings and destruction were frequent where no military necessity could be alleged, being indeed part of a system of general terrorization.

(iv) That the rules and usages of war were frequently broken, particularly by the using of civilians, including women and children, as a shield for advancing forces exposed to fire, to a less degree by killing the wounded and prisoners, and in the frequent misuse of the Red Cross and the White Flag.

Sensible as they are of the gravity of these conclusions, the Committee conceive that they would be doing less than their duty if they failed to record them as fully established by the evidence. Murder, lust and pillage presented over many parts of Belgium on a scale unparalleled in any war between civilized nations during the last three centuries.

Our function is ended when we have stated what the evidence establishes, but we may be permitted to express our belief that these disclosures will not have been made in vain if they touch and rouse the conscience of mankind, and we venture to hope that as soon as the present war is over the nations of the world in council will consider what means can be provided and sanctions devised to prevent the recurrence of such horrors as our generation is now witnessing.

SUMMER HEAT HARD ON BABY

No season of the year is so dangerous to the life of little ones as is the summer. The excessive heat throws the little stomach out of order so quickly that unless prompt aid is at hand the baby may be beyond all human help before the mother realizes he is ill. Summer is the season when diarrhoea, cholera infantum, dysentry and colic are most prevalent. Any one of these troubles may prove deadly if not promptly treated. During the summer the mothers best friend is Baby's Own Tablets. They regulate the bowels, sweeten the stomach and keep baby healthy. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

MEETING OF THE LAKEFIELD COUNCIL

Agricultural Society Will Have the Use of the Fire Hall on Fair Day—Personals

LAKEFIELD, Aug. 21.—The last regular Council meeting was held in the Town Hall on Friday, August 13th, 1915.

Those present were Reeve H. G. Fitzgerald and Councillors Charlton, Griffin, Kennedy and Madill. The minutes of the last regular meeting on July 12, were read and approved.

Communications from the 59th Battalion, C.E.F. and also from Peck, Kerr and McElderry, were read and received on motion of Councillor Charlton, seconded by Councillor Griffin.

Mr. T. Braden addressed the Council re rental of Fire Hall for Fair day.

Moved by Councillor Madill and seconded by Councillor Charlton, that the request of the Agricultural Society for the use of the Fire Hall on Fair day be not granted on the grounds that the Council find it would be acting in opposition to the hotels and restaurants of the village.

The Finance committee presented a report recommending the payment of the following accounts: John Rosen, labour, 25 hrs. at 15c., $4.75; Isaac Watson, labour, 30 hrs. at 15c., $4.50; John Madill, teaming, 10 hrs. at 40c., $4.00; John Hendren, acct., $19.40; S. Ayrault, labour, 2 days at $4.50, $9.00; F. J. Moore & Son, pumping and lumber, $42.55; A. G. SOME OF B SQUADRON WITH THE 6th C. M. R. AN INTERESTING LETTER

Mrs. William Carveth, Hall's Glen has received the following interesting letter from her son, Pte. Gordon Carveth, who was one of the last draft to leave the 8th C.M.R. for the Old Country:

Shorncliffe, Eng.,
July 30, 1915

Dear Mother,—I suppose that you will be anxious to know how everything is around here.

We got to camp here about 3 a.m. this morning, and were all tired and ready for sleep. We had to walk about two miles and a half after we got to the station.

We left Barrisfield on Friday, the 16th, and got to Montreal the same night, and got on the boat that night; it was the Hesperian we sailed on. The boat left Montreal about 3 o'clock on Saturday morning. We got to Quebec about 5 on Saturday night, and left there on Sunday morning. That is the last place we stopped at until we got to England. It was good weather all the way across except for a little mist. We were stopped for about two days on the ocean on account of the fog, just off the coast of Newfundland. We had an escort for part of the way across where there was any danger. The 4th and 5th Mounted Rifles were on the boat with us—about 1500 soldiers and 500 munitions workers. There was another boat with us. It had the 6th M.R. on it and a bunch of horses; I don't know the name of the other boat. We got to Devensport at 5 p.m. Wednesday, the 28th; we stayed on the boat all night and landed on Thursday morning, and got on the tram which left about noon, and got to Shorncliffe this morning about 2 a.m. There is a big camp here; I don't know how many men there are altogether, but there are an awful bunch of tents. I don't know what we are going to do here, we were brought over to reinforce the 4th, 5th and 6th Mounted Rifles, but Shorncliffe is an infantry camp, there isn't a horse here at all, excepting the ambulance, so it looks as if we are going to be turned into infantry, some of us or perhaps all of us will be with the 6th. We passed through London when we were coming on the tram, but it was dark and we couldn't see much. England is certainly a pretty place; you will hardly see a tree but has been trimmed up or something done to it to make it look nice.

Well, this is Sunday now, and I haven't finished this letter yet but I will try and do it today. We had a church parade this morning, there were about 2000 soldiers in our bunch, they had a number of services.

The 1st, 2nd and 3rd Mounted Rifles are about three miles from here, a couple of us went over to see their lines last night. They have had horses for about two months, but have not got any saddles, and it was rumoured yesterday that we were going to get some too, but we won't believe it till we get them. The 1st, 2nd and 3rd form the first brigade, the 4th, 5th and 6th the second brigade, and we are reinforcements for the 6th. They are not full strength so we will nearly all be in the 6th.

The towns are very close together here, there are about six towns within three miles of us. Shorncliffe is the station we got off at, it is in Kent county, I think, near the south east of England. We are only about half a mile from the English channel. A bunch of us were down there for a bathe this morning. Dibgate is the name of our camp. It is very sandy land and the rain soon dries up. We had a big storm the first day we were here, and the water was running all over in small rivers, and in about half an hour you would hardly know it had rained. Since then we have had lovely weather, the sun shining every day and fairly warm, but there is a breeze blowing in from the sea and keeps the air cool.

The bunch Norman Darling is in is about 15 miles from here at Canterbury, some of us are going over some Sunday to see them.

To-morrow is a bank holiday here, so there will be no parade.

Before I left Barrisfield I had my pay fixed up so I would only be drawing half pay here and they would send $15 a month home to you, so if there is any time you don't get the $15 if you would let me know I may be able to fix it up. Well, I can't think of anything more to say now so will close for the present.

Gordon.

BOY 13, FIGHTS WITH CURRENT SAVES A DROWNING WOMAN

Special to The Examiner:

Higganum, Conn., Aug. 20.—Displaying skill and courage for a boy of his age, William B. Smith, Jr., thirteen years old, recently saved Mrs. Drucilla C. Pike, of No. 305 West 109th street, New York city, from drowning in the Connecticut River near here. Mrs. Pike who was in bathing with the Smith boy and her son, Noah Webster Pike, had been taken with a cramp and was being swept away by the swift current.

Smith was 60 feet away when he heard Mrs. Pike's cries for help swimming with strong strokes he was enable to reach her until she had sunk for the third time. He then dove and managed to grasp her by the arm. Supporting her with one arm the boy fought against the current and finally managed to reach shoal water. He then dragged Mrs. Pike to the shore where she was resuscitated.

The boy is a son of Mr. and Mrs. William B. Smith of No. 234 West 11th street, New York city, whose summer home is at Atlantic Highlands, N.J. He has been at Mrs. Pike's camp at Point Lookout the last week. Mrs. Smith, his mother, is the president of the Harmony Fellowship Club and the Riverside Castle Club. Mrs. Pike is the secretary of both these organizations.

Through the teaching of his father, who was the first commodore of the Atlantic Highlands Yacht Club, the boy is thoroughly at home in the water. He recently has built unaided a motor boat, in which he installed an engine capable of driving it at a speed of 12 miles an hour.

Trades and Labour Notes

(By the Official Scribe.)

The meeting this week was well attended; in the absence of J. J. Hartley, President, the meeting was called to order by Representative Chas. Hammacott, Vice-President. It was noticed that there were no representatives from the Hod Carriers' and General Labourers' Union; these men never leave their organization unrepresented at Trades and Labour meetings. The President explained that their union was practically enlisted from the president down.

Peterborough seems to be following instinctively the lead of the Toronto and Hamilton Labour Councils, who have decided to make the Labour Day celebrations an incentive to recruiting. Arrangements are under way and promise good that a machine gun, at present so popular as a means for knocking down an enemy populace, may be on view in Riverside Park on Labour Day. Mr. Burnham is working on the Council's behalf in this respect.

The Labour Council believe it has documentary evidence from the City Council that a nine-hour day clause would be placed in all contracts for city work. There is no such thing in the Warren Paving Co.'s contract, who are working their men ten hours per day at 17½c per hour, or $10.50 per week of 60 hours. A burdensome wage for a married man, it's true. There's more money in fighting the Kaiser. Lots of other men, the Paving Co. says when the men demand fairer treatment, and 'tis true, as witness the fact that in other cities of this province unemployment committees are springing into existence like the one that was formed by this Council at their last meeting.

The Collection Committee reported great kindness and consideration from the local merchants, and especially the hotel keepers who, although obliged to keep closed bar on the holiday, "came over" with liberality, the Showden House being the only exception. The Sports Committee will meet Monday night to arrange a programme.

The striking mounders from the Lock Works have returned to work, the men having gained their point.

Next meeting Wednesday, Sept. 1st.

THE lady of a large house one day said to her gardener:

"Thomas, I wonder you don't get married. You've got a house, and all you need to complete it is a wife. You know, the first gardener that ever lived had a wife."

"Quite right, missus," said Thomas. "But he didn't keep his job long after he got her."

The Last Trip Of The Season Via The Lakes, To Lindsay

A Lovely Voyage on the Steamer "Stoney Lake"—To Scugogville by Boat, Returning by Train

(By Our Special Correspondent)

"The last trip of the season." An involuntary shiver creeps over me as I pen these words, for they are so suggestive—too suggestive, alas! — that the summer is passing away from us and there is the fell grip of dreary hoary Winter, all too soon to fall upon us, and hold us in his clutches for many a long weary month. So let us make the best of it while we may there are yet six weeks, during which we may expect bright, fairly warm weather, before ripe October embraces us in its cooling grasp.

But this is a digression. The "last trip, etc.," to which I am about to refer was the last trip for the season from Peterborough, by steamer to Lindsay, returning by special train on the Grand Trunk railway. This is a real good trip and always attracts a good following. It is almost as comprehensive in its way as was the Healey Falls trip (run last Wednesday and noticed in our issue of Thursday), only in the opposite direction. The latter embraced the whole of the waterway between our fair city and the Falls in question while that now under consideration took in the Lift-lock, canal and a large area of the lakes and the Scugog river; the distance between the starting point and the objective being greater. It is about seventy-five miles by water from this city to the sleepy town of Lindsay, whereas the distance from the same starting point to the objective, Healey Falls, is about sixty miles odd.

Those are both good trips provided by the forethought and foresight of the capable management of the Stoney Lake Navigation Company. The "Stoney Lake," the steamer on which this trip was run, is commanded by Captain Scollard— an able, careful and kindly seaman—who is not only a painstaking navigator, but is universally genial, kind and attentive to his passengers. And in his work he is assisted by a competent crew, who, in their various offices and departments add largely to the comfort and happiness of those on board, whether members of the gentler or the sterner sex I speak from experience, for I have taken in many a trip on this staunch little steamer, spending many a pleasant hour on her.

It says something for the ability and good management of those connected with this company, when I am able to place on record the fact that, during all at George street wharf, bearing a been operated, there has not been one single casualty and no serious mishap of any sort or description.

An ideal August morning was yesterday's. The sun shone hot through an almost cloudless sky. At 7.30 a.m. the sturdy little steamer left the moorings at corge street wharf, bearing a goodly freight of passengers, all apparently intent on enjoying the eleven hours' sail ahead of them Some persons complain that the passage through the canal is tedious owing to the many lockages. It may be to some, but there are many pretty spots to admire on the way. Certainly this writer did not find it wearisome, for it so happened that the Manita, belonging to the same fleet, left the George street wharf at about the same time as the Stoney Lake. At the first lock, the Manita as locked through with the Stoney Lake, which gave him an opportunity of jumping about the Manita, bearing a supply of ice cream cones, which were thoroughly appreciated by a couple of ladies in the smaller vessel, and with whom he remained until the —alas! —parting of the ways at Lakefield wharf, and in his case the time occupied did not by any means hang heavily on his hands.

The route from Lakefield is probably known well to most of our readers, suffice it to say that we sailed through lake Katchewonnoka, Clear Lake, Stoney Lake, Lovesick Lake, Deer Bay, Buckhorn, Pigeon and Sturgeon Lakes, from which latter we entered the sinuous Scugog river. We made a few calls on the way, e.g., at Young's Point, Juniper Island, Burleigh, Buckhorn and Bobcaygeon. At these points were to be seen numerous faces familiar to us in Peterborough, all wearing the trade mark of happy, healthy holiday-makers. At some of the points we took on or let off a few passengers.

As I have before remarked, the day was simply perfect, a bright sunshine, tempered by a gentle breeze, prevailing all day. The result was that the shores of the lakes and the various numerous islands studded about looked at their best. Everywhere the foliage was fresh and green, except that here and there were to be seen signs, ominous of approaching fall in the shape of the blood-red leaves.

These lakes are delightful waterways, well deserving of a far larger patronage than they appear to get There are innumerable beauty spots to be seen on every hand and the scenery is ever-changing.

At 6.15 p.m. we safely came along side the wharf adjacent to McDonnell Park, Lindsay. The inhabitants of Scugogville are apt to consider themselves as slighted when they hear that burgh spoken of as sleepy, or behind the times, and of a verity the pace must be so! Now Lindsay has a very respectable edifice doing duty as a post-office and a customs house. But yet Lindsay is years behind the time It does not yet realize that Queen Victoria, Victoria Regina (V.R.) of blessed memory, has been dead these many years; that since her day we have had E.R.—Edwardus Rex, VII., the finest king ever, and for the past six years Georgius V. Rex (G.R.) has swayed this mighty empire, for on the face of the aforesaid Revenue Office are emblazoned the Imperial insignia V.R.!!! Shades of Sam Hughes What are you all about Why not wake up and get yourselves into line and in this respect, at least, get yourselves up-to-date?

At 7.30 a G. T. R. special train brought the crowd of pleased water trippers back to this City, which was reached, without the slightest mishap during the day, at 8.20 p.m.

IMPORTANT MATTER SETTLED

A matter of importance to the public and the railways has been settled by the Government. A nice point has been raised as to the possibility of refund of the war tax in case a person should change his or her mind in regard to the contemplated trip by train or boat. If the railway insisted upon the tax in such cases of changed intention, it was altogether likely that the public would set them down as extortioners.

Accordingly the railways submitted the questions to the Government what should be done in case unused tickets presented for refund to agents before the train starts; to agent or general office after train departs, the same or some following day, in the case of passenger tickets; in the case of sleeping car tickets; in the case of parlour car tickets; in the case of steamship tickets. The answer which the railways received was as follows

There can be no refund of the tax under any circumstances. Once the ticket is sold and the tax collected it is as though it were in the Dominion coffers and nothing but an act of Parliament can get it out again. It was explained by the Dominion authorities that in order to prevent the confusion that would arise in applying literally the millions of tax stamps that would have been required on railway tickets and the consequent difficulties which would have ensued owing to delay in affixing and cancellation of stamps, the present method had been adopted and, that as none of the public could have reasonably expected a refund on a stamp that had been affixed and cancelled, if ticket were refunded upon, so also no refund may be expected wherever a tax had been collected, and the ticket unused and refunded upon In other words, the act of purchase of the ticket in accordance with the Tax Act is a completed transaction so far as the collection of the tax is concerned, and under no circumstances as the law now stands could it be refunded. To make a refund of the tax possible a special act would have to be passed by parliament.

with the exception of Sir Edward Carson; and now and then his utterances were so vehement that he excited strong dissension on the Liberal side. Many Liberals regarded him as a venemous man. Yet all the time those who met him in private were aware that he was genial, unpretentious, even broad-minded, and that he could understand and, up to a point, sympathize with views quite in conflict with his own.

The vehemence with which Bonar Law spoke was due largely to the fact that he is in essence an Ulsterman, for he is the son of an Ulster clergyman; and his atmosphere in his native Canada was probably much the same as if his family had never left Ireland; and that, as we know, is a narrow atmosphere, both from the religious and political point of view.

The first thing that brought Bonar Law into notice was his very remarkable gift of ready and appropriate speech. In a few speeches he had made his position so strong in the House that he got office much earlier than most members of the House and after less achievement. His gift of speech was the only reason he was able to reach the position of a leader before he had ever reached Cabinet position; for both his rivals—Walter Long and Austen Chamberlain—had precedence of him in this respect, both having held high office before the struggle for the Unionist leadership came. Bonar Law never had anything higher than an under-secretaryship.

The remarkable thing in Mr. Bonar Law, a point which marks him out from all other prominent speakers of the House, is that he never reads from a note; he never even prepares a note. A short time ago he gave a long and detailed, and at times, picturesque and moving account of all the military and naval events in our Dominions; and, although the tale was long, varied and intricate, he gave it all standing simply at the box of the Speaker's table and without ever looking at a note; in fact there were no notes. Everybody was surprised, but Bonar Law made light of the performance, thinking it quite an easy task in comparison with others that he had performed already, much easier, for instance, than delivering without a note a speech which consisted of a long and closely knit argument on a serious political controversy.

Even Gladstone, with his more than sixty years of parliamentary life, never came to the House when he had a big bill to prepare or a serious speech to make, without notes.

The only note Bonar Law has is of a quotation, and this he draws out of his pocket at the proper moment, generally in a little book like a penny diary or on a scrap of paper. I am told by his friends that his method of preparation is to sit in a chair, alone in the room of course, for a couple of hours. By the time this silent and lonely sitting is over his speech is complete. It is a curious example of how brain labour affects the physical system, for I have been told he feels quite exhausted after he has gone through these two hours of concentrated thinking.

In his speeches you find the traces of Mr. Law's methods. First, of course, there is the great advantage that he has by these methods made himself one of the readiest debaters in the House of Commons. Men with the different methods of Sir William Marcourt or John Morley—both sticklers for the fully written-out speech—found themselves always at a disadvantage when they had to reply impromptu. Neither was ever at his best when he had to debate without notice. Bonar Law is never taken at a disadvantage in that way; he is always ready to make an impromptu and an effective reply.

On the other hand there are disadvantages in this method. Often Bonar Law has said things which appeared rather indiscreet. Often they were indiscreet, not because what he said was not true, but because they were things which, though true, had better be left unsaid.

My explanation is that his methods give him the habit of thinking aloud; and, whatever a politician should do, or may do, he should not and he may not, think aloud.

What Serbia Will Receive For Conceding Macedonia

Examiner Special:

PARIS, Aug. 1. A despatch to the Havas Agency from Berne, says

"According to information from semi-official Serbian sources here, Serbia has accepted the conditions of the allies, and will consent to the occupation of Macedonia by the allies in exchange for a section of the Dalmatian coast and the adjacent islands, and the participation of Albania with Greece, except Avlona, which will remain Italian. When this is accomplished the allies will transfer Macedonia to Bulgaria. The plan only awaits the adhesion of Italy."

OFFER TO BULGARIA

ROME, August 21.—The Entente powers, according to a positive statement made by the Sofia correspondent of the Giornale d'Italia, have offered to Bulgaria that part of Macedonia given to her by the Serbo-Bulgarian treaty of 1912, with the right of immediate occupation. The controversy over the part of Macedonia contested by Serbia and the cause of the second Balkan war will be settled after the present war ends

Proportionate compensation is to be given to Serbia, including the city of Kavala, with the districts of Kavala and Seres with the right of immediate occupation.

Bulgaria on her side renounces for ever pretensions to Salonika, Vodina and Uskub She promises also to declare war immediately upon Turkey, aided by the funds of the four allies Bulgaria, the correspondent declares will receive further territorial concessions in Turkey.

It is believed that Serbia and Greece will give way under pressure from the Entente powers, but negotiations will be lengthened by the reluctance of the King of Greece.

MUST BE RELIEVED

MILAN, August 21.—Commenting on the Balkan situation, the Secolo says.

"The only way to prevent the threatened Austro-German march through Serbia and Bulgaria with the consent of the latter, who thus would be enabled to conquer by force the territories she claims is to return Macedonia to the Bulgarians.

"Bulgaria has behaved well in not augmenting her pretensions although she holds in her hands the key to the Dardanelles Greece should be satisfied inasmuch as Bulgaria claims less than was granted to her after the first Balkan war, but if Greece still resists the Quadruple Entente cannot protect her interests against her will. They must abandon her to a Bulgarian attack."

General Fitcheff, the Bulgarian Minister of War, has resigned on account of ill health. He is succeeded by General Jecoff

A despatch from Salonika says that 50,000 Bulgarian soldiers were concentrated on the Turkish frontier and were inspected by King Ferdinand

Market Was Slimly Attended

Butter is High in Price - Eggs 22 Cents a Dozen

Weather conditions was responsible for a slim attendance on the farmers' market this morning Supplies were limited and trading restricted in proportion One noticeable feature of the inside market is the high price of butter, which this morning changed hands at from thirty-two to thirty-three cents a pound. Why the dairy product should be so high in price at this season of the year, is something that is beyond the comprehension of the average consumer Pasture was seldom better, due to the abundance of rain Some affirm there is a scarcity of dairy cattle, while others attribute the high price of butter to the activity of the cheese factories.

Eggs Plentiful.

Eggs were selling at twenty-two cents a dozen The supply is particularly good at the present time Many householders are buying in large quantities with a view of putting in a stock for winter.

The outside market was unusually quiet. An auction sale drew a larger crowd than the farmer and his waggon-load of produce. Potatoes sold at seventy-five cents a bag A limited supply of vegetables sold at the usual prices.

JITNEY SERVICE

Brantford Policeman For Front

Is at Present Visiting His Sister in Byersville

Speaking of Sergt. Christopher Roberts, who is spending the week with his sister, Mrs Thomas Poole, at Liverpool Villa, Byersville, prior to his departure for Niagara Camp, the Brantford Expositor says

"Constable Christopher Roberts, one of the most popular members of the local police staff, has answered the call to arms, and this morning volunteered his services with the active service company of the Second Dragoons. Constable Roberts was taken on the police force last August, he being one of the three officers who were added to the strength of the staff after Constables Cara, Blanchard and Cobden left to the front. Since that time Constable Roberts has been acting at Patrol Driver and Deskman Constable Roberts has spent the greater part of his life in military work. During his early manhood he spent several years in the Imperial navy and army, and prior to his coming to Canada was a member of the famous Liverpool, Eng., police force; on joining the active service company of the Dragoons he was immediately given his stripes, and bids fair to achieve every promotion

Wheat Fields Waiting For the Reaper and Few Remaining Shops Stand Idle

There are few houses on the Gallipoli peninsular that have not been wrecked by the severe bombardment, incident to the landing of the allied troops last April and there are no houses that are now inhabited.

There are wheat fields waiting for the reaper and vineyards and olive groves where work might be done. In the villages the few remaining shops stand idle. From the harbours along the Dardanelles and Gulf of Saros the boats have vanished, and the nets of the fishermen have dried in the hot sun a long time.

Out on the fields the crude plows and harrows lack oxen. The windmills are ruins or have had their canvas sails stripped by shot and shell.

Town, village and countryside have been deserted by their populations. The picturesque civilian garb of Turk and Greek has disappeared and, instead everywhere the dull olive drab and hardly brighter khaki uniform of the Turkish soldier are seen.

This is the Gallipoli Peninsula today.

The British and French ships have thrown tons of thousands of heavy shells on the narrow strip of land. Madosand Soulain have been razed. Kirthia is a heap of ruins and Gallipoli stands as a monument to what modern artillery may do. To any of these must be added every other town village and hamlet on the peninsula, and they are by no means few in number.

The expenditure of artillery and aeroplane ammunition of the British and French has been enormous and wasteful. This morning a British cruiser threw into the town of Gallipoli, exactly 101 shells: a sort of salute to Czar Mars, because there is nothing in Gallipoli to call for such extravagance with the taxpayers' money. At another point nearby, 98 shells were hurled. Both bombardments resulted in a bag of one shepherd wounded.

But the bombardment was a fine exhibition. For the greater part of an hour it kept the echoes of the Gallipoli hills busy. Then the cruiser steamed to other parts to one of the islands in the Aegean, where it now may be enjoying a good rest at this moment.

Not a square foot of ground on the peninsula is safe against the British ship artillery fire, though dugouts help. The British gunners start early —about 5.15 o'clock in the morning. Why, nobody knows. Light conditions for them would be best late in the afternoon, when the sun illuminates the hills of the peninsula from the southwest, when, in other words, it is behind, instead of before the gunner. But modern gunnery is not hampered much by such trifles as light conditions, especially when indirect fire, or "map" bombardments, make the eye of the cannoneer almost a superfluous thing.

In the conning tower of the bombarding vessel stands an officer with a map and a few other accessories, and puts the higher mathematics, astronomy, and the reports of aeroplane scouts and observers to good use. Astronomy and artillery may seem unrelated, but at a pinch the artillery officer of the bombarding ship can make splendid use of it. If the landmarks on the coast do not suit his purpose well enough, he can establish to a freedom of a geographical second just where he is, measure distance between gun and target on his map, shout certain numbers to his crews in the turret and—bang!

The proceeding is simple enough and the landscape of the peninsula, were it a sentient being, would know it. The peninsula gives the impression of a post of very large and exceedingly active moles having visited it together with a violent earthquake. Seen from an elevation located anywhere, the hills, slopes and narrow valleys appear to have broken out in a sort of bad rash.

Daily the rash increases. A few days ago The Associated Press correspondent was waked at 5.15 a.m., by having a shell explode inconveniently close through the canvas wall of the tent in which he slept, or had slept until that moment. Other shells came and before the British cruiser deigned to be silent over 80 shots had landed both far from, and near to, the tent. But by that time the correspondent lay snug in a bomb-proof.

If it isn't artillery that spoils the Gallipoli landscape it is the busy aeroplanist's bomb. The allies have many flyers and all of them are bent upon making life on the peninsula as precarious as possible. Every day these birds of ill omen come, and they all throw bombs, some explode with one bang, others do the trick in three installments — in a sort of rippling crash that makes the sound of striking lightning a poor imitation of what man can do in that line.

The hole left by the aerial bomb is not large. But the landscape suffers nevertheless. Everything within a generous radius of the explosion goes down. The grass vanishes under the hot withering breath, and bushes and trees are snapped like so many dry twigs.

To the British bombarding ships the Turks pay no heed for good reasons. The bombardments are carried on from so long a range that the Turkish batteries cannot reach these disturbers of the idyllic peace, but the aeroplane can be given at least a little attention. The hum of its motor is hardly heard when certain batteries get ready. But to get an aeroplane down is largely accident, and the aviator knows it. So on he sails, and just to return compliments he drops a bomb when he imagines he is over the offending battery—which he hardly ever is, according to two weeks' experience of The Associated Press correspondent.

What goes in the air must come down again. The law of gravity makes no exception, even in the case of shrapnel. So if the bomb of the aviator has missed you, the fragments of the shrapnel may not. It takes Turkish nerves to stand a sojourn on the peninsula for any length of time.

The Turks do not seem to mind the combination, in reality do not mind it at all. Their fatalism is a splendid thing under such conditions. If "Kader," the supreme fate, wills death by any means enumerated, then, "Kader" willed it thus, so they reason hereabouts. Of course, a bomb-proof is a good thing, they admit. But fate may reach anywhere, even in a bomb-proof. So what is the use of a bomb-proof? Lately, however, the men have been considerate enough of their fortune of war to observe the progress of the yellow birds from under the trees.

Splendid summer weather prevails on the peninsula The sun is hot enough, but the proximity of two large bodies of water keeps the breeze stirring. There are alternate spells of wind to the Black Sea, and also to the Mediterranean. It is cool even in the middle of the day under the pines and cypresses, though the shade of the latter is a scant thing, and to keep in it one must keep shifting every few minutes. The slender cypress of these parts serves better as the column of a sundial than a parasol. The pine is better, and, in addition, has the admirable quality of permitting the person resting under its fragrant roof to watch the aeroplanes properly, or at least make sure that the humming noise is not merely that of an industrious little bumble bee, instead of an aeroplane—all of which tends to make life on the peninsula less unattractive.

But nature does not mind a few scars. In the pine brakes the aromatic rosin floors and the needles emit their pungent fragrance at the coaxing of a warm sun. On the crest of the hills and against the gentler slopes, yellow wheatfields imitate the blue waters of the Dardanelles and the Aegean is showing waves under the impulse of the breeze. Cypresses sway and sigh as heretofore, the birds sing and the grasshoppers chirp—all tokens that nature at least is in statu quo.

There are many nightingales on the peninsula — when the sun has set they begin their songs, generally cut short by a renewal of the fighting.

Every night there is fighting with machine guns, rifle, bayonet, knife, hand grenade and life-destroying chemicals. Now and then somebody springs a mine besides. The noise of this sort of battle is not particulary great even at short distances from the two arenas. It moves over the ancient hills softly—spasmodically. The dull and equi-distant raps of the machine guns are followed by the sharp and regular cracks of the rifles, while exploding hand grenades punctuate as it were, the sentences of the paragraph of history that is being written.

Thus passes the night and at cock's crow peace comes and lingers until the man in the conning tower can read his map and establish angles and degrees for his large calibers.

WATERY RASH ITCHED AND BURNED

On Arms. Would Tingle and Itch. In One Great Mass. Used Cuticura. Rash Disappeared.

So. Buxton, Ont. "My skin trouble started about seven years ago. My arms began to tingle and itch. A watery looking rash, very fine and close together, would break out every summer. It would itch and burn as the trouble progressed and it became worse when I scratched it. It looked ashy and scaly and in one great mass. My arms were so disfigured I could not wear short sleeves. I could not help scratching it all the time.

"At last I saw the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I used only two cakes of Soap and one box of Ointment and in less than six weeks the rash had all disappeared." (Signed) Mrs. Andrew Johnston, May 20, 1914.

HER DREAMS CAME TRUE

Life Unbearable from Indigestion, Health Restored by "Fruit-a-tives"

MRS. E. GAUDREAU
Roche P.Q., Jan. 14th, 1915.

"I suffered for many years with terrible Indigestion and Constipation. I became thin and miserable. I had frequent dizzy spells and became so run down that I never thought I would get well again.

A neighbor advised me to try 'Fruit-a-tives'. I did so and to the surprise of my doctor, I began to improve and he advised me to go on with 'Fruit-a-tives'. I continued this medicine and all my Indigestion and Constipation was relieved. I consider that I owe my life to 'Fruit-a-tives' and I want to say to those who suffer from Indigestion, Constipation or Headaches, try 'Fruit-a-tives'. Give this lovely fruit medicine a fair chance and you will get well the same as I did".

Funeral Was Hurried Through

Automobile Hearse Travelled at High Rate of Speed

NEW YORK, Aug. 21.—The body of Leo M. Frank, who was lynched at Marietta, and was buried yesterday in Mount Carmel cemetery, Brooklyn. The automobile hearse and the machine carrying the immediate relatives of the dead man travelled at a high rate of speed over the six-mile route from the home of Frank's parents to the cemetery in a vain attempt to elude newspapermen and photographers.

Perfect order was maintained both at the Frank home and at the cemetery, and the police on hand at both places found nothing to do. The services were conducted by Rabbi Alexander E. Lyons, Brooklyn and Rabbi David Marx, Atlanta.

ATHENS, Aug. 21.—Premier Venizelos plans to announce the "War Cabinet" to-morrow. It is reported he has satisfactorily concluded negotiations with the Entente.

"Don't Worry" She Advises at 115

NEW YORK, Aug. 20. Probably the oldest person in New York State is Mrs. Susan Gillis, born in slavery on the plantation of Colonel John Peterson, near Petersburg, Va., 115 years ago, according to figures she insists are correct. The aged woman, remarkable for her attainments at this great age, lives at No. 571 Classon avenue with a daughter, who is eighty-four years old, and a granddaughter, who is forty-two. She has a great grandson eighteen and a great grand-daughter seventeen.

Although Mrs. Gillis is bent with age, she weighs 180 pounds. She can thread a needle without the aid of glasses, tell stories of antebellum times and do a little housework. Mrs. Gillis attributes her longevity to regular hours and steady employment and freedom from worry. She was married to her first husband in the South and he died during the civil war. Then she came North. Existing records of her birth, Mrs. Gillis says, were destroyed when the federal troops made an attack on Petersburg, burning her master's mahsion, but she is quite sure that she was born on December 25, 1800.

The aged negress wears neat gingham dresses with a bandana handkerchief about her head and is usually in cheerful mood.

Officers Elected For The Patriotic League

KINGSTON, Aug. 21.—At a meeting held in the Board of Trade rooms here Thursday night the Eastern Ontario Speakers' Patriotic League was formally constituted having for its object the stimulating of recruiting in the third military district and the furtherance of all objects having to do with Empire assistance at the present time.

Mayor Sutherland occupied the chair, and there were delegates from Kingston, Peterborough, Pembroke, Picton and Belleville. A constitution was adopted, and officers were elected as follows:

President — W. F. Nickle, M.P., Kingston.

1st Vice-President — Mayor J. L. Morris, Pembroke.

2nd Vice-President—R. B. Rogers, Peterborough.

3rd Vice-President — F. Newman, Picton.

Secretary — Prof. L. M. Mulloy, Kingston.

Treasurer— H. N. Moss, Renfrew.

Chairman of Finance — Dr. Edward Ryan, Kingston.

Chairman of Publicity — D. A. Jones, Pembroke.

Chairman of Campaigns and Statistics—R. E. Layfield, Peterborough.

The Executive will be composed of the officers and five others, and the initial fee for branch membership will be $25. The work of organizing branches in all the larger centres in the division will be undertaken immediately, and these branches will take up the task of stimulating recruiting and arousing interest in the war generally in all sections of their respective districts, with assistance whenever required from the central organization. It is hoped that much good will be accomplished by the League in this way.

To Reduce Your Weight Easily and Quickly

If you are overstout the cause of your over-stoutness is lack of oxygen-carrying power in the blood and faulty assimilation of food. Too little is being made into the ardor tissue of muscle and too much into little globules of fat. Therefore you should correct the malassimilation and increase the oxygen-carrying power of the blood. To do this, go to any good druggist and get oil of orilene, only sold in original packages and in capsule form, and take one capsule after each meal and one at bedtime till your weight is reduced to what it should be on all parts of the body. The effect of oil of orilene in capsule form is remarkable as a weight reducer and it is perfectly safe.—E. J. T.

Any druggist can supply you or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00. Address D. J. Little Drug Co., Box 1240, Montreal, Can.

Peterboro. Mare Makes A New Mile Record

MONTREAL, Aug. 20.—Yedna, owned by F. J. Daly, Peterborough, Ont., established a new Canadian record for a competition mile in the Grand Circuit races at Dorval track to-day by stepping the distance in the 2.08 pacing contest in 2.09 1-2. She had won the two previous heats with comparative ease, and her time in the final heat was the feature of the second day of the Grand Circuit in Montreal.

The track was fast again to-day and a somewhat larger crowd than that of the opening day witnessed clever work in every race.

Peter Scott, the horse for which $30,000 was paid before he had ever won a race, landed the first event, the King George $5,000 stake, 2.08 trot, in straight heats, his best time being 2.09 1-2.

Lizzie Brown was the winner of the 2.10 trot, five heats being required to decide this event. Mirthful and Reusens divided the first and third heats respectively with the winner.

Will Wrestle To A Finish This Evening

A feature of the Levitt and Meyerhoff carnival to-night will be the wrestling match between Max Smith with the carnival and Gene Hurtubise, the well known local wrestler. On Thursday night Smith failed to throw Hurtubise in fifteen minutes and last night Hurtubise tried to throw Smith in twenty minutes but lost. To-night the two will wrestle to a finish, the winner to take the gate receipts. Undoubtedly there will be a crowded house to see the battle.

TRIGGER

The Gun Club held their regular weekly shoot last evening, and following are the scores at 25 birds:—S. Coon 25, Dr. Frank 21, J. Loucks 21, C. James 18, C. Wood 18, H. Cook 12, C. Graham 11.

The Port Hope Club are holding an invitation shoot on Wednesday afternoon next, Aug. 25th, and all members of the Peterborough Club are invited to attend. Several prizes are offered for competition. The members will leave here about one p.m., shooting to commence at 2 o'clock.

Fish Story From Upper Stoney Lake

Rare Presence of Mind Figured in Attempt to Land Monster of the Deep

Talk about your fish stories, but here is one from Upper Stoney Lake that out-hunters Sam Hunter. The scene is laid beside the new Lawlor summer home behind that of Mr. J. H. Callander. Mrs. Lawlor chanced to be walking near the shore, and her attention was attracted by a trailing track in the water not unlike that made by the periscope of a sub-marine. Thinking it was a snake, she called loudly for her husband to come and kill the monster. Mr. Lawlor happened to be sweeping at the time, and, without dropping the broom, he hastened to the scene of action. Ly was soon discovered that Mr. Snake was a great big fish. With rare presence of mind Mr. Lawlor grabbed a trolling line, attached it to the lean end of the broom, and trailed the alluring bait across the path of Mr. Fish, at arm's length from the wharf. The third time proved too much for the "submarine" and, lo, he made a grab. Mr. Lawlor gave a yank, and out came Mr. Fish on the bank. Mrs. Lawlor is authority for the following dimensions: Length over all, nineteen inches; beam, three inches; draught, 6 inches, and tipping the scales at four and one-half pounds.

New Army Said To Be Superfluous

Examiner Special:

ROME, Aug. 21.—A rupture of relations between Turkey and Italy is considered imminent. Delay in action on Italy's part is ascribed to her desire to do her utmost to conserve the interests of Italians who still remain in the Ottoman empire, who are now estimated at 12,000 in number.

Italian newspapers, in commenting on the situation, express the opinion that an Italian declaration of war against Turkey would not hasten a solution in the Dardanelles favourable to the Entente allies, because military experts seem to believe that a new army on the Gallipoli peninsula would be superfluous.

An issue strongest in a rising market often proves the weakest in a falling one.

The Hun and the Bear are not always unfriendly, especially if the latter is of the market species.

E. E. Loomis, vice-president of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, has resigned as president of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Coal Company, John E. Birmingham has been elected to succeed him. Mr. Bermingham has been in the accounting department of the railroad for many years.

At a meeting of the directors of the Booth Fisheries Company the resignation of A. B. Carpenter as president was accepted. K. L. Ames was elected head of the corporation. P. L. Smithers was appointed general manager.

Another seat on the New York Stock Exchange was sold for $58,000, the same price as that for which two were sold on Wednesday. The name of the purchaser is Henry W. Evans, who has been associated with the Stock Exchange firm of T. L. Manson & Co. of which he now is to become a member. The seat he purchased belonged to Ivan M. Taylor, of Boston.

C. Redner Richards, one of the purchasers of a seat on the Stock Exchange, is a brother of Fred L. Richards, of the firm of J. S. Bache & Co. Mr. Redner Richards will make his headquarters in the Bache offices.

George Earle Warren, trust officer of the Columbia Trust Company of this city, has been elected a vice-president of the company.

Holland is making inquiries in this country for about 15,000 tons of steel billets and bars. Almost every country in Europe, with the exception of Germany, is now a customer of United States steel manufacturers.

Chester Dale of the Stock Exchange firm of W. C. Langley & Co., is receiving congratulations on his forecast of the Bethlehem Steel and Missouri Pacific situations.

The Committee on Clearing House of the New York Stock Exchange, directs that the following stocks be added to the list to be cleared, beginning with contracts due Monday, August 23:—M. Rumely Company common and preferred and Pittsburg Coal, common and preferred. The clearing of the following is to be discontinued:— Norfolk and Western Railway Company's preferred stock and Denver and Rio Grande common and preferred stock.

The Atlantic Coast Line has placed orders for 750 new freight cars and ten engines.

Westinghouse Air Brake stock was sold on the New York Stock Exchange for the first time this year.

BIG STEEL ORDERS PLACED.

Commenting on the situation in the iron and steel trade, the Iron Age says:

"There is no let up in the new inquiry for steel for the warring countries, and with each week the percentage of mill output that will be shipped abroad in some form is increasing. The evidence that this export business will continue for months on the present or a greater scale counts largely in the predictions of further broadening of the industry.

Russia's Bessemer rail purchases are large and more are to come. The Steel Corporation now has 65,000 tons of this business which will be rolled at the rate of 1,000 tons a day at Chicago. The Cambria Steel Company's share under the new readjustment is apparently 60,000 tons, of which 40,000 tons is to be rolled by the Pennsylvania Steel Company. Russia is also placing her 10,000 tons of spikes or more, of which an Eastern maker has taken a large part.

"The French government's pending inquiry for large rounds is about 100,000 tons. Italian steel Companies have asked for one lot of 15,000 tons of steel billets, and another of 20,000 tons."

The Iron Trade Review says:

"Under present conditions in the steel industry, efforts of consumers to buy exceed the willingness or ability of makers to sell. The result is purely a sellers' market with the usual features of receding deliveries and advancing prices.

"The operations of the steel works of the country, all things considered, are now at full capacity; since the practical limits of crude steel production have been reached, there is no further room for the finishing mills to expand their output.

"July's output of ingots, it is believed, was the largest in the history of the United States."

A Great Convenience

A MODERN convenience which is very easily adapted to the farm home is the electric bell. Some people imagine that this is suitable only for announcing visitors at the front door, but its field of usefulness is much larger than this.

By means of a push button located in the kitchen or other convenient place and a suitable code of signals, it is possible for the busy housewife to summon her husband or other help from the various buildings on the premises. Such an arrangement proves especially valuable during the winter months when the men folks are doing indoor work.

If the gongs are of the loud-ringing type they can be heard for a long distance and when placed on the outside of buildings can send their signals for a mile. The old style farm bell is being supplanted by this type of electric gong.

An electric bell system can be utilized to announce the presence of thieves. An ingenious man can easily devise a way whereby the opening of outbuilding doors, chicken yard gates, etc., will be heralded to the house by the ringing of a gong. An alarm system is not operative during the day, but when the family is ready to retire, the controlling switch in the house is closed, making the system responsive to any and all contacts it possesses. By using several bells of different tones, each on a separate circuit, it is possible to tell immediately whether it is the granary, stable, or chicken house that is molested. It is cheap insurance.

Forty Members Of The Crew Stuck To Their Posts And Went Down With The Ship

Fourteen Passengers Were Lost on the "Arabic"—Total Death List Is Fifty-four, Among Them Two American Citizens

LONDON, August 21. At least five passengers, two of whom were Americans, and forty members of the crew lost their lives when the White Star liner Arabic was torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine off Fastnet a few days ago.

Nine other passengers are missing and are believed to have perished.

The two Americans who went down with the ship were Mrs. Josephine Bruguiere, of New York, and Edmund T. Woods. The former was thrown into the water and was kept afloat for some time by her son Louis, who was forced to relinquish his hold when he was struck by a piece of the wreckage. Nothing was seen of Woods after the steamer was struck.

Most of the missing members of the crew belong to the engineers' staff. They remained at their posts and went down with the ship.

Captain Finch and the other officers of the Arabic assert that the submarine gave them no warning. They declare the torpedo was fired as they were going to the rescue of the steamer Dunsley, which had just been torpedoed, presumably by the same submarine.

Besides these Americans the revised list of the White Star line gives the following list of passengers not accounted for:

Capin William Sullivant, John Dighton, Miss Mary English, Mrs. Mary E. Eaton, Patrick Fitzgerald, G. W. Lyons, Miss M. Mills, Mrs. John H. Neave, Mrs. Negus, Mrs. W. G. Randall, W. G. Randall, Mrs. Frank Tattersall, Miss Irene Tattersall, (one name missing)

Third class: Florence Davey (or Darcy), Miss Mary Harrington, Mrs. L. Hermann, Thomas McMahon, Miss Mary Raddington, Cornelius Sullivan, Florence Thomas.

A statement made to-day by Louis Bruguiere, a passenger on the Arabic, indicates there is no doubt that his mother, Mrs. Josephine L. Bruguiere, an American, was drowned. Mr. Bruguiere said his mother disappeared after being in the water for about 30 minutes.

Mr. Bruguiere said he and his mother were the last to leave the promenade deck. They reached the deck after the last boat had left the ship. This boat was too far away to be reached by his mother.

When they were swept into the water, Mr. Bruguiere said, he swam for 20 minutes with his mother. Then his head was struck by a piece of the wreckage and he was forced momentarily to release his hold on his mother.

When he came to the surface Mrs. Bruguiere had disappeared. Half an hour later the son was dragged on board one of the ship's boats. In this boat he found two of his bull dogs which he had thrown overboard.

PHOTOGRAPHIC COMPETITION

A photographic competition recently organized by the C.P.R. is highly commended by the Canadian film and camera industries. Photographic dealers say that they have not been so busy for a long time, and bless the thought of the C.P.R. Hundreds of amateur photographers will from this on be enlisted in the cause, which is that of obtaining pictures along the line of the whole system; pictures snapped unpreparedly and spontaneously, and which are so much more telling than the formal pose. The C. P. R has its own photographers, of course, with Mr. Bennet in charge, but these competitive pictures will, it is anticipated, produce unstudied scenes at the summer resorts, on the lakes amid the hills and valleys—scenes endowed with the brightness of holiday life. These, when the awards are made, will be used in the folder literature of the company, which desires bright and unstudied glimpses of the human side of things throughout the country in the warm summer days, when so many of our people are in the country.

RUSSIAN WAR PLANTS BEYOND DANGER LINE

Examiner Special:

LONDON, Aug. 20.—While the occupation of Poland by German forces deprives Russia of the important machinery and war munitions plants of Warsaw, Lotz and Kovno and is now threatening Brest-Litovsk and Vilna, military men declare that the most important of Russia's war munitions works are on the line of the Petrograd-Moscow-Kharkof-Odessa Railway, that is to say, on a north and south line through the very heart of Russia in Europe. Between the Petrograd-Odessa railway line and the eastern frontier of Poland the territory is almost wholly given over to agriculture, and the first manufacturing found after leaving Moscow and Petrograd and travelling westward is at Vilna.

Prior to the beginning of the war the number of mechanics employed in the metal trades in and about Petrograd was estimated to be not less than 150,000. This number was exclusive of Kronstadt and the military employes stationed in the defences there.

The Pontiloff works and the Nevsky works in Petrograd are establishments of first rank. The former employs about fifteen thousand men under normal peace conditions, but possesses facilities for utilizing 18,000 men under stress. At the Pontilox plant ordnance and war munitions equipment of practically every form requiring the utilization of steel are turned out. This is a great private establishment, but its work during a period of many years for the government has caused it to be recognized as possessing the characteristics of a national arsenal. The Oboukoff arsenal, just outside of Petrograd, is devoted to ordnance and ammunition output and is operated wholly by the War Office.

The Nevsky works are private owned and employ ordinarily 5,000 men. This is essentially an engine building works, but of late years attention has been paid to ordnance and ammunition. The American works known as the Pneumatic Tool Company is equipped with modern machine tools of the latest type and is utilized by the government for war equipment. The Seminoff works are engaged similarly and in addition are making machines for the army. A large proportion of the workmen in Petrograd are under Swedish direction. Members of the Nobel family; of Nobel prize fame, hold an important place in the manufacturing activities of the capitol. The iron ore used at Petrograd comes largely from Russian mines, and is mined with the nearby available high grade Swedish ore.

At Warsaw and in the environs there are no less than one hundred and twenty five thousand men engaged in the metal trade. Close to Moscow in Kolruna, where the major part of all the locomotives used in Russia are constructed. Near Moscow are the Singer Sewing Works, located at Podolsk. It is commonly said that the Podolsk works men have no superiors in workmanship ability on the continent. These works, it is reported, are now engaged in war munitions manufacturing.

South of Moscow, Khakoff and Odessa are important machinery centres, and the latter place possesses, in common with Sevastopol, modern shipbuilding facilities. Between the Petrograd-Odessa line an invading force will be compelled to bring up its own supplies in the way of munitions. There will be no ships to make use of as in the case of Belgium and Poland. Between Brest-Litovsk and Moscow the distance is about seven miles.

SWISS MUST SECURE SUPPLIES IN GERMANY

Unable to Guarantee Imported Foodstuffs Will Not Reach Enemy.

ROME, Aug. 20.—Negotiations between the Allied Governments and Switzerland on the question of foodstuffs needed for home consumption are at a standstill owing to the demands of Germany and Austria that they be allowed to exchange their products for enemy goods and their refusal to accept payment for their exports. Thus Switzerland is unable to assure the allies that their foodstuffs, imported into Switzerland, will not go to the enemy. As a result the allies are now threatening to forbid the importation of foodstuffs into Switzerland entirely, compelling the Republic to seek supplies in Germany and Austria, where they already are scarce.

GERMAN AMMUNITION FOUND IN VANCOUVER

Vancouver, Aug. 20.—The British ammunition case containing about 500 German cartrides with soft nose bullets, was removed by the Vancouver police from the house on Twentieth Avenue west to-day where it had been found in a basement by a woman who recently moved into the house, which had been unoccupied for some time. The ammunition case was of the regular British army type, and bore the date of 1901. The shells were of German manufacture, having been made at Karlsruhe, and were stamped with dates varying from 1902 to 1906.

Kitchener Spent Four Days At The Front Inspecting The Allies' Lines

British Headquarters in France, Aug. 21. — The War Ministers of Great Britain and France, Lord Kitchener and M. Millerand, who were here as the guests of Sir John French made a four days' tour of inspection of the British and French fronts.

On this second tour of the front Lord Kitchener visited points which time did not permit him to visit on his earlier tour of inspection. Wherever the two War Ministers went their fast automobiles arrived and departed punctually on the minute. The crowded programme of the two responsible heads of the two armies read like this, for example:

4 p.m. — Inspect battalion of engineers.

4.15 — Inspect regiment of Canadians.

4.45 — Inspect Convalescent Hospital.

5 o'clock. Meet the divisional commanders of a certain army corps.

They examined the various types of trench mortars and saw them fired. At the parade of one of the divisions inspected Lord Kitchener publicly presented the British Distinguished Service Order medal which had been sent by King George to Captain Doumayon, of the French Army, aide to M. Millerand, as a reward for the part played by the captain in important diplomatic and military roles in the co-operation of the allied Governments and in the co-ordination of the work of the allied armies.

The tall figure of Lord Kitchener in khaki and with a blaze of colours on his breast, and the sturdy figure of M. Millerand in civilian clothing were in striking contrast as they reviewed the crack regiments of the British marching past.

To-day Lord Kitchener spent two hours with the commander of the First army.

Animal Bought for $3 Sold for $86.50 as Sausage Meat

Special to The Examiner:

BUFFALO, N.Y., Aug. 23.—It has been established to the satisfaction of Health Commissioner Fronczak that meat of horses slaughtered during the last six weeks at a farm near Buffalo was sold in Buffalo and used in the manufacture of sausages.

Efforts will be made to learn whether the animals were healthy when they were killed, and if not prosecutions may follow.

One butcher, brought before the Commissioner, admitted that he bought 600 pounds of the meat.

"There is reason to believe that more than six horses were killed and dressed," said Dr. Fronczak. The business was a profitable one while it lasted. Three dollars was the price paid for one of the horses and it brought a return of $86.50 as sausage meat."

It is claimed that the crops raised in the United States this summer would load a freight train 7,000 miles long.

The Russians Win a Great Victory in the Gulf of Riga

MANY OF ENEMY'S BEST WARSHIPS SUNK IN BATTLE

Eleven German Warships Sunk in the Gulf of Riga by Russian Warships Aided By Mines and British Submarines

Four Large Barges Crammed With German Troops Were Exterminated by the Russians---One of the Best German Dreadnoughts.

TURKISH TRANSPORT SUNK IN DARDANELLES

Special Cable to The Examiner:

London, Aug. 23rd---It is officially reported that Eleven German Warships, including Superdreadnought "Moltke", Three Cruisers and Seven Destroyers, were sunk in the Gulf of Riga by Russian Warships, assisted by Mines and British Submarines.

LONDON, Aug. 23.—Petrograd confirms the reported sinking of eleven German warships in the Gulf of Riga, including the super-Dreadnought Moltke, three cruisers and seven destroyers by Russian warships aided by mines and British submarines. Four large barges crammed with German troops were exterminated by the Russians. There is great rejoicing in Petrograd by the Russians who say it is the turn of the tide in favour of Russia. It is likely Germany will abandon the attempted invasion from this point.

SUNK BY BRITISH SUBMARINE.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 23.—Confirmation from the Admiralty of the sinking of the Moltke, came in a statement issued to-day. A British submarine, has "sunk one of the best German Dreadnoughts in a battle in the Gulf of Riga," said the report.

SUNK TURKISH TRANSPORT.

MITYLENE, Aug. 23.—British Aviater Flight Lieut. Edmonds sunk a Turkish transport at the Dardanelles with bombs from an aeroplane. This is the first time since the war broke out that this feat has been ac-

CELEBRATE VICTORY WITH THANKSGIVING.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 23.—For the first time since the Russians took Przemysl with 117,000 prisoners, Petrograd celebrated the important victory to-day with thanksgiving in the cathedrals.

The sinking of the German Dreadnought Moltke and ten other Teuton warships in the Gulf of Riga, the populace took as Divine answer to prayers for victory offered up in great religious demonstrations one week ago. With this news came word from the War Office that Von Hindenburg's attempt ot turn the Russian right flank has met with stubborn resistance that has brought the Germans to a halt.

Newspapers demanded to know if German newspapers would continue their talk of separate peace with Russia.

Roumania to Begin a General Mobilization on Aug. 25th—German Attacks Have All Been Repulsed

Special Morning Cable:

PARIS, Aug. 23.— German attacks upon the crest of Sondernach and to the north of Souchez have been completely repulsed.

GENEVA, via Paris, Aug. 23.—It is believed Roumania will begin a general mobilization on August 25. Relations between Bulgaria, Roumania and Serbia are excellent.

QUEENSTOWN, Aug. 23.— Thirty-nine lives were lost in the sinking of the Arabic, including 12 cabin, six steerage and 21 members of the crew.

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.— The White Star announced that the steamship Lapland arrived at Liverpool at 9 a.m. yesterday.

BERLIN, Aug. 23.— Germans made further progress east and south of Keine and penetrating further south of Narew and crossed the Bialystok-Brest-Litovsk railway.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 23.—(Official.)—A British submarine torpedoed German cruiser in the Baltic sea.

LONDON, Aug. 23.—Cotton has been declared contraband by Great Britain and the French government will issue a similar notice to-day.

PARIS, Aug. 23. — Germans fired about forty shells in Rheims. Only one was wounded.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 23.—(Official.)—Particularly fierce attacks in the region of Bielsk cost the enemy enormous losses. In the region of Brest-Litovsk there is no change.

DESPAIR OF A GERMAN VICTORY UNLESS PEACE IS SOON RESTORED

Secretary of Imperial Treasury Called German Political Leaders Into Recent Conference and Told Them of Germany's Plight Before the Opening of the Reichstag

Special Cable:

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 23.—The Amsterdam Telegraf, not considered friendly to Germany, is the authority for the story that the German Chancellor and other Government heads despair of a German victory unless peace is soon secured.

Before the opening of the Reichstag sessions last Thursday, Dr. Helfferich, Secretary of the Imperial Treasury, and Chancellor Von Bethmann Hollweg, according to the Telegraf, called German political leaders into secret conference and told them of Germany's plight. The Reichstag leaders were urged to "soft pedal" annexation talk in the Reichstag and to support peace discussions. Dr. Helfferich was quoted as saying that the new German war loan would exhaust the nation's resources, and that an early peace was needed.

Dr. Bernhard Durnburg, explained why he had failed to capture the sympathies of the United States and other neutral countries.

LONDON, Aug. 23.—The three-masted British schooner "Martha Edmunds" has been sunk by a German submarine. The crew was landed safely.

PARIS, Aug. 23.—The French torpedo boat of the second light squadron sank a German destroyer off Ostend last night, the Admiralty announced to-day.

WAR ON TURKEY.

ROME, Aug. 23.—Italy has declared war against Turkey. The news caused great enthusiasm. The United States Embassy will protect the Italians in Turkey.

OFFICIAL STATEMENT OF THE BATTLE

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, Aug. 23.—An official statement from the Admiralty to-day regarding the Russian naval victory in the Gulf of Riga, said that "one of the best German Dreadnoughts was sunk by a British submarine," and "at least two German cruisers and eight torpedo boats were sunk."

"The Russian gunboat Sivutch was set in flames after a brilliant fight and sank, carrying down with her a German torpedo boat."

The Admiralty statement made no claim to the sinking of the German troopships.

WAR'S DEATH LIST 5,289,000

LONDON, Aug. 23.—The following official list of killed, wounded and prisoners has been submitted to the French Senate, as follows:

	Killed.	Wounded	Prisoners	Totals
Allies	1,930,000	2,589,000	1,125,000	5,643,000
Teutons	3,350,000	3,885,000	1,795,000	9,030,000
Totals	5,289,000	6,474,000	2,920,000	14,403,000

The figures distribute the number of killed as follows:
French, 460,000; English, 18,000; Russians, 1,250,000; Germans, 1,600,000; Austrians, 1,610,000; Turks, 100,000; Belgians, 40,000.

PLANS FOR THE "BIG DRIVE" NEARLY COMPLETED

Special Morning Cable:

LONDON, Aug. 23—England is passing through the darkest hours which precede the dawn, writes F. A. McKenzie, correspondent. This week's continuous bad news naturally somewhat depressed the public, but those best acquainted with the entire situation remain markedly optimistic. Our preparations in various fields are now nearing completion and are already making themselves felt. Confidence is expressed in the highest circles here that within a fortnight the aspect of affairs will show a marked change. The new German submarine campaign will be conquered as the previous campaign was conquered, and Flanders and the Dardanelles will show great advance.

The Canadians will share prominently in the work in the Dardanelles as in Flanders.

The Russian situation is growing dark. The Russian navy lacks saliors. My figures of the last week concerning the losses are more than confirmed by later intelligence. Trained observers, newly returned from the Russian front, give details which make optimism at the present juncture impossible, but the enormous losses inflicted upon the German eastern armies are beginning to show itself on all fronts.

We anticipate here most violent, continuous attempts of submarine activity, and Zeppelin raids during the next six weeks, Germany being driven by the direst necessity to attempt to force an early conclusion of the war at any cost. England faces the prospect undismayed and unafraid.

Anyone who keeps fowls on a limited quantity of grass should keep the birds on one-third of it, and use the rest for two hours daily as a grazing ground for them. It will then remain clean.

BERLIN REJOICES OVER THE ARABIC.

Zepp. Raids on Civilians Also Tickle the Prussian Palate.

LONDON, Aug. 21 The Amsterdam correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph sent the following message to-day regarding the feeling in Berlin over the torpedoing of the Arabic:

The Berlin Lokal Anzeiger is jubilant over the sinking of the Arabic, declaring Germans have special reason for jubilation as it seems all the passengers and crew were saved.

"The Lokal Anzeiger also rejoices over the Zeppelin raids on England, declaring why should the British be spared while their dear Russian allies are so emphatically feeling the strength of our sword."

A HIGHLANDER'S RECORD

A private in the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders has a good claim for holding a record as regards being invalided home from the front the largest number of times. Since last August he has appeared in the casualty list on seven occasions. In addition he has been dealt with twice at a base hospital for frost-bitten toes, slight gas poisoning and general debility, and has been erroneously reported as killed twice.

HEAVY FIRE LOSS AT ATLANTIC CITY

Special to The Examiner:

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J., Aug. 23.—Fire, which for a time threatened to spread to the Strand Hotel and Haddon Hall, to-day destroyed the Riddle block, on the Boardwalk, between Pennsylvania and North Carolina Avenues, with an estimated loss of $60,000. The promptness of the managers of the two hotels in getting out their own fire apparatus confined the flames to a single block. The entire fire apparatus of the city was at the scene of the progress of the fire.

Believed to have started in Rothschild's jewelry shop, the fire spread with great rapidity and soon the entire block, a frame structure, was in flames. While the Atlantic City Fire Department fought the fire from the beach side eight streams were directed from Haddon Hall and as many more from the Strand Hotel.

On each hotel men were stationed to extinguish the sparks as they fell. The fire caused considerable excitement among the persons staying at these and nearby hotels, but there was no panic.

Mayor William Riddle, principal owner of the building, estimated the loss at nearly $300,000, on the building, and $125,000 on the stock of the various tenants. Of this only $12,000 on the building was covered by insurance. Only part of the outer walls of the block remained.

MR. PRIVATE WILL VISIT PETERBOROUGH

In the Interest of the Overseas Club Tobacco Fund

Word has been received to the effect that Mr. Private, Canadian Organizer for the Overseas Club, under whose auspices the Examiner Tobacco Fund is being conducted, will visit Peterborough within the next six days. He is at present visiting towns in Western Ontario. Arrangements will be made for Mr. Private to meet the various local Bank managers, the executive bodies of local patriotic organizations, the Mayor, and of any other influential citizens who may be interested in the work of the Overseas Club, as it concerns the soldier at the front. The date of Mr. Private's arrival in Peterborough will be announced as soon as it is received.

The money received for the Tobacco Fund should be paid in weekly to either the Bank of Montreal, the Canadian Bank of Commerce, the Union Bank, Dominion Bank, Toronto Bank, Bank of Nova Scotia, Bank of Ottawa together with list of contributors. Care should be taken to see that the amount in notes corresponds with the amount given on card and it is also important to have names and address of contributors written legibly, in order that the postcards may be correctly addressed.

A Clergyman's Policy

A $3,000 endowment policy was taken out 25 years ago. Since then it has been a continuous protection to his family against the dire need that might follow upon his death. For over 20 years, too, it has been a steadily increasing financial asset to be called upon at any time.

For all this he agreed to pay reasonable premiums, which were to be reduced from time to time by the profits. These profits have totalled $677.34 and have reduced the premiums by over 25 per cent.

The endowment becomes payable in 1917, at which time the holder will receive $3,000, or 32½ per cent more than he has paid in. The protection of $3,000 for 27 years will have cost nothing.

This is one type of policy suitable to the needs of professional men. There are others equally so. Whatever class of policy you have, it will be sure protection and profitable investment if it be issued by the

AUTOMOBILE DASH ENDS IN WEDDING

Examiner Special:

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 23.—It became known to-day that Miss Edith Trowbridge Champney, seventeen years old, daughter of the late Henry T. Champney, who was a wealthy manufacturer of New York and New Ipswich, N.H., and Robert Barr Kayser, Harvard student and automobile salesman, were married at Brattleboro, Vt., Sunday.

In automobile and accompanied by a Boston young man, who was to act as witness of their marriage, they drove to the Kayser and Champney homes at New Ipswich Sunday morning after a spin over the country roads and notified their mothers that they were going to wed. Then they drove to Brattleboro and induced C. S. Hopkins, town clerk, to marry them.

"Have you your mother's consent?" Miss Champeny was asked. She replied that she had and the matter was settled by telephone. The bride is now with her mother, while Mr. Kayser is in Boston on business. They are to live in Boston.

Mr. Kayser is twenty-six years old and has made his home with his mother, Mrs. Eugene A. Kayser of No. 29, Newbury Street, New Ipswich.

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

[illegible] Mollie Cooper fitted into her surroundings as snug as the kernel of a walnut in its shell, while the Begum [illegible] in these same surroundings [illegible] as Isaac would have fitted the contents of a hen's nest into that same walnut shell, but it was mother-love that drew Mollie to these two women, and it was the mother-love which soaked [illegible] and helped us [illegible] to bear with [illegible] their same risk that any other [illegible] but mother-love is the reason [illegible] holds the race together, and [illegible] it was the nerve to rush in [illegible] with both hands and guns rear to [illegible].

CHAPTER FORTY-SEVEN.
Dustin' Out the Corners.

Well, you bothered me into tellin' about Isaac and his umbrella, and there's not much left to tell—except a lot of lawyer stuff and such that I never did set much store by.

A few days after Tom Smith and Kate rode away Hellis Gordon Morrison arrived, and he was sure a surprise to all of us, especially Red. Red had built on havin' a lot of fun when the Begum's private husband arrived. Isaac had allus spoke of him as "Jim" about as important as the bunch of hair which decorates the tip of a cow's tail; but when he did arrive not even Elanor was minded to get gay with him.

He was a small-like man of slender build, but the wasn't nothin' loose about him. Every move he made showed he was used to handlin' the reins in some outfit, and he squared cyes with you all the time he was talkin'. His talkin' was real talkin', too, not askin' a lot o' fool questions his own eyes could answer, and then popin' up silly exclamations. We all took to him from the first jump, and spent a heap of argument tryin' to decide among ourselves just how the Begum had managed to first get the fat in his teeth.

He and Jim hit it off all right but he loosened up more with me than with any of the rest, and we got to be chummy about as soon as it ever happens. After I had let him pump me to his heart's content, I didn't have a mite o' trouble in turnin' him inside out and collectin' what information was attractive to me.

He had started out with a bunch of inherited wealth and a desire for a quiet home-life, and then the Begum had roped him. He made it clear to me that she had developed a lot since then, and he was game and never raw-hided her once; but he made it perfectly plain that he hadn't been married long before he began to study over whether it was cigars or drink which had give him that dream about a quiet home-life.

He let himself be dragged around from one side-show to another for a spell, and then he balked and got sly. He opened up an office so he'd have one safe spot in which to do his peaceful loafin', and just for a pastime he got to studyin' about what his money was invested in, and kept on drawin' along until he finally blossomed out into a regular financeer, makin' railroads his long suit. He didn't crave to be held up as no object lesson, but was content to sit quiet in the background and tend to his wires, and he did this so well that before long he was more or less interested in ever feller who ran for office above a constable, and his pull was felt a heap oftener 'n it was seen. The Begum, though, and Isaac, and that bunch, they didn't have no time for an ordinary railroad magnate; "what they honoured and respected was somebody who could speak pieces about the nobility o' bein' generous with somebody else's money.

Hellis G had built high on his boy; but this was only another bad break on his part. The Begum didn't intend this boy to be no ordinary, humdrum business man. He was to be a star-tamer the same as she was, only more so, and this was about the time that Hellis G took what was left of his happy home dream to the rail and choked it overboard.

By the time Lester Percival took advantage of his first symptoms of intelligence by resignin' his position as only son, Hellis G had picked out the part of the world he reckoned he'd run, and his own home wasn't included in it; so while he pretended to hunt for Lester Percival, he fixed it so the "wasn't any chance of his bein' found, reckin' sure that nothin' worse could happen to him than growin' up under the Begum's thumb.

It made me grin to think o' the family, and Hellis G grinned with me as soon as I explained it to him. There was he pluckin' railroads as fast as they got ripe, the Begum sprinklin' charity lecturers over the poor when ever she could catch 'em sprin', and their only sprinklin' the difference by bein' a lookin'-glass hold-up man.

The first time I ever called his wife the Begum, right to his face, I bit my lip and felt like creepin' away and hidin' in a practical garden; but Hellis G liked the name, if it so well that I told him all we had done to entertain her, and he was the tickledest man I ever saw.

We didn't get word from old Josiah for two days. Then came a note which he had headed that pair right through the Injun country down to Texas, where they had been married once and solidly by a old friend, the judge, and that he now had 'em rounded up where no one would ever find 'em, but we could send any word we wished by the half-breed who had brought the note, so we told about Panther's confession, and about Hellis G bein' there and for him to come back with the children just as soon as ever he could.

Then Hellis G sent Red and Shorty to Dodge City with a bale o' telegrams to everybody in the land who had a speck of influence, and when they came back with the answers, why, everything was fixed up except a few little ceremonies which didn't amount to anything. I reckon the reason Justice looks blindfolded is so she can't see what a cuss like Hellis G. slips in her scales to make 'em weigh to suit him.

He was full curious about Kate, and what I told him about her filled him with interest but failed to satisfy his curiosity. I explained to him that I wasn't much of a judge and that the Begum who had had a sight more experience didn't think much of her. This kept him quiet but didn't seem to discourage him the 'way you'd think it would.

Isaac never said anything more about my takin' Hellion back to his old owner but whenever he'd catch me and Hellion together, he used to talk to Hellion about it until he finally got on my nerves and I decided to take him back. Hellis G voted himself one of the party and we drove the black mares to the buckboard.

Corrigan was a cold-eyed man of rugged build and he didn't show any joy at sight of us nor so much as look at Hellion. The dog jumped out of the buckboard and crouched at him and vibrated his tail a bit, but when his old master refused to take notice of him, he slunk under the buckboard and curled up with his nose on his paws.

"I've brought back your dog to you," sez I.

"Where did you get him?" sez he.

So I told about how Red hadn't been able to handle him and what means I had used, and how I had brought him down to where our trail cut into the stage road north of Elliot, but that the dog wouldn't go on home.

"That's 'cause I beat him away," sez Corrigan, in a hard voice. "I lost him at cards, and when he wouldn't go with the devils who won him, I beat him, I beat him hard. The can't no dog run me."

He spoke with a trace of Irish brogue, and he looked fierce at me all the time he was speakin'. "Well," sez I with an edge on my voice, "I brought him down here to give him back to you; but I think too much of him to turn him over to a feller who hasn't any more decency 'n to bet a dog like him in a poker game and then beat him for bein' faithful. I'll keep him myself."

"I never asked for him back," sez Corrigan, "and I never asked for your opinion of my decency."

"Well, you got the opinion anyway," sez I; "but you don't get the dog."

For a minute his eyes got red, and then they grew cold again. "You got any other business with me?" sez he.

"No," sez I, "but I am curious about one thing, and that is, did Belle Stern get away? I'm purty well acquainted with you and with her, and with old Josiah Cornell, and I haven't one thing again' you—except the way you treated this dog—so you needn't bother to frame up anything. This here is the father of the Panhandle Kid."

WHAT ONTARIO FOLKS SAY.

Hamilton, Ont.—"This is to state that I have received great benefit from the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Some time ago I was run down and weak, suffered loss of appetite and was miserable. Four bottles of the 'Prescription' cured me up in fine shape; it did wonders for me and I can recommend it very highly to women who are ailing."—Miss MARIE MILLER, 127 Hess St., Hamilton, Ont.

Brantford, Ont.—"Some few years ago I got in a very much run-down condition. Was very weak; could not do anything; had no strength at all. I began taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription; I only took five bottles and it put me in splendid condition. I felt better than I had for years. Other members of my family have used this medicine and found it equally as beneficial. I can highly recommend it to weak women."—Mrs. A. GILMOUR, 71 Brighton Row, Brantford, Ont.

The use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes women happy by making them healthy. There are no more crying spells. "Favorite Prescription" makes weak women strong, sick women well.

Like an open book, our faces tell the tale of health or disease. Hollow cheeks and sunken eyes, listless steps, sleepless nights—tell of wasting debilitating disease some place in the body. It may be one place or another, the cause is generally traceable to a common source.

Get the "Prescription" to-day—either in liquid or tablet form—if you want to better your physical condition speedily.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels. Keep the body clean inside as well as outside.

TO THE PANAMA PACIFIC EXPOSITION VIA THE CANADIAN ROCKIES.

At the present time a great many are planning their annual tour. Considerable numbers visit the popular California resorts, while many prefer the unsurpassed resorts, palatial hotels and magnificent scenery of the Canadian Rockies. This year, why not combine the two by a visit to the Panama Pacific Exposition?

Numerous people in comfortable circumstances, well able to afford a trip, have the mistaken idea that a journey of this nature is most expensive. This is no so, thank to the modern railway facilities, an extensive trip, both interesting and educational, can be made with speed and comfort at a comparatively small cost. Why not investigate?

Those contemplating a trip of any nature will receive full information from any C.P.R. Agent, or write M. G. Murphy, District Passenger Agent, Toronto. mwf-44-1w34

What kind of roofing shall I buy?

The General says: You can buy a cheap unguaranteed roofing and save a few dollars in initial cost—or you can pay this slight difference and get a roofing guaranteed by the world's largest manufacturer of roofing and building papers. The final cost is what counts and you'll find it cheaper in the long run to buy

Certain-teed Roofing

This roofing is the highest quality possible to make and it is guaranteed 5, 10 or 15 years, for 1, 2 or 3 ply respectively. When once laid, Certain-teed must remain intact at least for the period of the guarantee and the guarantee is a definite insurance against all roofing trouble.

Roofing that is cheaper than Certain-teed is cheaper in quality and is not guaranteed by a big mill and best responsible. If use cheap roof falls down you will have to pay the double expense of laying a new roof all over again. Certain-teed Roofing is for sale by dealers everywhere at reasonable prices.

The Glories of the Divine Character Unknown to the World—Faint Glimpses Given to the Israelites—A Clearer Vision Given to the Church of Christ—Still Increasing Light—Gross Darkness Covers the World—"The God of This World Hath Blinded the Minds" of Unbelievers—The Knowledge of God's Glory Shall Cover the Earth During the Messianic Kingdom.

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its publication.]

Columbus, O., Aug. 22.—Pastor Russell is in our city to-day. We report his discourse on the text, "The glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together" (Isaiah 40:5.) He spoke as follows:

This text implies that a time is coming when everybody will know about God's glory — all flesh. This will include not only all who will then be living, but all who have ever lived. We rejoice that God has so grand a Program. We are given an intimation of this as we look into the past and observe that the glory of the Lord has not yet been revealed to the world. God gave some little intimations of His glory, His character, His design, to Abraham, telling him that by and by He purposed to bless the world through Abraham's Seed. But this was only a promise, not a revelation of God's glory; for only Abraham believed. Nevertheless he got a glimpse of that glory as he believed God's promises; so also did Isaac and Jacob. They saw faintly a great purpose of good on God's part, and a time coming when the curse of sin would somehow be rolled away and the true knowledge of God would reach all the human family. But still the glory of the Lord was not revealed.

This hope, though vague, continued with the Israelites, descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. After their deliverance from Egyptian bondage, at Mount Sinai God made a covenant with them that, if they would keep His Law they might demonstrate their qualification to be the Seed of Abraham to bless the world. But they were unable to keep the Law. None of the fallen race of Adam are able. (Romans 3:20.) The hope of becoming the Spiritual Seed of Abraham faded from the minds of the Israelites. But to strengthen them the Lord promised He will make a still greater covenant than the Law Covenant.—Jer. 31: 31-34.

Israel could not keep God's perfect Law. They failed because they were sinners, members of Adam's race, born in sin, misshapen in iniquity, in sin did their mothers conceive them, as the Bible explains. Finally God sent His Son, "born under the Law," put under the Law for the very purpose of demonstrating that what other Israelites could not do He could do. He kept the Law, thus manifesting that "He was holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners." Sinners were unable to keep God's Law, but Jesus kept it, and to Him was given the great privilege of being the promised Seed of Abraham.

Qualified to Be Blesser of the World.

His keeping the Law, however, did not make our Lord Jesus Abraham's Seed spiritual, but merely demonstrated His qualifications. Even though He was perfect, as a man He could not have done the work which God had purposed; for He could not have given life to the race under sentence of death. In order to give life to the dying world He must first lay down His own life as an equivalent price for the life of Adam, in whom the whole race fell; and to become a perfect Jew, to redeem those who were under the Law. He must take the step of sacrificing His human life-rights, that He might do the Father's will. This He did.

But even then Jesus was not the Seed of Abraham that should bless the world, except as we might regard Him, properly, as having been begotten to be this Seed. At the time of His baptism, He was begotten of the Holy Spirit to a New Nature. It was here that He consecrated His human life-rights unto death. During the three and one-half years of His ministry He carried out His Covenant of Sacrifice. This work was not fully accomplished until at Calvary, when He cried, "It is finished," and died. When on the third day God raised Him from the dead, He was fully qualified to be the Blesser of the world as Abraham's Spiritual Seed—no longer a man, but a spirit Being, privileged, with the price at His command, the value of His own human life-rights, to make application of it, in the Father's due time, as a Redemption-price for Adam and his race.

Since His resurrection, our Lord Jesus is the Spiritual Seed of Abraham. Speaking of Jesus' death and resurrection, the Apostle Paul says, "Wherefore [because He was obedient unto death] God hath highly exalted Him, and given Him a name which is above every name." (Philippians 2:8-11.) This name is Christ, the Anointed of God. Christ Jesus is anointed to be Head over the Church which is His Body, anointed to be the great High Priest after the Order of Melchisedec, anointed to be King of kings and Lord of lords—when He shall come into His Kingdom.

"To the Jew First."

The Bible tells us that God, who made this glorious arrangement for our Lord Jesus, provided also that a certain class should be gathered out of the world to be members of His Body, otherwise called "the Royal Priesthood," "the Bride, the Lamb's Wife," and His Joint-heir. The work of calling out this class has been going on for nearly nineteen hundred years. It was necessary that our Lord should begin this work of selecting the Church with the Jews.—Acts 3:25, 26; 13:46; Romans 1:16; 11:7-21.

In a very few years the Lord apparently found 25,000 Jews who were thoroughly consecrated to Him—"Israelites indeed, in whom was no guile." These were ready to receive Him. To such He said, "Unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the Kingdom of God; but to them that are without, all these things are spoken in parables and dark sayings." As it was in the Master's day, that none of the unprepared ones, either Jews or Gentiles, could walk in Jesus' footsteps, and as the things revealed to the worthy ones were revealed to their eyes of understanding, so to us to-day the Master's words equally apply. The Lord's consecrated ones shall see, shall understand. It is not God's will that others shall know now. Their time to know will be that mentioned in our text. By and by the Message shall go forth to all.

We recall the various steps in the selection of the Church. First God selected the worthy ones from the Jews in Palestine, then from those scattered abroad. The Apostle says that everywhere the Jews were sought first, and only after they had had their opportunity was the Gospel Call sent to the Gentiles. God wished a very cosmopolitan class to reign with Christ for the blessing of all mankind. Jesus is the Head of all these. All must be true-hearted, all must come through the same low gate of Consecration, all must walk the same Narrow Way—walk in the footsteps of their Forerunner. Whether Jews or Gentiles at the start, all are now New Creatures in Christ. Old hopes, aims, and desires have passed away, and all things have become new.—2 Corinthians 5:17.

Truths Revealed in Due Season.

We have briefly traced the history of the world. During all this time the glory of the Lord had not been revealed. It is true that our Lord Jesus knew about the glory of the Father. The Apostles also saw the glory of the Lord clearly before their minds. Not many, even in the early Church, could see it clearly. (Eph. 1: 18-23.) The Apostles, though fully in God's favor, were not privileged, however, to know certain things that we may now know. Certain truths are dispensational and cannot be understood until the due time has arrived. To illustrate: The Prophet Daniel sought to understand certain things that had been declared to him. But the angel replied, "Go thy way, Daniel; for the words are sealed till the Time of the End."—Daniel 12: 8-10.

The Scriptures indicate that we entered the period of the Time of the End in the year 1799. Since then, the knowledge of the times and seasons has been forthcoming. The times and seasons have gradually been becoming better understood as the due time came for the wise in Heavenly things to understand. To this class it will be given to know everything that the Very Elect are to know, until the time when Christ shall receive the last of these unto Himself. We should rest ourselves in the Divine arrangement of things, and not seek to ferret out in advance that which the Lord has not yet made clear.

God is able to make clear in due time whatever He has decreed shall come to pass. If we are in the right attitude of heart, we shall have enough to keep the eyes of our understanding open so that we can appreciate the things which are freely given us of God. His true children are witnesses to the fact that He has been opening the eyes of our understanding more and more during these last days. Certain great blessings have come to God's people, particularly during the past forty years—riches of grace and knowledge.

Satan a Liar and Murderer.

The world in general has been laboring under a gross misconception of God, which had its start six thousand years ago in Eden. God had said to our first parents respecting the fruit of the forbidden tree, "In the day that thou eatest thereof, dying thou shalt die." But Satan, through the serpent, said, "This is not true. Ye shall not surely die." Thus he made God a liar, while he himself became a murderer; for he slew our race. (John 8:44.) But God remained quiet. He did not smite Satan down, although He sentenced Adam and Eve to death and drove them out of Eden.

Practically the whole world has believed Satan's lie. Mankind believe that when they appear to die they really become more alive—that what is called death is really a good thing for them. Practically everybody believes that God spoke falsely when He said, "Dying, thou shalt die." This has greatly dishonored the Heavenly Father. Throughout the entire six thousand years He has been misrepresented. Satan's lie became the foundation for other falsehoods and misrepresentations. It has continued and multiplied; and upon it have been built all sorts of wrong suggestions regarding God and His character.

The lie is to-day at the bottom of nearly all wrong doctrine. God has been misrepresented to be the One who originally planned all the terrible tortures which we are told are being inflicted in places called Hell and Purgatory. That God had to put men somewhere is the theory. A dead person could remain in the tomb, unconscious; but if the supposedly dead person is alive, he must be put somewhere. "Only a handful fear God, and therefore the great mass," they say, "must have gone to a place of torture; being alive and unfit for Heaven, they must be in Hell or Purgatory."

Many say, "God would be glad to destroy man if He could, but He made man too well; and although He said that man would die, He can not kill the soul, which is immortal." Nearly everybody believes this nonsense about our Heavenly Father. They slander Him, making Him out to be the worst Being that ever lived. One cannot picture any more wicked being than we have been told that our Heavenly Father is. We are given all sorts of descriptions, according to the measure of ignorance or willfulness of the one describing God—the God of all grace and mercy. Why has He not smitten those who have thus blasphemed His Holy Name? But He has not. He has even allowed some of His children to do this in ignorance and blindness.

To some in his day the Apostle Paul expressed the fear that Satan would beguile many of the Church just as he had beguiled Mother Eve—by false doctrine, misrepresenting the Almighty. (2 Corinthians 11:3.) It is very difficult for us to realize that we ever came into such a condition that we believed such lies; yet we must have done so. It is difficult for us to sympathize with others who are in that condition; but we were once just as blind ourselves. Ignorance is the great tool which the Adversary has used to blind the whole world.—Acts 3:17; 1 Corinthians 2:8; 2 Corinthians 4:4.

Satan is a rebel against Jehovah. He wishes that the glory of God should not shine into the hearts of mankind; for it has a sanctifying influence, causes us to will and to do God's good pleasure. Satan would hinder us, would keep us in the dark respecting God's real character.

God's Purposes Will Be Accomplished.

The idea of some evangelists that God is weeping and gnashing His teeth over the condition of our race is because they do not know that there is a God of all Wisdom and Power, who has full control of the situation. He has a broad, deep Plan that will all work out properly. He is not giving it any anxious concern whatever; for He has laid the responsibility upon His Son Jesus, as the Bible sets forth.

In this great work of human uplift the Church will be associated with Messiah will bless all of Adam's race, her Lord. For a thousand years it will progress. As the Bible declares, restoring to them all that was redeemed for them at Calvary. It was a man that was lost. It was an earthly home in Eden that was lost. Jesus came to seek and to recover that which was lost; and by the end of the Millennial Age the world will have been restored and will be ready to be received of the Father.—1 Cor. 15:24-28.

Then the Bible tells us God will have another work for Christ to do. It will be for Him, as Jehovah's Agent, to test all mankind in their rich perfection at the end of the Millennial Age; and whoever is not in full heart sympathy with righteousness, whoever does not hate iniquity, will be destroyed from amongst the people. Everything unfavorable to mankind will be rooted out. He will destroy all who love unrighteousness and sin, both root and branch. (Malachi 4:1.) St. Peter, speaking on this subject, says, "These, like natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, shall utterly perish." (2 Peter 2:12.) From this Second Death they will have no resurrection. "They shall be as though they had not been."—Obadiah 16.

God's Glory Soon to Be Revealed

But the point which I especially wish to make is this: During all these six thousand years past, the glory of the Lord has not been revealed. All flesh have not seen His glory. The only ones who have seen it are God's spirit-begotten children. (Romans 8:9.) All that these have seen of His glory has been since they became God's children. Then the eyes of their understanding began to open; and if they have been faithful, their eyes are opening more and more to behold the glory of God—the grandeur of His character, His loving kindness, and His tender mercies. All the good qualities that Satan says our Father does not possess, He does possess; all the evil qualities that Satan says He has, He does not have.

During the Millennial Age, all flesh shall have opportunity to see God's glory. They will all come to see, to understand. "All the blind eyes shall be opened, and all the deaf ears unstopped." God's keeping quiet for so long, not defending Himself against His traducers, will ultimately redound to His greater honor. (Psalm 50:21.) When the world really come to know that God is Love, they will have such a revulsion of feeling from all the wrong thoughts they have had in the past that it will cause them all the more to appreciate the riches of God's glorious character. As a dark background often sets forth more perfectly the harmonies of a beautiful picture, so the darkness and misrepresentation concerning Jehovah will ultimately redound to His praise. The world will all the more love and honor Him. This will be only the beginning of their adoration, which will increase as His glory and His goodness continue to unfold before their astonished eyes. To know our God is to love Him.

Law and the Queen.

The quaintness of many provisions of British law is curiously illustrated in the status of the queen of England. So far as her majesty's private business is concerned, she is not regarded by the laws and customs of England as a married woman at all. She is the only woman in Great Britain who does not come within the scope of the married woman's property act. The idea in all this is that affairs of state consume all the time of the king, and therefore no responsibility for the queen's private business rests upon him. If the queen contracted debts in her husband's name he would not be responsible for them, as any other husband in the United Kingdom would. The king cannot be sued for debt, but the queen can be. Should the king die some authorities hold that the queen could not marry again, in case she wished to, without the license of the king's successor.—New York Tribune.

What Type Is Your Foot?

Three types of human feet have been noted by a British naturalist. In the most common, designated the L type, the first or great toe projects beyond all others; in the much less frequent S type the second toe extends beyond the first as well as all others, and in the rare E type the first and second toes, longer than any others, are of equal length. The S type, which seems to be a more youthful form than the others, is more common in females than in males.

Docotr Said Sciatica---Rheumatism--Lumbago

But He Could Not Help Me, and Endorsed the Use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

Mr. Wm. Parker, 105 Cayuga street, Brantford, Ont., tells in the following letter of his remarkable experience with Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills: "My doctor treated me for some time for Sciatica, Rheumatism, Lumbago, but to no purpose, for I had to lay off work. The visiting officer of Sick Benefit called to see me and advised the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, stating that he had been cured of the same trouble by their use. I asked the druggist about them and he recommended them highly. Not being satisfied with this, I went back to my doctor, and when he said they were good I began their use. The promptness with which they enlivened the action of the kidneys and bowels was wonderful, and it was not long before I was rid of all my trouble.

"I was so bad that I could only walk by hanging on to a chair or the wall. My wife had to lace my shoes. Only those who have had this ailment can realize the way I suffered. I am writing this letter to let people who have my trouble know of these pills. You are at liberty to use this letter, and if anyone interested will call or write to me I will give every detail."

Write to Mr. Parker, enclosing stamp for reply, and he will verify this statement. He will do this out of the gratitude he feels for his cure and because he realizes how difficult it is to obtain the cure of these dreadfully painful ailments.

There are so many treatments recommended for rheumatism that you naturally doubt them all. Here is an opportunity for you to verify the cure and put this great medicine to the test. It will only cost you a quarter to try Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They get at the very foundation of rheumatism, and by removing the poisons from the system take away the cause of pains and aches.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

TOO GOOD TO KEEP

A Story of Intentions Turned Awry.

By EUNICE BLAKE

Edgar Beverly, from the time he was born, was all boy. There was absolutely nothing feminine about him. When he was three years old a doting aunt presented him with a doll. His father was not in sympathy with this gift, averring that dolls were exclusively for girls. But the aunt insisted that boys, as well as girls, in their infancy played with dolls. So a doll was provided, with a china head, flaxen locks and a pair of beautiful blue eyes. Edgar accepted it, but showed a lack of intelligence as to what it was for. Ten minutes after it had been given him he took it by the ankles and brought the head down on a stone step, scattering fragments of the china head over the garden walk.

When Edgar was ten years old he lost his mother and was turned over to a bachelor uncle of thirty. Robert Cooledge, the uncle, had been a wild fellow and was just beginning to realize the chances he had taken and the time he had wasted in sowing his wild oats. He had barely escaped losing at the gaming table a fortune he had inherited and had just in time put a check on himself in too close association with the bottle. He had madly loved three different women, any one of whom, if he had married her, would have wrecked his life.

When Robert Cooledge assumed the care of his little nephew he had become fully aware of his own imperfections and realized by what a narrow margin on many occasions he had escaped calamity. His experiences with the women he had loved, or thought he loved, had caused him to believe that he was a very poor judge between good and bad women. Nevertheless he considered matrimony, the wife being a good woman, as a sheet anchor for men. Having convinced himself of his own inability to discover the good or the bad in a woman, and being horrified at the mistakes he had made, he eschewed matrimony for himself, while he advocated it for others.

For these reasons he determined that Edgar Beverly should be brought up very carefully, that some woman, who knew her own sex perfectly, should select a wife for the boy and that he should marry the girl selected, whether he loved her or not, when he came to manhood. He would bring the boy up to consider him more as a companion than an uncle, and in this way would be the better able to shield him from the dangers through which he himself had passed.

When Edgar came to be eighteen years old he displayed the same proclivities his uncle had displayed in his youth. He was not bad, but reckless. He was very generous, and when his own interests came in collision with those of any one weaker than himself he would invariably give way. He did not conceal what he was doing from his uncle, and Cooledge had every advantage in guiding him, having from the first inspired his confidence.

But if is one thing to have an advantage and another to attain success. Edgar benefited by the advice of his uncle so far as to escape certain pitfalls, but the trend of his disposition could not be turned. He had inherited the same wild oats fever as his uncle and it must run its course.

For several years the uncle was in a constant state of anxiety with regard to his nephew, for such was the relationship between them that Cooledge knew exactly what Beverly was doing. Finally he determined to make an effort to put in practice the expedient he had intended from the time when Edgar had come to him as a little boy. He would try to marry him to some good girl.

But, since he had failed to manage his own affairs in this respect, he did not see how he would have better success in managing those of his nephew. He determined to consult the wife of a friend of his, a Mrs. Jernegan. The lady heard his story and promised to think the matter over. Matchmaking, she said, was a risky and thankless task. In the case of a young man inclined to be wild it was very difficult. However, she would try to think of some young woman of good sense, good character and amiable disposition for the purpose.

Mrs. Jernegan was herself a woman possessing what is commonly called horse sense. She did not especially relish advising any girl to marry a man for the purpose of reforming him. He might make an excellent husband after being reformed, but suppose the reformation never took place? Mr. Cooledge had passed safely through the danger period of a man's life and had arrived at an age wherein he saw those dangers in their true light. The fascination of danger inherent in a manly man had passed and left him a splendid fellow. But that was no reason why his nephew could run the same course and escape ruin.

These were some of the thoughts that passed through Mrs. Jernegan's mind before she acted upon Mr. Cooledge's request. Then when she had the matter all thought out she sent for a young lady friend of hers, Miss Laura Dudley, and the two had a long conversation on the subject of snatching young Edgar Beverly as a brand from the burning.

The next day Mr. Cooledge received an invitation to call on Mrs. Jernegan and upon doing so was informed that she had fixed upon a young lady who would be a fit person to reform his nephew. The only question was, Would she consent to make the effort? She was three or four years older than Edgar, but Mrs. Jernegan recognized the fact that very young men are more easily won by women older than themselves than by immature girls. She proposed that the young woman upon whom she had decided meet the uncle and the nephew, and after the meeting, if she consented to make the desired attempt, that Mr. Cooledge be informed of the fact and give her every opportunity to accomplish her mission.

The result of these interviews was that Mr. Cooledge, Mr. Beverly and Miss Dudley met at Mrs. Jernegan's at dinner. Cooledge kept a close eye on Miss Dudley to observe whether or no she seemed pleased with his nephew. He saw no evidence that she was pleased or displeased with him. As for Edgar, there was evidence that he was not averse to Miss Dudley. The dinner passed very pleasantly, and since Miss Dudley was to go home alone in Mrs. Jernegan's runabout, Edgar Beverly accompanied her.

A few days later Mr. Cooledge was informed that Miss Dudley had acceded to his request, and Mrs. Jernegan suggested that he call upon the young lady for the purpose of talking the matter over. He lost no time in making the call and found Miss Dudley in a very complaisant frame of mind.

"I was much pleased with your nephew, Mr. Cooledge," she said, "and since our mutual friend, Mrs. Jernegan, has apprised me of your intentions, we may as well begin where she left off. If I am to win your nephew I can only do it by being thrown a good deal in his company. This, of course, cannot be without management. Now, I propose that we make up a little party for the balance of the summer to go to the mountains. That there may be two men and two women I propose to invite a lady friend of mine—for chaperon if you like—and I feel great confidence that your plan of marrying your nephew will succeed before the end of the summer."

Mr. Cooledge fell in with the plan, and in due time a party of four was domesticated in a mountain hotel. Mr. Cooledge was somewhat surprised to find the lady who was added to the party to be several years younger than Miss Dudley, but the latter explained that she was the only one of her friends whom she could get to make up the party. She was scarcely out of her teens and a very attractive young woman. She was introduced as Kate Millard, and the name Kate is often synonomous with the word fascinating.

The quartet passed a very enjoyable month together. But from the first the plan to marry Beverly to Miss Dudley went awry, because he preferred Kate Millard. Cooledge was much put out at the turn the affair had taken, for he approved very highly of Miss Dudley, but considered her friend of very light caliber. Instead of his nephew being attentive to Miss Dudley he was devoted to her friend. This left Cooledge and Miss Dudley in constant companionship. Cooledge after awhile instead of being troubled at this turn of his intentions was so delighted with Miss Dudley's companionship that when one day his nephew swung to her from his duet he showed his even perturbation.

Not only did Beverly notice his uncle's being rattled by his attentions to Miss Dudley, but Kate was immensely delighted with it. The two younger persons were evidently out for a frolic, and if they could get any fun at the older mates expense they were quite inclined to do so. Beverly would for a time leave Miss Dudley quite free to receive the attentions of Mr. Cooledge, then he would veer about and appropriate her to himself. To make matters worse, Miss Dudley made no objection to being monopolized by the young scapegrace, and when he was devoted to her his uncle was left out in the cold.

And so the game went on. Mr. Cooledge when his nephew was devoting himself to Miss Dudley decided that the plan was working out admirably, but he felt like throwing the young rascal over a precipice. Then when Beverly swung back to Kate Millard and left the field to him he voted the boy a fool, but in his heart was delighted.

When the autumn came round and the party returned to the city Mr. Cooledge one day received a message from Mrs. Jernegan asking why he had not called upon her. He at once put in an appearance, and the following dialogue ensued:

"How did the plan for marrying your nephew work?" asked the lady.

"It didn't work at all. Miss Dudley invited a friend of hers, a chit, to be of our party in the mountains, and the chit got away with Edgar."

"Indeed!" said the lady. "That was very hard on Laura, wasn't it? Who was the friend that Laura invited to complete your party?"

"A Miss Kate Millard."

"You mean Mrs. Kate Millard."

"What?"

"Kate Millard is a widow."

Mr. Cooledge was thunderstruck.

"You wished to marry off your nephew and I wished to give Laura a wife. I got up this party for a summer outing myself. It was all arranged beforehand that Kate Millard should win your nephew and Laura Dudley should win you. The plan has been successful in both its parts. Edgar Beverly is engaged to Kate Millard, and you are engaged to Laura Dudley."

"Well, I'll be jinged!" exclaimed Mr. Cooledge. "How did you learn that?"

"From both Laura and Kate. It was too good to keep."

Stage Superstitions.

An umbrella opened on the stage is supposed to bring bad luck, and many actors would hesitate about wearing new shoes on the first night of a play. The evil effects of new shoes are said, however, to be averted by wearing them on the wrong feet. In fact, any player who makes this mistake in the hurry of dressing regards it as a good omen not to be disturbed. Whistling on the stage during rehearsals is believed to insure a frost on the night of production, and in operatic circles a yellow clarinet in the orchestra is held to bring about the same dire result.

"In justice to humanity I want to tell you that I was a great sufferer from itching piles, and I have found Dr. Chase's Ointment the best treatment obtainable," writes Mr. Fred Hinz, Brodhagen, Ont. It gives instant relief and I can recommend it to any sufferer from this dreadful disease."

Many Inner Tubes In One

Layer on Layer—Extra Thick

Inner Tubes are made to hold air. Tubes that are built by machinery, of one thick piece of rubber, are apt to have flaws that go undetected.

So trouble ensues from leaky tubes and you might blame your tires for it.

Hence whatever tire you favor, you owe it the justice of using Goodyear Tubes.

Note how cautiously we make them—how we roll the pure rubber into very thin sheets. That thinness shows the slightest flaw; the tiniest speck, and we eliminate it.

Those thin, perfect sheets are wrapped layer on layer, up to the Tube's full thickness. Then we vulcanize them into one solid rubber Tube.

Such Tubes can't leak. And the valve patch can't leak, for we make it an integral part of the Tube.

14 Per Cent Heavier
20 Per Cent Lower Priced

The extra wear is due to extra thickness, too. This year they are thicker than ever. We have added an average of 14 per cent to them. To our larger Tubes we added 16½ per cent, and every whit pure rubber.

On February 15th we made our third tire-price reduction in two years. Then we also reduced our tube prices by 20 per cent. That was largely a quantity reduction, due to mammoth output. Now these thick, enduring Laminated Tubes cost about the same as others.

If you are wedded to other tires, use Goodyear Made In Canada Tubes and get this taste of Goodyear standards. Then judge our tires by them. Go to some Goodyear dealer, please, and let him show you what it means to get Goodyear Laminated Tubes.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

A GRACEFU STYLE FOR SOFT FABRICS

By Anabel Worthington.

The tie-on waist is among the prettiest of the season's novelties. It is one of the best of all models for the soft fabrics which are so much in vogue and can be developed in the semi-transparent voiles, in chiffon, in crepe fabrics, wash silk, organdie and so on and on through a long list.

It is so simple to make, owing to the adjustment of the fronts, that it is a very tempting style to the woman who is not an expert dressmaker. At the upper part the waist is plain in front, but from just above the waist, say where the girdle would ordinarily be placed, the material is lengthened into soft, wide sash ends, and these are drawn around the waist, and fastened in the back in a pretty bow. If one thinks that the material will get too much wrinkled by frequent tying it is always possible to make the bow and attach it to one of the ends and to fasten the two where they meet by means of hooks and eyes.

The neck of this waist is open with a flare collar at the back and tiny revers in front. Any woman who doubts being skilful enough to make this collar or the revers can always purchase them ready made and baste or pin them in place on the waist.

The back of the waist is entirely plain and the one piece sleeve has just fullness enough to be in the style of the moment and to be cool and comfortable for warm weather. The length is a matter of taste and convenience.

The pattern of this waist, No. 7203, is cut in sizes 34 to 44 inches bust measure. Medium size requires 2¼ yards of 36 inch material, with ½ yard of 18 inch lace and ⅝ yard of 18 inch satin.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

DETAILS OF THE GERMAN NAVAL DEFEAT

BRITISH SUB. AGAIN SCORES AT DARDANELLES

German Positions in Vosges Captured By French Troops

Long Stretches of the Enemy's Trenches Were Wrecked by Bombardment That Lasted Several Hours, After Which the French Infantry Rushed in and Took the Positions ---British Submarines Again Active in the Sea of Marmora.

INTENSE ACTIVITY ON THE WESTERN FRONT

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, (French Official Communique) Aug. 23.—After wrecking long stretches of the enemy trenches in the Vosges by heavy bombardment that lasted several hours, the French captured several German positions by infantry charges, the War Office reported this afternoon.

In practically every sector of the battle front intense activity was displayed throughout Sunday.

In the Artois region grenade battle occurred around Souchez and Neuville without important results. The French long range artillery bombarded the railway and station on roads between Lens and Menin, Listard and Loos, and Lille and Douai.

"Between Somme and the Oise a fierce artillery duel proceeded Sunday."

"In the Argonne region, at several points, and in Bolante woods there were brief clashes with bombs and petards."

TOKIO, Aug. 23.—Premier Okuma states that Japan has decided to give greater assistance to Russia to prosecute the war. He could not discuss the details, but allowed it to be understood that this assistance would take the form of the forwarding of greater supplies of munitions.

Japan has decided to employ all available governmental and private resources for increasing the output of munitions for the Allies, particularly Russia.

The Japanese Government believes the time has arrived for more concerted action against the enemies of Japan and her Allies.

BERLIN, Aug. 23.—The Russian fortress City of Ossowetz has been captured by the Germans, it was officially announced this afternoon.

LONDON, Aug. 23.—A despatch from Udine, Italy, says the fact is now disclosed that joint military action by Italy, with England, France and Russia, against Turkey was arranged by the Italian General Porro during his visit to the Anglo-French front in July. The plans studied then, it is said, can immediately be put into action.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 23.—Heavy attacks by the reinforced British troops on Turkish positions in Suvla Bay region have been repulsed with severe enemy losses, the War Office announced to-day.

The Turkish trenches were first subjected to violent artillery fire. The British then charged, but were unable to penetrate the Turkish first lines.

SOFIA, Bulgaria, Aug. 23.—The Turkish collier Espahan was torpedoed by a British submarine at Haidar Passa, and the steamer Budos of the German-Levant Line, provided with munitions and provisions was sunk in the Sea of Marmora.

KILLED AT THE DARDANELLES

Capt. A.S.C. Rogers Nephew of Mr. R. B. Rogers Falls For the Empire

Mr R B Rogers has received word that his nephew, Capt Allan S. C. Rogers, son of Mr Edmund R Rogers, has been killed in action at the Dardanelles The word will bring deep regret as the young officer was well known in Peterborough, where he has visited on many occasions He was a graduate of Trinity College School and of the Royal Military College, Kingston, and was in India when war broke out, attached to King Georges Own Pioneers He returned to England after the beginning of hostilities and spent a day in Peterborough last October on his way home from India For some time he has been assisting in drilling the new armies in England, and only a short time ago was ordered to the Dardanelles Capt Rogers was a splendid athlete, winning honours at school and in the army, among his exploits being the winning of a gold medal at the military tournament in India He was 6 ft 5 in. in height and a fine soldier.

G. H. Roper Appointed

Mr. G. H. Roper of Brantford, a well known Y.M.C.A. man, has been appointed physical director of the Peterborough Y.M.C.A. to sucee Mr Geo A Carson An invitation was sent Mr. Roper and he has wired to express his willingness to come.

BOY SCOUTS ARE HELPING

Their Services Placed at Disposal of Military Authorities

The following letter received by Lt.-Colonel Walker, will be of interest to the Boy Scouts

Dear Sir,

His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, has been much gratified as the Chief Scout of the Boy Scouts Association for Canada, to notice that Boy Scouts in various parts of the country are assisting the recruiting officers in connection with the enlistment of volunteers for service overseas, and I am directed to express the Chief Scout's earnest hope that Boy Scouts and their officers throughout the Dominion will cooperate with the recruiting authorities along these lines in whatever way their services may be of value In some localities they have already Boy Scout parades on behalf of the recruiting cause, while elsewhere the lads are helping with messenger service and in other ways. The form of the Scouts' "good turn" to this patriotic cause may vary in different localities on account of local circumstances, but these are matters of easy arrangement, and any help which may be given in this way will be as much enjoyed by the lads themselves as it will be appreciated by the military authorities. Anything which is done by the Boy Scouts along the lines above indicated should in all cases be done only by arrangement with the local military authorities

By direction,
Gerald H. Brown,
Hon Dom. Secretary

SOLDIERS TO TRAIN HERE

Peterborough Has Been Chosen a Mobilization Centre and at Least 500 Soldiers Will Be Quartered Here This Winter

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

That Peterborough is to be a mobilization centre and training depot for 500 soldiers, and possibly 1,000 is evidenced by the following telegram received by His Worship Mayor Buller from J. H. Burnham, M.P.:

Ottawa, Aug. 21st, 1915.

Mayor Buller, Peterborough:

I saw Adjutant General last night and Minister and Chief of Mobilization this morning and the Government will give half of a new Battalion permanently to Peterborough and all if recruiting justifies. This means that a Peterborough infantry depot will be established. It will keep its strength recruited up to 500, and if possible, 1,000. Peterborough depot will be permanent till the war ends. Men will be housed at Peterborough during the winter season and will be drafted from Peterborough centre for overseas as rapidly as trained. This ought to be satisfactory.

J. H. BURNHAM.

The success of the perseverance and energetic efforts of the members of the local branch of the Speakers' Patriotic League is a matter of great gratification. The details have not yet been made known, but it is likely that the Cordage Works will be converted into a barracks for the accommodation of the men. There are at present some 100 infantry men in Peterborough who would be the nucleus of the new battalion. Whether these men will be left here or taken to the 58th Battalion at Kingston is not definitely known. The matter rests in the hands of Col. Hemming, the officer commanding the district. The Patriotic League will also like to see the overseas band left here, but to-day word was received from Bandmaster Peryer to be ready to leave at short notice for Barrietield.

Capt Frank Bradburn, son of Mr. T. E. Bradburn of Peterborough, is in town to-day. Capt. Bradburn, who is attached to the 51st (Calgary) Battalion, C.E.F., has been paying a short visit to Stoney Lake before returning to join his regiment. He has been in attendance at the Royal School of Musketry, Ottawa. He is an old Peterborough boy and played hockey with the Peterborough Colts.

The local infantry recruits will route march to Lakefield to-morrow, leaving the armouries at 5 o'clock in order to cover their journey in the coolness of the morning. A transport wagon will accompany the soldier lads. The detachment will return in the afternoon, completing a twenty mile march

T. H. Clayton, local moving picture magnate, who enlisted on Saturday, was out on parade this morning and was placed in charge of a squad of recruits. He has had considerable experience, and his knowledge of physical culture work should earn him promotion

The artillery recruits are coming in steadily and another draft will leave shortly. A message received this morning from Lieut. "Merry" Huycke says that the 33rd (the Sportsmen's) Battery, is nearly up to strength and that local recruits who want to be with the rest of the Peterborough boys in this battery should sign up at once. The next draft to go down will probably be the last for this particular battery

No Consent Needed.

The following in regard to conditions regarding enlistments has been received by Lt.-Col. Walker

The appended copy of a communication received from Headquarters this date, via telegraph, is forwarded for your information:

"General Order passed regarding Enlistment Regulations Consent of wife not necessary Enlistment at 18 valid without consent of parents or guardians Discharge by purchase not a right but a privilege to be granted only in very exceptional cases and subject to application therefore, to O C Unit being made within three months after enlistment and accompanied by fifty dollars."

LINER DIOMED IS SUNK BY A GERMAN SUB.

After a Chase of Four Hours the Lampert and Holt Steamer Is Destroyed—Officers Killed by Shell Fire

MOST OF CREW ESCAPED

Special Cable to The Examiner:

QUEENSTOWN, August 23. — The Lampert and Holt liner Diomed was sunk by a German submarine to-day. Her captain, quartermaster and the steward were killed by the shells fired by the submarine.

The liner attempted to escape but surrendered after being pursued for four hours. Two boats were lowered and forty-nine members of the crew got away, taking with them the body of the captain.

Shortly afterwards one of the boats was swamped. Two Englishmen and five Chinese were drowned. The others were picked up by the second boat. The survivors say that during the pursuit the Chinese firemen of the Diomed refused to continue stoking and the work had to be undertaken by the deck hands. The submarine stood off at a distance of about half a mile until the Diomed sank

THIS AFTERNOON'S POLICE COURT

Man Charged With Theft Allowed to go on Suspended Sentence

At this afternoon's police court, suspended sentence was imposed on a former employee of the Canadian Pacific Railway, who pleaded guilty to a charge of stealing a quantity of copper wire from the company and disposing of it to a local junk dealer. The theft was discovered after the accused had departed for Chicago. Extradition proceedings were instituted and the accused returned to Peterborough. He was represented in court by Mr. McElderry, who made a strong plea for leniency on the grounds that restitution had been made and the prisoner had worked for the company for upwards of twenty-seven years, also he had a wife and family dependent upon him.

"All those years of service and good conduct is one of the reasons why he should have been fixed in his honesty," remarked Magistrate Dumble.

His Worship very reluctantly allowed the prisoner to go on suspended sentence.

German Fleet Badly Defeated In Battle in the Gulf of Riga

The Russian Fleet, Aided by British Submarines and Destroyers, Put Eleven of the Enemy's Ships Out of Commission.

THE "MOLTKE" SUNK

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, Aug. 23 — Russian naval forces in the Gulf of Riga have won a decided victory over the German fleet which penetrated the gulf on August 19, according to official Petrograd despatches which reached here last night The great German battle cruiser Moltke, one of the finest ships of her kind afloat, was destroyed by the Russian ships, as well as three German cruisers and seven torpedo boats, all unnamed

It would appear from the Petrograd despatches that the admiral in command of the Russian naval forces in the Gulf of Riga permitted the German fleet to work its way through the narrow entrance to the gulf, when at his leisure he directed the attack that cost the Germans so dearly Not only, according to Petrograd, did the Russian fleet overwhelm the German forces, but having destroyed the bulwark of the German battle line, finally drove the invaders to flight from the gulf and into the comparatively open waters of the Baltic.

Troops Exterminated.

But the Russian victory did not end with the defeat of the German naval forces The invading fleet was accompanied by four enormous transports all crammed with troops. These troops attempted to make a landing on the shore of Pernov Bay, on the northeastern shoulder of the Gulf of Riga Either the accompanying warships were unable to support the landing of the troops or the Russian strategy in some way overcame the advantage of German naval guns, for the troops were permitted to land and were then attacked and exterminated by the Russian forces at that point

The Petrograd despatches say that the Russian troops at Pernov did not even have the support of artillery Furthermore they were taken completely by surprise How they accomplished the utter defeat of a force which must have numbered some 8,000 men, aided by the gunfire of convoying ships, and later captured the transports as well is not explained

This account of Russian successes in the Gulf of Riga was supplied by the President of the Duma. M V Rodzianko, at Petrograd.

The Official Statement

A despatch to the Central News which is corroborated by the Times, gives the text of the announcement of the President of the Duma as follows

"In the Riga battle the Germans lost one super Dreadnought, the Moltke, three cruisers and seven torpedo boats

"The German fleet has withdrawn from Riga Bay

"The Germans tried to make a descent near Pernpvin (Hernigel on the east shore of the Gulf of Riga some 35 miles north of Riga?) Four barges crammed with soldiers took part in the descent They were repulsed by the Russian troops without the cooperation of artillery, the Germans being exterminated and the barges captured"

Caused Great Rejoicing.

The statement made in the Duma last night by the President of the Chamber M Rodzianko, that the German fleet had been defeated at Riga with the loss of the battle cruiser Moltke and three other cruisers and seven torpedo boats, elicited unbounded enthusiasm and was accompanied by touching scenes The deputies of all parties mutually congratulated one another

The news spread through the city and the people gathered at the newspaper offices awaiting that hanging out of the official bulletin concerning the battle The people regard this reported victory as the turning of the tide in favour of Russia.

The effect of the destruction of a German vessel of the Dreadnought class by a British submarine will, it is expected here, have a beneficial political result and tend to dissipate the cloud of discontent over the apparent inaction of the western allies While the Russian Government and the military and naval authorities have a complete understanding with those in authority in the allied countries at

EX-FIRE CHIEF THOS. RUTHERFORD DEAD

Peterborough Loses One of Its Best Known and Most Popular Citizens in the Passing of the Veteran Fire-fighter.

A WELL KNOWN RESIDENT

Peterborough lost one of its best known and most highly respected citizens yesterday, when Mr. Thomas Rutherford, of the firm of Rutherford Bros., contractors, and for many years Chief of the Peterborough Fire Brigade, passed away at his home 625 Union Street, after a long illness The deceased who was sixty-six years of age, was a life-long resident of Peterborough, having been born here in 1849 Few citizens have been so prominent in so many different activities as Mr Rutherford, and few have held the friendship of such a large circle of friends. As a sportsman, as chief of the fire brigade, as a contractor, he was known to everyone. A host of friends here and elsewhere will learn with deep regret of his death.

Mr Rutherford was a son of the late Robinson Rutherford, one of the first councillors in Peterborough. He was educated in the local schools In his younger days he was famous throughout Ontario as a cricketer and his long drives are still talked of by the old residents Later on and until a few years ago he was equally famous as a curler, and represented the local club in many a hard-fought game, including the Tankard competition When the Fenian trouble arose in 1866, although only seventeen, the deceased enlisted for service with the Peterborough detachment

In business life the late Thos Rutherford was a contractor and, during his career, was connected with the erection of many of the largest buildings in the city He was the contractor for the Custom House and the Market Hall, and was superintendent over the construction of the Post Office In conjunction with his brother, Mr. Christopher Rutherford, he erected the Public Library, the King Edward School, the Hunter of Providence and Mount St. Joseph, as well as a large number of stores, hotels and other buildings.

As a fireman Mr Rutherford was perhaps best known He was a member of the old Peterborough Fire Brigade, previous to 1880, and when in that year the brigade was reorganized he became Chief of the Department, a position he satisfactorily fulfilled until the present paid brigade was inaugurated in 1907. During his long term in office he not only held the affection and respect of his men, but the confidence of the public, and he was known throughout Ontario as a fearless and efficient fire-fighter With the means appara tus and facilities then at their command the local volunteer brigade did splendid work and the deceased was responsible to no small measure for the efficiency obtained. For many years, too, Mr Rutherford was a member of the local band

He is survived by his wife, two sons Walter at home, and Ernest in Milwaukee, and three daughters Mrs Roy Richardson of Milwaukee Mrs Geo Hardill of Orillia and Mrs H P Mezgan of Peterborough One brother, Mr Chris Rutherford and four sisters, Mrs Jas Kendry Mrs J. D Cruz, Mrs Sharpe and Miss Sarah Rutherford, all residing in Peterborough, also survive

The funeral will take place on Tuesday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock to Little Lake Cemetery Six members of the old Volunteer Fire Brigade will act as pall-bearers

Berlin Claims That German Prisoners Interned at Amherst, Nova Scotia, Have Been Badly Treated

ENEMY IS VEXED

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN, Aug 23 As a result of increasing serious reports concerning the treatment of German civilian prisoners interned at Amherst, N.S., according to which men housed in an unventilated and unsanitary factory building had been punished for attempting escape and less serious infractions of rules by confinement in a brick oven, the German authorities are now contemplating retaliatory measures against the Canadians both soldiers and civilians imprisoned here. Approximately seven hundred Germans are now interned at Amherst

SCHOOL QUESTION SETTLED

OTTAWA, AUG. 23 It is asserted here on good authority that the Ontario Separate School question is on the eve of settlement as a result of an important conference held here last week at which the Ontario Government, the new Separate School Commission and the French and Irish elements were represented.

The basis of the agreement is thought to be the practical abandonment by the Ontario Government of the famous regulation "seventeen" which has been the cause of so much controversy since it was promulgated some five years ago.

German Positions in Vosges Captured By French Troops

Long Stretches of the Enemy's Trenches Were Wrecked by Bombardment That Lasted Several Hours, After Which the French Infantry Rushed in and Took the Positions ---British Submarines Again Active in the Sea of Marmora.

INTENSE ACTIVITY ON THE WESTERN FRONT

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, (French Official Communique) Aug. 23.—After wrecking long stretches of the enemy trenches in the Vosges by heavy bombardment that lasted several hours, the French captured several German positions by infantry charges, the War Office reported this afternoon.

In practically every sector of the battle front intense activity was displayed throughout Sunday.

In the Artois region grenade battle occurred around Souchez and Neuville without important results. The French long range artillery bombarded the railway and station on roads between Lens and Menin, Listard and Loos, and Lille and Douai.

"Between Somme and the Oise a fierce artillery duel proceeded Sunday."

"In the Argonne region, at several points, and in Bolante woods there were brief clashes with bombs and petards."

TOKIO, Aug. 23.—Premier Okuma states that Japan has decided to give greater assistance to Russia to prosecute the war. He could not discuss the details, but allowed it to be understood that this assistance would take the form of the forwarding of greater supplies of munitions.

Japan has decided to employ all available governmental and private resources for increasing the output of munitions for the Allies, particularly Russia.

The Japanese Government believes the time has arrived for more concerted action against the enemies of Japan and her Allies.

BERLIN, Aug. 23.—The Russian fortress City of Ossowetz has been captured by the Germans, it was officially announced this afternoon.

LONDON, Aug. 23.—A despatch from Udine, Italy, says the fact is now disclosed that joint military action by Italy, with England, France and Russia, against Turkey was arranged by the Italian General Porro during his visit to the Anglo-French front in July. The plans studied then, it is said, can immediately be put into action.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 23.—Heavy attacks by the reinforced British troops on Turkish positions in Suvla Bay region have been repulsed with severe enemy losses, the War Office announced to-day.

The Turkish trenches were first subjected to violent artillery fire. The British then charged, but were unable to penetrate the Turkish first lines.

SOFIA, Bulgaria, Aug. 23.—The Turkish collier Espahan was torpedoed by a British submarine at Haidar Passa, and the steamer Budos of the German-Levant Line, provided with munitions and provisions was sunk in the Sea of Marmora.

COALITION AND ELECTION.

The Toronto World takes the suggestion of the Toronto News, to extend the life of the present parliament, as a hint at a coalition government. A coalition government is something that cuts both ways. It can only be justified as a expedient in promoting our war activities, and will not be in place after the war is over. One objection to a coalition government would be the difficulty in getting in the "as you were" position when its functions were ended at the end of the war. There would be no leader in the party sense, no authority to issue a call and appeal to the country to settle the question of future government, by a general election. Though the British Coalition Government may be necessary in the circumstances, and do a much needed work, it is a question whether when the war is over there will not be a serious muddle in getting back to the old party situation—in disentangling political lines now merged into a coalition government. Interests—big interests—that had the voice of the country behind them as represented by the late government may suffer.

We have no need of a coalition government in Canada. Things are working nicely as they are. Both parties are working in unison now, doing as effective work as if there were a nominal fusion of party interests in a coalition government. All that is needed now to secure continued party cooperation is the assurance of Sir Robert Borden that there will be no election during the war. If he would say that, whatever party feeling may exist to prevent full and perfect unity of action, would disappear. If the war should not end before the expiry of the term of the present Parliament in October, 1916, the life of parliament might be extended from term to term, as parliament in session, on occasion, adjourns de die in die, from day to day. Such an arrangement would maintain party lines, party cohesion, party spirit of policy and not in the contentious ways that are necessary under our form of government; so that when the war ended and an appeal to the people would be indicated and necessary. there would be definite issues of party policy on which to base such an appeal. We are doing very well as we are for the time being; working, not as political parties, but patriotic Canadians, with all possible earnestness and harmony, with no distraction from our work except the still imminent peril of a possibility of a general election breaking the entente cordiale—the unwritten, but virtually tangible compact—between the two parties to sink partizanship in common effort to promote the success of Canada's participation to promote the cause of Empire. And with a wave of his hand Sir Robert Borden can eliminate this fly from the ointment.

ALL ARE IN THE FIGHT.

The Examiner has frequently called attention to the fact that all the fighting in this war is not done in the trenches. If we can get soldiers into the field we can depend upon the stay-at-homes to help them. If our young men will take to the trenches our women will help them as they are helping now. There is a demand for sand bags that can be made in our homes by our helping women; that is there is a demand for jute bags, to be filled with sand for the building of trenches. Sand bags are not quite what is asked from us; but the raw material of sandbags. This is a war of trenches, and many of us do not appreciate the importance of sand bags in the matter of trenches. A letter from a lady in England to another in Canada, tells how busy the women in England are in making sand bags, and a letter from an infantry officer at the front, tells of the important help they are. He says:

"We want a tremendous lot of sand bags. Our division alone has been using a million a month. For one battalion alone we usually require about 2,000 a day for our present trenches, but we have not been able to get them in sufficient quantities lately. If you saw a shell burst on a parapet with sand bags, and on one without, you would soon see how many lives they save. And if it is to be a war of attrition, we want to take every possible means to avoid loss of men in the trenches."

While the men are fighting in the trenches we can count upon the women at home to fight with them. When the latter reflect that the sand bag they are making will help to save a life of perhaps some of the brave lads that go from Peterborough, they can feel that they are doing their share of the fighting.

In addition to the call of duty—to the appeal to manhood that comes to all our young men eligible for enlistment — there is the encouragement that they are not required to do all the fighting. Our women at home knitting socks, rolling bandages, and stitching sand bags; our men who can't fight contributing machine guns, are doing actual fighting in the only way they can fight. We are all enlisted in this war, or all should be. The young men who show themselves men by enlisting at the same time enlist others in the fight. If they do not go to the war they miss the chance, they evade the duty that comes to us all to help end this awful war. The end will come all the sooner if all who can fight enter the fight, and the more men from Peterborough and elsewhere we place in the ranks, the bigger the fight we put up at home. There may be danger; but there is danger at home. "To every man upon this earth death cometh soon or late." Every day in our peaceful city death leaves its mark. Staying at home does not assure life; and great as the death toll, standing in the battle line does not always mean death. Then there is the higher consideration than the mere risk. This is the duty of fighting to save our country, of saving our homes and protect those who have no protectors in the great issue of the hour, but the men fit to fight, and will to fight.

"SKY PILOTS" IS RIGHT.

The Rev. Dr Robert Johnston of Montreal is 6 feet 6 inches. The Rev. Dr. McPhail of Pittsburg is 6 feet 4 inches. These two men are shining lights in the Presbyterian Church. What we want to know is are they orthodox? If so, were they brought up on the shorter catechism.—Kincardine Reporter.

MORAL BANKRUPTCY ALWAYS EVIDENT.

Each day furnishes corroborative evidence if, indeed, further evidence be necessary of the complete moral bankruptcy of Germany. Neutrals, and particularly Americans, were for a long time unwilling to credit the reports of the abominable crimes committed by the German army in Belgium. The sinking of the Lusitania has opened the eyes of all to the fact that the laws of war and the laws of humanity are to the Germans, like the Belgium treaty, mere "scraps of paper." Whatever may be the final outcome of the war, the German nation will forever have to bear the shame of this reversion to barbarism. —New York Herald.

RUSSIA ONLY BEGINNING.

Russia is only at her beginning. Her strength is inexhaustible. Behind the army is a complete national unanimity and an inspiring faith that the Empire is fighting for its soul and for a new and fuller life. The Czar warns his people that the war will be long, and that many vicissitudes must inevitably occur, but Russia, equally with Great Britain, France, and Italy, will carry on the fight, unperturbed and undaunted until the enemy is crushed, "for without that peace is impossible." Russia is a country of pity and resignation. Its people accept without a murmur the troubles of the darkness and the night, for their trust that light and comfort will come at last is unshaken. Of all European peoples their faith in the divine direction of the world is the strongest.—London Daily Express.

THE SPIRITUAL BONDS OF EMPIRE.

Beyond all else the South African victories have revealed in language that even Germany can hardly misread the spiritual bonds by which the Empire is knit together. To us, indeed, it is no revelation. The power of a free spirit has proved itself too often in our midst, for us to fear for its resistance to a far heavier strain than this. But our enemies are as yet incapable of comprehending that union and loyalty can rest on more enduring bases than the domination of material force or community of commercial interest. It is the supreme tragedy that that essential lesson must be written for Germany in letters of blood, and at bitter cost. South Africa and Canada and India, and Australia are bringing the new truth above her horizon. Not till the lesson is learned will the world have peace.—London Daily News.

PROHIBITION DURING THE WAR.

The following signed statement of the publisher of the Vancouver World, an independent Journal, is a significant indication of the way temperance sentiment is rapidly developing in British Columbia.

British Columbia is shortly to be asked to prohibit the liquor traffic during the war. A convention is to be held in this city in a few days, and a campaign will then be outlined, and plans for its prosecution made.

This is not the first time British Columbia has been swept by a similar campaign, but the present one presents unusual and unprecedented features. We believe that without exception former temperance movements have been crusades, having their origin in the moral and religious life of the community, and depending for success upon the moral sense and religious aspirations and prejudices of the people.

The present movement springs from causes, classes and interests which, in the main, have not hitherto been identified with temperance reform. It is in concordance with a world-movement remarkable in its extent, and arresting in its significance and power. It is supported by the Church, but it is outside and beyond the Church. It has gathered within its forces and influences which former crusades left untouched and cold.

One has only to move about in the business community of this city and province to be convinced how comprehensive is the extent of the present sentiment. It is noteworthy that it has passed almost in advance of the former fighting line of the temperance movement, and has taken charge of the situation with a directness and masterfulness which has carried it to victory in lands which seemingly have little in common in such matters.

Undoubtedly the war, responsible for many disillusionments, accounts for the present conditions. . . . . .

And so, British Columbia, its patriotic impulse finding expression in men and money, in guns, in comforts for trenches and hospitals, cannot fail to mark the anomaly of an ancient custom and a great industry, making for inefficiency, and providing an appalling sinkhole of sheer waste, at a time when our reduced resources are being tried to the limit and when the prospective duty of cares for the wounded and maimed and of the dependants of our dead is constantly before every reflective min.

The present campaign will, therefore, be an economic one. Throughout the province it is being fathered by shopkeepers, miners, professional men, mill hands, lumbermen, farmers, and business men of all kinds. . . . . .

The candid opinion of most sensible men today is unmistakably in one direction, namely, that no country that is at war has any business permitting the continuance of a trade which imposes unnecessary burdens on industry and commerce, and entails worse ravages than war itself.

That opinion The World shares, and pursuing its policy of supporting all efforts for the common good, it will lend every influence it possesses to a movement which asks for the suspension of the liquor traffic during the progress of the war and its restoration afterwards only by the expressed will of the people.

—John Nelson, Publisher.

THE REVOLUTIONARY RESULTS THAT WILL COME FROM THE WAR

Mr. A. G. Gardiner that brilliant English journalist, with whose writings most Canadians are already familiar, contributes to the London News and Leader a significant pen picture of what the war is doing for democracy. He says:

"Whatever the result, the world that will emerge when the deluge of blood has subsided will be a world that will be new and strange. There will be a chasm between us and our past unlike anything else in history. It will be as though generations of normal change have been swallowed up in the abyss.

"The old landmarks will have gone; the things that used to seem important will have become negligible; social relationships will have been transformed; ideas that were infinitely remote will have burgeoned, as it were, in a night—nothing will be quite as it used to be. Humanity will have opened, not a new chapter, but a new age. It will be like him who looked out over . . . . a universal blank.

Of Nature's works, to be expunged and razed, but it will be a blank on which we shall write the future in new terms, and in a new language. . . . . .

"A new England is coming to birth in the trenches of Flanders. The life of three million men, the flower of the nation is being revolutionized. That young man who has gone from the plow will not return to the plow on the same conditions. He has made a discovery. Up to August last he seemed of rather less importance than the cattle in the fields, for they were always well-fed and stalled, while his whole life had been a struggle with grinding poverty.

"Suddenly he is exalted high above the cattle. He is a person of consequence. The statesman, the squire, the parson, the magistrate—all become his suitors. He is dressed for the first time in good clothes good boots; he is well fed and well housed; he has pocket money; if he dies their future will be assured as it would never have been assured had he lived.

"It is all like a miracle. The discovery he has made is that when the real emergency comes his life is as valuable to the state as any life. And another thought that is dawning on him is this. If I am necessary to the state in time of war, the state must be just to me in time of peace, when I am doing its work no less worthily and no less vitally than on the battlefield."

As to the social and economic revolution that is in progress, Mr. Gardiner says:

"If we had eyes and ears for what is happening inside and outside the house we should be startled by its significance. Mr. Lloyd George doubles the income tax and the city declares that he should have a dukedom. The railroads are taken over by a stroke of the pen, and the state becomes the guarantor of banker and trader, as well as of the interests of three millions of its citizens.

"We have found that in time of crisis the state is everything and private interests nothing. It will not be without resistance that private interest will recover its old dominion over the state.

The war will undoubtedly be a great leveller of class distinctions, not only in the British army, but outside of it. It will contribute largely to the ultimate downfall of the drink traffic. It will advance immensely the demand for public ownership of public utilities, and will lead to a fairer division of profits between Labour and Capital. It will not do away with party shibboleths but it will lessen their value, and train the people in the belief that the state must always come first, and party afterwards. Its enormous size and enormity of character will lead to a universal demand that in all future wars, if there should be one, the men who are to do the fighting, and the women who are to be the chief sufferers, shall have a proper voice in the making. And while it is impossible to realize it now, the time may come when, instead of questioning the very existence of a God because of existing horrors, we shall see that a world-at-war was a necessary prelude to permanent peace, and to the settlement of many social problems of which no solution could otherwise have been found. In short, that the cost of the titantic struggle, great as it may have been, was not too great to pay for the benefits received.—Brantford Expositor.

MORE THAN "HOT AIR"

The following lines have another interest for us than their intrinsic merit in presenting the call of duty - a local interest. They are written by Private Eric C. McDougall, a brother of Mrs. (Col. Dr Young), and the man who gave the advice not "to go" was Dr. Young. The bias as to encourage young men who do as to encourage youn gmen who do not think they are physically strong enough. When young McDougall was at the University his rather frail physique suggested that he enter the Forestry course for the sake of the open air opportunities, for roughing it. He and another were sent to British Columbia by the government. There the "roughing it" built him up and made him strong made "fit wind long as the snow peak is high," and warranted the medical examiner saying — "Put your shirt on—you're fit." Young McDougall is now at the front doing his bit. The puny college boy is now as hard as nails, thanks to open air and roughing it. Many a puny city lad would get strength and be made physically strong by the strenuous drill work of the trenches the invalid would become the athletes. This is truth, not mere "hot air." These are the lines.

You are going to say, in the Medical Corps,
You leave wife and children behind.
They need men like you at the seat of the war.
And they're not always easy to find.
You're high in the service, you couldn't hold back,
Promotion for you won't be slow,
But when I suggest that I take the same track
You hasten to tell me, "Don't go."

The points that you make in your kindly advice,
For which please accept my best thanks,
Are, I'm not good enough for an officer's job,
And somewhat too good for the ranks.
My job is important, my place can't be filled,
My health isn't up to the test,
There are plenty of men to be wounded or killed,
To stick where I am would be best,
I answer "The country is calling for men
To battle for freedom and right.
That isn't "Hot Air" from an editor's pen,
We know why were're all in this fight
They all give up something, from comfort to lives,
I've no one depending on me
Let those stay at home who have children and wives,
Just now it's worth while to be free

I've climbed a few hills since the last time we met,
I've hiked many miles through the woods,
The Chief sent me out information to get,
And he says I've delivered the goods
My wind is as strong as the snow peak is high,
What I shoot at I frequently hit,
I think I agree with the medical guy
Who said "Put your shirt on—you're fit."

My job is important; I gave it its due,
I let my two mates go ahead.
There's one who will sail in a fortnight or two,
And one by this time may be dead
I wound up the contract, it looks like my turn,
My chance for returning is fair.
And from me and my comrades old England may learn
The West raises more than "Hot Air."

For the benefit of those who think otherwise let me say that in no sea fight, except that off the coast of Chile, has any ship of the British fleet been either sunk or seriously damaged.—Mr. Balfour.

READY-MADE CLOTHES

We find, on ready-made clothes, finishing touches of many kinds which make them look chic. The home dressmaker is able to imitate many of these with comparatively little trouble.

In the last few years seam beading has been used to a large extent, but it does not give the same effect so often seen on ready-made garments, especially on those made of silk or fine materials. This finish may be obtained by loosening the upper tension of the sewing machine and lengthening the stitch. The two pieces of material which are to be seamed together are placed on top of each other with their edge even. Two layers of blotting paper are then inserted between them and they are either pinned or basted to the paper to hold them in place. The seam is then stitched and the blotting paper torn out. The sides of the seam are turned back, leaving the hemstitching open.

These seams are quite durable and add to the appearance of a garment. This method may also be used to give a hemstitched appearance to the hems of pillow slips and sheets.

"Nothing Succeeds Like Circulation"

It is the circulation of The Examiner that gets it so many "Want" and "For Sale" advertisements—a circulation that gives the advertiser every confidence of producing quick results.

When you write a "Want", tell all the important facts. If you are advertising for help, tell just what is to be expected of the applicants. As a matter of fairness, those who seek employment should know all the principal facts regarding a position.

"For Sale" advertising in The Examiner will show the facility with which you can turn "used things" that are no longer needed, into money quickly.

Pipp As a Pinch Hitter

Has More Triples and Homeruns Than Ty Cobb

Walter Pipp, secured by the Yanks from the Tigers, is one of the 1915 sensations of the American League. Pipp is one of the timliest hitters on the team and in addition to that he has hammered out more three baggers and more home runs than Ty Cobb, and has made almost as many doubles as the "Georgia Peach."

"Ball players," asserts Frederick Clarke, boss of the Pirates, "play better, snappier baseball when a crowd is present." Crowd of girls, umpires, policemen, or what kind of a crowd?

Selling Spent Bullets.

A western gun club which has maintained the same shooting range for many years, recently delegated a squad of labourers to comb the ground for spent bullets. The men gathered more than 35 tons of shot, which were sold at the rate of $70 a ton. Other clubs are beginning to do likewise.

Child Jockey a Wonder.

Fred Judy, the 82-pound jockey, who is something of a sensation on the Saratoga (N.Y.) track, is being touted as a coming wonder. He's 16 years old, handles a horse like a veteran and has outridden many of the best jockeys in the game. His home is in Kansas City where his father keeps a law office.

Maybe Bill Hart quit his umpiring job in the National League because he's a firm believer in the "safety first" rule.

A Boon to Golfers

From out of the heated confines of Tucson, Arizona, comes a story of a wonderful invention—the jumping Mexican golf ball.

The ball is so constructed that when it gets into the shade of long grass, or sinks into casual or other water, it immediately begins to jump, and it jumps so high that it clears the water or grass and is plainly visible to the searcher.

The Mexican jumping bean forms the core together with a little grub worm. Now these worms dislike shade and as soon as a ball goes into a shady place, such as high grass or water, the worm begins to flap its tail. In flapping it naturally will hit the jumping bean, which upon being flapped, immediately begins to jump.

This new invention is expected to prove a great boon to golfers who have a faculty of driving wild and sending their ball into dark, damp places.

TENNIS

The next schedule game of tennis will be played tonight on the two lawns at the Bowling Green at 5 o'clock, between St. Mary's and the Peterborough Ladies. The line-up is as follows:

St. Mary's—Miss E. Corkery, Miss F. McNamara, Miss B. Giroux, Miss K. O'Brien.

Peterborough Ladies—Miss Bentley, Miss M. McCarthy, Miss Myers, Miss Kennedy.

CAUGHT AFTER EXCITING CHASE

Examiner Special:

NEW YORK, Aug. 23. — "Jack" Mann, an actor, who told the police that he was a member of one of "the first families in the West End section of Boston," was arrested by Detectives Gompers and Elson, after a chase of several blocks in the vicinity of Seventh avenue and 150th street, in which neighbourhood "gentlemen burglars" have been operating. Mann said that prior to April 19 he had been for a time dancing partner to Miss Valeska Surratt.

Detectives quote him as saying: "When I lost my job with Miss Russatt some of the fellows told me what an easy time I could have as a 'gentleman burglar.' So I decided to try the life. I certainly had an easy time while it lasted."

According to the statements made by detectives Mann admitted he was the perpetrator of forty or fifty burglaries in Harlem during the last few months. The loot he gained is said to be valued at about $15,000.

The specific complainant against Mann is Adolph Kaugman, of No. 460 West 131st street, who charges that the prisoner stole $500 worth of jewellery and clothing from his apartment.

The police found pawn tickets on Mann's person. They also have twenty skeleton keys and two jimmies which they say the Mann dropped during the chase at 3rd Seventh avenue and 150th street.

Mann bears ever mark of refinement in speech, manner and dress. The detectives say that before they began to follow him at 145th street and Broadway they saw him approach at least a dozen women and then how politely and leave them after speaking to them.

They saw Mann come out of a private house in 142nd street, near Bradhurst avenue, with a bundle. When they began to chase him, they say, Mann dropped the bundle and tried to escape by running through vacant lots.

DIVERGENT PATHS

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

Having business in a small town in the west I found within its limits a very pretty park bounded by substantial improvements. In its center was a bronze statue of a man in civilian's dress, in one hand a roll of parchment. I fancied that the original was either a distinguished public man or a philanthropist—quite likely the latter. Meeting a man who appeared to occupy an average position in the town I accosted him and asked him whom the statue represented.

"There's a story connected with it," he replied, "and if you will sit beside me on one of these benches I will tell it to you."

We seated ourselves, and he told me the following story:

"This is Rogers' park, and that is a statue of Ben Rogers, who founded it. More than fifty years ago Ben and Sam Rogers were boys, somewhat ragged, playing marbles and ball and such other boys' games right here where this park is now located. It was then a vacant tract and considered worthless. Now the property bordering on it is worth millions.

"Sam Rogers, the younger brother, was picked out for a failure in life because he couldn't hold on to his money. He was what was called chicken hearted, and whenever he saw any one in trouble for want of money down went his hand into his pocket. Ben, on the contrary, was marked for a rich man. He looked out for himself and rolled up money in a small way from the time he was ten years old.

"Ben Rogers stayed right here in this town and accumulated money slowly till the man who owned the land on which we are sitting died, and it was sold out for a song. Ben bought it and conceived the idea of making a park of it. He secured options on all the bordering property, then gave his original purchase to the town on condition they would make a park of it.

"Sam Rogers when about twenty-five years old left the town, regretted by every impecunious person in it. The more successful citizens said, "A good riddance." At the end of a dozen years Sam came back and surprised every one by bringing a fortune with him. When asked how he got it he said it was by pure luck. This was all they could get out of him, but I learned the truth long after his death. He had loaned a man a hundred dollars to save a piece of property he owned, the property afterward became very valuable, and when the owner died, having no one else to leave it to, he left it to Sam Rogers.

"Sam on his return resumed his giving to needy persons, only he now gave $10 where formerly he had given 10 cents. His brother, Ben, had been saving his money and had got enough together to begin to think about making an investment on a larger scale. It was soon after Sam's return that the original owner of this property died. Ben not having enough money to carry out his enterprise called on his brother to go in with him. Sam said that he didn't want to make any more money than he had already, but he would loan Ben all he wanted.

"I was then studying law with Ben Rogers' attorney and know whereof I'm going to tell you. Sam paid no attention to the securities his brother gave him and one day woke up to learn that he had been swindled out of all he possessed. He never told any one how he lost his fortune and enjoined secrecy on his brother's attorneys. By this time he was too old to make another fortune and lived a precarious life till he finally died from want of proper sustenance and medical attendance. A number of persons whom he had befriended bought a lot in the cemetery and buried him there.

"Ben Rogers became the most influential man in the town, and when any important town matter was to be decided he was called upon for his opinion. He built a church on a worthless tract of land he owned and sold off the rest of the tract for another fortune. He established other institutions, contriving to make money out of all of them.

"When he died he left money for a suitable monument, desiring that he should be buried in the park that bore his name and which it had given him so much pleasure to have provided for the enjoyment of the people of his native town. His executors had been instructed by him before his death to provide that statue, for which and its pedestal $50,000 had been provided in the will."

When the narrator had finished his story I expressed a desire to visit the grave of Samuel Rogers. He told me that the cemetery was not half a mile away, and I determined to take a stroll in that direction. He also told me where to find the grave in among the less desirable lots. I thanked him for his story and passed on.

When I reached the cemetery I asked a well to do looking person I saw there if he could direct me to the grave of Samuel Rogers. He looked at me doubtfully, then said:

"I reckon you're looking for the monument of Benjamin Rogers, the philanthropist and founder of Rogers park. It's in the center of the town."

I passed on and presently at a little distance saw a grave covered with flowers. Approaching it, I read on a heap headstone the name Samuel Rogers, the

A GENERAL MEETING.

A general meeting of all committees and members of the Speakers' Patriotic League will be held in the Recruiting Rooms this evening (Monday) at 8 o'clock. It is requested that all those interested in the work be present as several important matters have to be taken up for immediate decision. It will not be necessary for the Ladies' Auxiliary to attend this meeting.

Lieut. J. Rex. Stratton has received orders to report at the War Office, London, Eng. He will be appointed to the Royal Engineers. Lieut. Stratton will sail in a few days.

WAS ON LEAVE IN OLD LONDON

Mr. Wm. Colquhoun has received a letter from his son, Corporal Geo. P. Colquhoun, a local boy with the 4th Battery, 1st Canadian Contingent. Corp. Colquhoun writes from London as follows:

Just a few lines to let you know I arrived in England last night O. K. in the best of health, for a few days leave. It seems a treat to get away from the noise of the guns, but will soon be back at it again. It is 3:30 a.m. Just got to the Union Jack Club and had a washup. We left France and the firing line on Friday 6th and was in London on the 7th, so you can see how quick you can get to the firing line.

Stock Markets

New York Stocks

The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad is in the market for 500 stock cars and has placed orders for fifty ore concentrate cars.

Wells Fargo Express Company has ordered thirty-five refrigerator cars from the Pullman Company.

If any explanation were needed for the refusal of wise men to have anything to do with the speculation in war stocks into which the unsophisticated are rushing with such ardor and their hard earned money, it might be found in the price movements of some of the shares. The Lake Torpedo Boat, for example, was selling at 50 cents a share about seven months ago. Three weeks ago it price had been marked up to $50 a share. Saturday it was selling at $15 a share.

Another example of the way in which war issues are marked up is furnished by the quotations for the Winchester Arms stock. On Thursday the closing price for that company's shares, the par value of which is $100, was $1750. At the opening Friday the quotation was 1825 a share, and at the close it was $2360 a share. That makes the price of Winchester Arms Company's stock the highest of any marketable stock known, with the exception of that of the Fifth Avenue Bank of this city. Old Standard Oil stock "ex bloc" was quoted yesterday at $1500 a share, a price that makes that issue a "piker" to use the expressive vernacular of the curb.

At the offices of Goldman, Sachs & Co., the stock market rumour was denied that the firm was to take over the reorganization of the Rock Island Railway.

In despatches from Washington it was said the Department of Justice had announced that its appeal in the Steel Trust case might not be filed until February or March next because of the voluminous record.

ITALY'S WAR COST

Ferraris, the former Italian Minister of Finance, estimates Italy's war cost until December, 1915, at $1,250,000,000.

OTTAWA GOLD SHIPMENTS

Ottawa has up to date sent to New York for London account, $98,882,000 in gold. This includes the recent shipment of $4,534,000, which practically cleared up Bank of England gold shares in the country.

BOUNTY ON ZINC

The Canadian government is offering a bounty on a sliding scale for the production of refined zinc, when the price in London falls below 35 pounds per ton, provided the bounties shall not be paid on zinc produced before the expiration of the war, nor after July 31, 1917, nor on zinc contracted for by the Shell Committee at 35 a pound or over. The action of the government is intended to stimulate the production of refined zinc in Canada.

MORE WAR ORDERS

Additional large orders for shells and other war material are pending, says a New York despatch. One agency that does a large export business figures that pending business of this character exceeds $400,000,000. One difficulty in placing these orders is found in the fact that many plants able to handle them are already filled up with war orders. One company is figuring on a contract that will involve an outlay of more than $150,000,000. Delivery cannot be promised before the last half of next year.

BIG BUSINESS

Just closed a $75,000,000 contract with the Russian government, says a New York despatch, concerning Charles M. Schwab. These contracts for war supplies ordinarily running into many millions have become so commonplace nowadays as to attract little more than passing notice.

Only the business man to whom a $100,000,000 order would be a huge one, can readily grasp the significance of what a $75,000,000 order means, what it entails to secure it, and the tremendous organization required to fill it.

TRICKS OF THE ALFALFA TRADE.

More than one thousand reports on alfalfa growing in Wisconsin have been received by the Alfalfa Order of the Wisconsin Agricultural Experiment Association. These reports clearly show that the principal causes for failures with alfalfa in Wisconsin are:

1. Failure to inoculate the soil.
2. Attempting to grow alfalfa on sour or acid soils without liming the land.
3. Poor preparation of the seed bed and improper methods of seeding.
4. Weeds: heavy growths of which crowd out the alfalfa.
5. Too thick seeding of the nurse crop. Not over one bushel of grain should be sown with the alfalfa, and if oats is used it should be cut for hay.
6. Late Seeding. Seeding after August 15 is dangerous practice. Sufficient growth is often not secured before cold weather sets in so that the alfalfa may stand the winter.
7. Late cutting. Cutting alfalfa after the first week in September has resulted in serious winter-killing of many otherwise good stands of alfalfa. Alfalfa should have at least six to eight inches growth to afford sufficient winter protection.
8. Pasturing. Late and close pasturing are particularly dangerous.
9. Poor soils. Although alfalfa is a great soil enricher it requires at least a medium fertile soil. Poor soils should be well manured.
10. Low, flat, poorly drained soils. Alfalfa requires a well-drained field. On flat, heavy clay soils which hold water from melting snows and heavy rains in the early spring alfalfa may be heaved out by alternate freezing and thawing weather. A sloping field which will provide ample run-off for surface water is more desirable.

By a curious coincidence the 15th Hussars, quartered round an old chateau in Flanders, have tethered their horses to stout iron rings used for the same purpose by the 15th Hussars 100 years ago after Waterloo.

Found the French Fighting as One

Owen Johnson Thinks Americans Should Know More of the Nation's War Spirit

NEW YORK, Aug. 23. — Owen Johnson, the novelist, who has just returned from a month in France, where he has been gathering material for magazine articles, says that the thing that struck his attention most when he landed in New York was the green and red parasols of the women on the pier. "There are no colours in Paris," he said. "Every one is in black or some other dark stuff. Those who feel like rejoicing themselves refrain out of delicacy, for fear they may offend the feelings of some one else who has reason to mourn."

One of the purposes of Mr. Johnson's visit was to present to the French authorities, as an American who had lived in France and was strongly sympathetic with the French cause, the advisability of allowing a little more publicity for the French side of the war in this country.

"The French," he said, "have seen the results of the great German campaign for American public opinion, and naturally they are reluctant, for this reason as well as for others, to set their side of the case out more fully. The French people are proud. Their attitude in this war has been, 'We are doing as we should, but we will let other nations find this fact out for themselves. They are inclined to think that a sister Republic would naturally give them her sympathy. They fail to realize the American psychology and are apt to think that when a true presentation of the case is given once that is sufficient.

"The result is that the idea has tended to grow up in some circles in this country that the war is a German-English conflict primarily. Many French leaders are now beginning to realize this, and many American friends of France are urging that something be done to correct it to allow the freer passage of news, to permit American observers to see more of the French side of the war, and to send representative Frenchmen to tell stories of the heroism of French troops.

"I am inclined to think that some such measures will be taken perhaps next winter. I had interviews of an hour's duration with President Poincare and Foreign Minister Lelcasse; I also talked with Premier Viviani, Paul Deschanel, President of the Chamber of Deputies, and former Premier Briand. I had an hour's talk with General Gallieni, Governor of Paris, and an hour with General Joffre, in the course of the period of several days which I was allowed to spend at the front.

"The unanimity of the French is of course amazing, they are absolutely determined to end the possibility of the recurrence of a similar war. From the President down to the factory workers they all said the same thing. 'We realize that it will take a long, hard fight to beat the Germans, but we want to finish things up so that our children will never have to go through this sort of thing.'"

Mr. Johnson not only saw the officials and officers he went into factories, into hospitals, into trenches—into the 200 great ouvroirs in Paris which furnish employment to about 350,000 women whom the war would otherwise have made destitute—women, many of them of good family, now working for from 1 franc 25 to 1 franc 75 a day, making clothing and other supplies for the army. He thinks that the spirit of all France as he saw it ought to be put before the Americans by representative Frenchmen—"such men as the philosopher Bergson or Pastor Wagner," he suggested. "Men like James Hazen Hyde and Whitney Warren are doing a great work in Paris, but there ought to be more chance for Americans to find out what France is really thinking.

One thing that Mr. Johnson says has injured the reputation of the United States in France is the poor quality of some of the goods shipped over in the first war contracts.

Mr. Johnson had unusual opportunities getting over the French lines at the war front. He was in a party containing Walter Hale, the artist; Arnold Bennett, the English novelist, a representative of the British Foreign Office, and one of two American newspaper men. They got near enough to the front to be under fire three times, and in one case Mr. Johnson went so far forward in a French mining gallery that he was actually under a German trench.

Shell Cathedrals.

"I happened to see the Germans bombarding the Cathedral of Rheims," he said, "about June 20 and the Cathedral of Arras some ten days later. There was absolutely no excuse for it in either case. Later I lunched with M. Dalimier, Minister of Public Instruction, under whose department comes the care of historic monuments, and he told me that he was afraid the Germans would in time destroy even what was left at Rheims. Every time the French won a success anywhere, he said, the Germans evened up by another bombardment of cathedrals; he said that at Soissons was also suffering. 'There is in the Cathedral of Rheims,' he told me, 'some of the priceless old stained glass, several centuries old, which has survived all the bombardments so far. We do not dare to put up scaffolding to take it down and take it away to a place of safety lest the Germans will use that as a pretext—calling it an observation tower, or something of the sort—for the complete destruction of the building.'"

Under German Trench.

Mr. Johnson was under fire on the Lorette Hills and at Blangy, near Arras. At the latter place he and his companions went up into a house, half ruined by shells, and took pictures through the holes blown in the wall of the German trenches sixty meters away. "If they had ever seen us," he said, "a single shell would have blown us all into the air." Later the French officers who were guiding the party took them down into a long underground gallery. When they had walked perhaps eighty yards the guide stopped and told them to listen. Up above them they could hear a muffled murmur—the sound of many men moving. It was the German trench, perhaps twenty-five feet above their heads. The French gallery had been driven under far enough to catch the sound of a pick that might be struck into the ground anywhere near by, and thus to head off German attempts at countermining.

They found the French soldiers serious and determined, but cheerful; indeed one of the most treasured photographs is that of an infantryman, well behind the line, playing on a xylophone—or rather hyalophone—made out of empty bottles hung from a rope by strings of varying length.

"One thing that shows how the nation is united," said Mr. Johnson, "is the fact that on the Executive Committee of the Secours National, which arranges for all the war relief among soldiers' families, you find the Archbishop of Paris, the chief rabbi, the chief Protestant minister, Royalists, Bonapartists, and Radicals. That never happened before in France."

FRENCH PAPERS VERY BITTER ON ARABIC DISASTER

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, Aug. 23.— The Paris newspapers comment with unusual bitterness on the sinking of the Arabic. The Temps prints a column editorial headed "A New Outrage Against the United States," in which it declares all German explanations have been vain and false.

"The Germans declared the Lusitania was torpedoed because it was carrying munitions to the Allies, but this excuse is not applicable to the Arabic," the Temps says. "German infatuation seems to consider this new crime against trans-Atlantic traffice can intimidate Americans. Admiral Von Tirpitz desired to inaugurate the opening of the Reichstag by a new submarine victory over an enemy vessel of commerce abroad, which were only non-belligerents and neutrals."

The Journale des Debats says: "Neither the reprobation of public conscience nor official protests and warning appear to influence the German mind or incline the Berlin Government to modify the principles, contrary to all public law, which inspire its conduct of the war. The torpedoing of the Arabic is indeed one of those acts which it was declared at Washington would be considered 'deliberately unfriendly.'" Georges Berthoulat, managing director of La Liberte, signs a violent editorial headed "The Barbarians Keep On," in which he says the passengers on the Arabic were saved from wholesale drowning only by the exceptionally fine weather.

NOTHING LIKE IT FOR COLDS.

Mrs Holland Ferguson, Sheffield, N.B., writes: "Dr Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine has cured my children and myself of severe colds. We are never without it in the house. There is nothing like it for colds and throat trouble, and it is so soothing and pleasant to take, my children would drink a whole bottle if they were permitted."

Rains a Little Almost Every Day At Shorncliffe

Havelock Boy Writes Interesting Letter to His Mother From England—Has Taken Little Trips to Various Points of Interest

HAVELOCK, Aug. 23—Mrs. Jas. D. Watson of town, received the following letter last week from her son, Pte. Harry Watson:

Folkstone, July 27th.

Dear Mother,—Just a few lines to pass away the time as there is nothing doing for me to-day. I went to see the doctor this morning and when I see him I always get a day or two off. I'm feeling fine. Part of our Battalion is practicing shooting for the front, but it will be some time before they get there and it will be a long time before the rest go. I hear that Bell Bedou has been transferred to headquarters in Sandgate—some job at $3.00 per day and never go across to France. He sure is lucky, but he isn't the only one that's lucky, as he would change places with me if he could, but not much. I met the two Holderoft boys on Sunday. They are both well and looking fine. I meet people every day I've seen before or know some one they know. Fellows from the front are here in plenty. Bill met an old pal from France the other night. We have some time around here. We were at Dover, Canterbury and Etching Hill, and are going to London soon. We are going to see England since we are here and not have the trip for nothing. I have a chance to go to Ireland with a lad I know, and I have a good mind to go as we can travel for a penny a mile, so that it doesn't cost much. What kind of crops have you this year? I wouldn't like to farm here all my life. It has rained every day since we came. Some days are nice, but there is always a shower and nearly always it is cloudy with light rains. We had some time getting used to the English money. You can buy clothing very cheaply over here, first-class goods, too.

I will close now because I hear the bugle "Come to the cook-house door, boys," so I will have to go. Good-bye for now.

FAMOUS PHYSICIAN HAS HIGH PRAISE FOR ALGONQUIN PARK

Sir James Grant has just been spending a holiday at the "Highland Inn," Algonquin Provincial Park of Ontario. The eminent physician was really impressed with the possibilities of this beautiful region, and in a letter to Mr. Geo. W. Bartlett, Superintendent of the Park, says:

"That twenty years should have passed since this attractive park struck life in Ontario and this my first visit, I greatly regret. The scene beauty surrounding is unsurpassed in Canada; the climate condition remarkable as to its power of restoring the strength and vigour of the system labouring under debility; and the pleasure of boating, fishing and artistic camping in and around the numerous lakes in this great park, a source of enjoyment difficult to overestimate. The many and varied attractions are only in infancy. The pride and pleasure of thousands seeking rest, quietude and restoration of mental and physical vigour, will ere long make Algonquin Park a chief attraction of our progressive Dominion."

HUNS PLOTTED TO POISON BRITISH RESPIRATORS

All Orders for the Devices Were at Once Cancelled—They Are Now Carefully Made

Examiner Special:

NEW YORK, Aug. 21.—F. V. Springer, of New York, European representative of an American rubber manufacturing company, who was a passenger on the Cymric arriving here to-day, told of the alleged discovery by British authorities of a plot to poison respirators purchased for use of the troops in the trenches against chlorine gas. The discovery of the plot, he said, resulted in an immediate cancellation of all orders for respirators that had previously been placed.

Poison in the Sponge.

When the use of poison gas was first begun on the western battle-front," Mr. Springer said, "the Government immediately called upon all available factories for a big supply of rubber respirators. Thousands were delivered, some of which were also sold to hotels near London for use of guests in event of the dropping of poison gas bombs from Zeppelins.

"Suddenly, however, all contracts for respirators were cancelled, then it gradually became known that the governmentchemist had found that the sponge attachment had been impregnated with some kind of asphyxiating poison. What stock was on hand was destroyed and now they are manufactured in England only under Government supervision and only given out after being carefully examined."

TERRIBLE TOLL IN WAKE OF STORM

Many Homeless—Texas Tornado Took 185 Lives

Examiner Special:

CHICAGO, Aug. 21. Having lashed over middle western States in cracking-the-whip fashion with Galveston as the point of turning, and Wisconsin and the top of Illinois at the extreme end, the West Indian storm which did so much damage in Texas and other points, was wearing itself out to-day on Lake Michigan.

From Galveston on up through St. Louis, the wind and floods and heavy rains that went with the storm, left a trail of death and heavy damage to property. St. Louis, to-day appeared to have been the point where the final destructive fury was broken. Points north from the Missouri metropolis suffered heavy damage. But no loss of life has been reported in these sections.

Many are Homeless.

Train service was badly interrupted throughout the central path of the storm. Many washouts were reported. Wires, both telegraph and telephone, were put out of commission. Many persons were saved only by warnings from horsemen, who raced ahead of the storm.

Meagre reports from the vicinity of Poplar Bluff, in Southern Missouri, to-day pictured devastation in that section as a result of the rising waters and flooded lowlands. Railroad traffic was hampered in lower Missouri and Northern Arkansas, and property loss was large. There was no loss of life reported to-day, but many are homeless.

Live stock owners and produce farmers along the White and James Rivers suffered severely.

185 Dead Recovered.

Galveston, Texas, Aug. 21. 185 dead had been accounted for to-day as the toll of the gulf storm. Less than 100 are still missing, and it is believed that many of these will be found alive.

Letter From a Peterboro' Boy

Expects to Go to the Dardanelles —Transports Ready to Leave

Driver M. Montgomery, a Peterborough boy, who is with the Canadian Contingent, Ninth Field Battery, now stationed at Otterpool Camp, England, has the following to say of his experience since joining the colours:

"We are in hard training here and getting things ready for the front. Our transports are leaving here for the Dardanelles some day this week, so I can't say whether we will go there or not. The boys here are ready and anxious to go and get at it. We have been getting a terrible lot of rain lately, but it doesn't stop our drills. We go through it just the same. The boys are dissatisfied, since we landed here, over the paying system. Even our own officers are fed up with the way they are paying us. We don't know how we stand. They give us a book similar to a bank, and all they mark down is what we draw. They are holding back one pound a month as far as I know.

Everything is fine here at present. I met a lot of Peterborough boys at Sandling Camp with the 21st from Kingston. Seen the Leal boys, and my old friend I used to run with in Peterborough, Harry Howard, the Indian from Hiawatha. Sib Davidson is with us. Sako has a brother with me, and my Brother Scott he is with the 21st. Well, I must close. I wish to be remembered to the Peterborough boys if there are any left.

RICE LAKE TRIPS

The Steamer "Geneva" Having a Fairly Busy Season

Captain Harris of the steamer "Geneva" is bound to stimulate the excursion trade down the Otonabee River and Rice Lake, if cheap fares and prompt service will do it. He believes he has as convenient and as efficient steamboat service and as picturesque a trip to offer the citizens of Peterborough as any within their reach. This season the weather conditions have, of course, greatly hindered steamboat pleasure travel all over. The "Geneva" as well as the steamers of other lines of travel, have been "up against it" this season, as the phrase goes, and, during July, was filling in excursion contracts round the northern lakes, where she had a good book of orders for that month.

During this month the "Geneva's" regular Rice Lake service has been attracting fairly good business, but not as much as might be expected. This is to be attributed not only to the unfavourable weather, but also to the disturbed trade conditions caused by the war. The number of people out of employment, the percentage of the population who have left the city and the many patriotic movements making their calls upon the liberality of the community, have been causes which has led to an unusual shrinkage of holiday expeditions and consequent loss of trade in steamboat excursions.

Captain Harris, in order to meet these conditions, has been planning to run a series of "bargain day" trips to Rice Lake by reducing the fares on two days a week to 25 cents for the round trip—Wednesday and Friday. This has had the effect of attracting larger numbers of excursionists and without involving extra cost to the running expenses of the "Geneva." The time-table for this week will be found on another page. The steamer "Geneva" is very popular with the campers, who have located in increasing numbers on both banks of the Otonabee for the summer. The greater portion of those who live under the canvas are women and children. In most cases the men paddle or wheel down at night after their day's work, and return again in the morning. The "Geneva" gives special attention to conveying these campers and their outfits, as well as making the calls at the wharves and stopping places on the river.

ROOSEVELT ON SEA MURDER.

Letter from Former President Calling for Deeds, Not Words.

LONDON, Aug. 23. The Spectator publishes a letter from Theodore Roosevelt to Dr. J. William White, of Philadelphia, who is now in London.

The letter, dated at Oyster Bay, June 4, says:

"The sinking of the Gulflight and Lusitania, the hideous loss of life thereby caused to Americans, and above all the callous murder of hundreds of women and children by direct order of the military and naval authorities representing the present German Government—for this is precisely and exactly what the sinking of the Lusitania meant—should make our Government realize that what was needed for on our part was not words, but deeds."

"Unfortunately, this does not seem to have been the effect, and Americans who are sensitive of the honour of their country must therefore feel all the more pleased to have a private citizen step forward to make good, so far as may be, the failure of our Governmental authorities to care for the honour of this nation and the interests of mankind."

The latter part of this letter refers to a book written by Dr. White, entitled "Text-book of the war for Americans who return from a visit to the French and British fronts."

Dog Saves a Family of 11

Special to The Examiner:

ALBION, Aug. 23. The home of Antonem Barella on Hamilton street was destroyed by fire. The family of 11 was saved by the barking of the bull dog that awakened the father and mother. They were sleeping on the ground floor. The persistent yelping of the animal roused the parents and by the time they got to the children the flames were leaping higher than the house.

Barella rushed up stairs where nine children were asleep and carried all safely in two trips. The first time he brought five down and the second time he brought the remaining four.

The fire, it is believed, started from the sleeping room of Mr. and Mrs. Barella, where a lamp was burning. The curtains, it is thought, caught fire and the blaze was communicated to the furniture. The building was valued at $3,000 but was insured for only $1,500. The furniture was insured for $1,000.

The house burned to the ground. It was located outside the fire zone and no one thought to turn in an alarm until Chief Engineer Sawyer of the local fire department, who was returning home from Buffalo in an automobile, arrived. He manned the apparatus. Two lines of hose were run 1,700 feet and streams of water were played upon the building but they were ineffective to stop the fire.

The Funeral of the Late John E. Belcher

The funeral of the late John E. Belcher, C.E., took place from St. John's church yesterday afternoon at two o'clock, and the number and character of the attendance, showed the high respect and esteem in which he was held by the community in which he had passed so many years of an honorable, useful and active life. His former long and important official relations accounted for the presence in an official capacity of city and county council and officials, while the presence of a large congregation composed of out most authentic citizens, was testimony to the great esteem his private life and personal qualities evoked.

The simple and impressive burial service of the Church of England was conducted by Rev. Canon Davidson and Rev. Mr. Rattenbury, with appropriate special hymns by the choir and congregation. During the course of the service Rev. Canon Davidson paid a hearty and becoming tribute to the life of the late gentleman. In his public relations he had come into contact with a large number of the public and had won their universal respect and esteem. While a man of strong convictions and positive opinions, he had a catholic breadth of view in his attitude toward all branches of the Christian church. His strong individuality impressed itself on the community, and it could well be said of him that he left the world better for having lived in it. Especial emphasis was laid upon his religious and association with St. Johns church. He had held a chief place in the several restorations and improvements and buildings. His interest in its welfare was shown continuously and his services as church warden for two terms were evidence of the deep interest he took in the church, less important perhaps than the example set in faithful and regular attendance at the services of the church.

The pall bearers were Messrs. D. W. Dundas, R. B. Rogers, W. H. Hall, W. H. Dunford, E. A. C. Peck and Robt. Dobie. As the funeral cortege was approaching the church the great bell of the chimes tolled, and as the large procession that followed the remains to the cemetery left the church grounds, the chimes performed "Nearer My God to Thee."

Altogether the funeral ceremonies and services were a becoming tribute to the memory of one of our oldest, best known and most highly regarded citizens.

Interesting Letter From Capt. A. W. McPherson, M.D. to His Worship Mayor Buller

Peterboro's Medical Officer of Health is Actively Employed in the Treatment of Wounded Soldiers—Mentions the Names of a Number of Peterborough Boys Who Were Reported Wounded.

His Worship Mayor Buller has received an interesting letter from Capt. A. W. McPherson, M.D. It is three months since Capt. McPherson temporarily relinquished his position as Medical Officer of Health for the city in order to serve the colours. The letter reads as follows:

"I am stationed in a Canadian Convalescent Hospital. It was the first one that was established in England by the Canadians. It was originally the residence of Lord Farnborough, who was a member of the British Cabinet at the time of William Pitt. The estate is about one hundred and sixty acres in extent and really joins the city of London. The hospital is only nine miles from the centre of London. The estate was sold and was latterly used as a hotel and was called the Bromley Park Hotel. It was used as such until it was taken over for a hospital. A wealthy Canadian rented it and offered it to the Canadian Government for hospital purposes. The hospital was opened about the middle of May and I reported here the third of June after spending a couple of weeks as medical officer to a battalion at Shorncliffe. The hospital accommodation is limited to the number of tents we can put up and the number of beds we have in store. We were supposed to accommodate a hundred, but it is gradually growing, and now we have one hundred and seventy-five, and that is not enough.

Are Getting Ready.

Wait until after the next grip and that will not be long now if we can read the signs aright. Everything has been quiet on the western front, and especially in the British lines, for about a month. The British are apparently getting ready, piling up the munitions, sending over men, motor transports, etc., as fast as they can be moved. The hospitals in England are apparently getting ready for patients. It is likely that the patients will be sent over to England for treatment sooner than heretofore. The idea is that it is possible to get them over earlier so that the operations can be done in England. That means that the hospitals not being so far away, will be more easily supplied with food and other necessities, that it is easier to move the patients early than to move the hospital to France and then move all the food for staff and patients and all other supplies that will be needed. There are two hospitals started at Shorncliffe. They will accommodate about 1500. The University of Toronto will have charge of one of them. They are over here now two and a half months and none of them have done work with their unit. They got over after the need of their services was past, but they will be ready next time. Three or four Canadian hospital units have gone to the Dardanelles. Queen's men, with Mrs. Douglas and I guess the other Peterborough nurses is one of the units that have gone. Quite a number of medical men that came over on the same boat as I did have been sent to the Dardanelles. They joined the British service. Dr. Frederick is in France. I had a letter from him. It was very quiet at that time with them in the hospital. There are more Canadian nurses over here now than are needed in the Canadian services, and on that account they have been given over to the Imperial authorities. So far we have had no nurses here, although we need a couple, but we expect some this coming week. They have been sending cases out here that are hardly classified as convalescents, and they require more attention than we are able to give them. We have all kinds of injuries here, fractures, amputations, flesh wounds, joint injuries, rheumatism, etc. There are a great many with joint injuries and we are having apparatus installed for electrical treatment, massage, the application of heat, etc., so it looks as if they intend enlarging it. My work is very interesting and very instructive. I have the care of all the patients from the time they enter until the time they are asked to report elsewhere. We have a number of Peterborough boys. Marde McGill and Mosley, Dick Jones, who was transport officer in the second battalion came here last night, and Charlie Ackerman will be here likely to-morrow. I was up in London yesterday and was surprised to see him up out of bed and eating a meal that would make a farmer mad if he had to eat it all. He looks a little thin, but he was always so. His spirit is good. He is looking forward already to go home to Peterborough. There are a great many Peterborough people at Shorncliffe now with the different units. No doubt some of them will soon be moved over. Dick Ponton of Belleville was here a week ago and told us he had seen Col. Fee and Harold Matthews not long before coming over. We get news directly and indirectly from the different boys and then pass it on.

The Popular Colour.

Well, it looks as if the end were not yet with the war. England is not yet well aroused. It is really wonderful to see the number in khaki. You can't get into a car, or a compartment of a coach but you find half of them in khaki. It is the only popular colour. An absent-minded man in military age is eyed suspiciously by everybody. Even the women have battalions for some purpose or other. A couple of weeks ago our commanding officer was riding in London in a taxi and was passing a battalion of these military ladies, and the taxi driver called out to another taxi driver in passing: "Hey there, Bill, there goes my old regiment." A parish priest told us the other day that there was not a single man of military age in his parish. Another English church clergyman told me exctly the same story. The wealthy classes, the titled people, have done and are still doing their share. It is remarkable the number of young men as officers. They look like mere boys. Our Canadian regiments look to be so much more suitable for the positions, and a great many are being invited, and some are accepting, commissions in the Imperial forces.

Care of the Patients.

I suppose you wonder what we do with our patients to keep them occupied. I'll tell you. We have only a small staff of privates, corporals and sergeants to look after the work, so the patients do the most of the work. They keep their own quarters clean, make their beds, clean up their rooms and the hallways, bathrooms, etc. They act as orderlies for themselves, and serve the food. After setting the tables, they clean up afterwards, wash the dishes, the silverware, and sweep and tidy their mess rooms. The duties, except for dinner and supper, are finished in the morning, generally before ten o'clock. As soon as their duties are over they can roam around the grounds and do as they like. After dinner they are allowed on the grounds, and half of the men are allowed out on alternate days to go where they like until 9.00 p.m., but they must return at 5.00 p.m. for supper. There are a couple or three cities of fair size within a mile or two of the hospital and they soon get quite a list of acquaintances. Then there are games of all kinds here for them, baseball, both indoor and outdoor sets, football, tennis, croquet and parlour games. Material for the games have all been contributed by different people. In addition to this the boys are treated to motor drives, lawn parties at the residences of some people who have plenty of accommodation, trips on River Thames, theatre parties into London, concerts in the evening at home once or twice a week and in various other ways. Last Wednesday we sent 35 up to the anniversary services at St. Paul's and 48 on a trip down the river. All arrangements are made to convey them to the dock and back again by the person giving the entertainment. A few weeks ago we sent 100 down to a Mr. Mond's place, along with 200 from another hospital. They all went in motor cars about 12 miles. He is a very wealthy man who has some big investments up at Cobalt and Sudbury, and is naturally interested in Canada. He has a lovely place here, about 500 acres, over 100 acres of it in wheat. Some farmer, eh! Well, he does not look nor act like one. He treated us so well that we have accepted an invitation to go back again and bring 150 men, on Aug. 26. He had all kinds of games for the men, so you see that the boys are well looked after in that line.

Well, sir, I must close and get this away. I have been a few days trying to write this letter. I hope things are prospering at the old town, and that conditions are as favorable as possible under the war conditions. Remember me kindly to the city fathers and the city clerks. I'll try and write you again at an early date. I am trying to write to as many as possible so if any of them are expecting a letter tell them to wait and they will be rewarded.

The Resolution Was Adopted

Mayor Buller and Ald. Green Return From a Successful Mission to Hope Township

A resolution endorsing the hydro-radial railway was passed on Saturday by the council of the Township of Hope. His Worship Mayor Buller and Ald. G. W. Green representing the Trent Valley District of the Hydro-Electric Railway Association of Ontario, were heard in support of the resolution, which provided for the construction of an electric railway connecting Peterborough to Cobourg.

The Hydro-Power Commission of Ontario has already signified its intention of supplying the necessary engineering service. Work on the preliminary surveys and other data will be commenced at an early date.

German Fleet Badly Defeated

has been and still is impossible to take the people entirely into their confidence.

British Aided.

The Russian fleet, says the Petrograd despatches, was greatly aided in its attack on the German naval forces by British submarines and destroyers. This news has been received with the greatest enthusiasm by the British public, who are overjoyed that British warships participated in what seems to be a very important defeat to the Germans.

The Daily Mail's correspondent at Petrograd telegraphs that the newspapers containing the news of the victory of the Russian fleet are selling as fast as they can be printed. The people fill the streets talking in groups, congratulating each other, and even crying for joy in some cases.

"The German fleet in the Baltic," says the correspondent, "is still strong in spite of the whipping it has had. There are eight battleships and nine cruisers left, but this defeat, in which the British destroyers are said to have played a very useful part, must at all events delay operations. It has put a fresh heart into the Russian fleet and in the nation, and has come just at the moment when good news was needed."

The battle which has resulted so disastrously to the Germans has been in progress for two or three days.

Nothing respecting the operations in this region has been cabled from Berlin, but the official German statement issued Saturday announced that the gulf had been entered successfully and that the Russian naval forces had lost two gunboats and one torpedo boat, while the Saturday Russian official report said the Germans had lost at least two torpedo boats. The announcement by the President of the Duma refers undoubtedly to subsequent operations. The German official report read:

"Our Baltic naval forces penetrated the Gulf of Riga after mine sweepers had swept the mine field and net obstructions. In the outpost engagements which developed a Russian torpedo boat of the Emir Pucharskii class, was destroyed and other torpedo boats, among them the Novik, and one large vessel, were severely damaged while retreating.

One the evening of the 19th, in Moon Sound, the Russian gunboats Sivutch and Koretts were sunk by artillery fire and torpedo boats, after brave resistance. Forty members of the crew, including two officers, some severely wounded, were rescued by our torpedo boats.

"Three of our torpedo boats were damaged by mines. One sank, one was run ashore and one was escorted to port.

Sudden Death of Mrs. Ed. W. Cox

Widow of Late President of Canada Life Assurance Co. Dies Suddenly

After an illness of less than a week, Mrs. Hattie Brown Cox, widow of the late E. W. Cox, formerly of Peterborough, died Saturday afternoon, at her residence, 161 Isabella street. Mrs. Cox was suffering from hemmorrhage of the stomach, and although she was known to be seriously ill, the end came quite unexpectedly. On Saturday her condition became worse, and she was seized with violent hemmorrhages at about 10 o'clock in the morning. She rallied again, but failed later and died at 2.20 in the afternoon.

Before her marriage Mrs. Cox was Miss Hattie Brown, a daughter of the late Charles Brown. She was married to Edward W. Cox on October 24, 1888, and her husband died in June, 1914.

Mrs. Cox's death is the fourth in the Cox family in slightly over a year and a half. Senator George A. Cox died in January, 1914, and his son Edward W. died less than six months later, on June 18. Mrs. Geo. A. Cox died very suddenly Wednesday evening last and the death of Mrs. E. W. Cox followed within three days.

MISCHIEF MAKER

Now Strong and Robust

An adult's food that can save a baby proves itself to be nourishing and easily digested and good for big and little folks. An Eastern man says:

"When our baby was about eleven months old he began to grow thin and pale. This was attributed to the heat and the fact that his teeth were coming, but, in reality, the poor little thing was starving, his mother's milk not being sufficient nourishment.

"One day after he had cried bitterly for an hour, I suggested that my wife try tumbling Grape-Nuts. She soaked two teaspoonfuls in half a cup of warm water for 5 or 6 minutes. Then poured off the liquid and to it added a like amount of rich milk and a little sugar. This baby ate ravenously.

"It was not many days before he forgot all about being nursed, and has since lived almost exclusively on Grape-Nuts. To-day the boy is strong and robust, and as cute a mischief-maker as a thirteen months old baby is expected to be.

"Use this letter any way you wish, for my wife and I can never praise Grape-Nuts enough after the brightness it has brought to our household."

Grape-Nuts is not made for a baby food, but experience with thousands of babies shows it to be among the best, if not entirely the best in use. Being a scientific preparation of Nature's cereals, it is equally effective as a steady and brain builder for growing-ups. "There's a Reason."

OVER THE LIFT LOCK TO STONEY LAKE

The Delightful Trips of the Steamer "Manita"—As Interesting as Niagara at a Fraction of the Cost

The trim little steamer "Manita" of the Stoney Lake Navigation Company's line is just establishing the Lift Lock route as a favourite trip for excursionists and pleasure seekers.

This steamer leaves the George Street Wharf every morning at 7.30. She is comfortably equipped with a carrying capacity for exactly 129 passengers. The "Manita's" specialty is freight, but she has grown into a nice passenger trade, as well. Her crew are men of experience, familiar with the Lift Lock regulations and the waters of the Trent Canal, as well as the lakes tributary thereto. The personel of the crew are as follows: Captain, J. Millage; Mate and Purser, Rich. Shewin; Engineer, John Coon; and the deck hand, Charley Millage is the modest chef, and tills the bill with credit. The steamer draws five feet of water and is a steady, as well as speedy, craft.

The trip over the Lift Lock has been said, by some, to be tiresome and tedious. But this talk must come from some who are deficient in admiration for the beauties of nature, and the marvels of human inventions. No prettier panorama of scenery could be wished for than is presented to the eye along both banks of the Trent Canal up to Lakefield, and which is certainly far more enjoyable than riding in a stuffy railway car. Then the wonders of the Lift Lock, alone, will well repay one for his trip, besides the sensation of witnessing the interesting lockages along the route. All these features go to make the trip so attractive and charming that one is forced to exclaim, in the words of Harry Lauder: "Ye canna beat it!"

It is said the "Manita" takes its name from an Indian squaw named "Manetta," with the pronounciation as given in the two syllables Ma-ne-ta.

LOSES HIS LIFE BUT SAVES GIRL

Examiner Special:

PENN YAN, Aug. 21. After rescuing Katharine Dubell, of Bath, from the waters of Keuka Lake, Clark Hopkins, 24 years old, of Oberlin, Ohio, for the past three years instructor of physical culture in the public schools of Cincinnati, lost his own life in the Keuka College dock.

Hopkins, who with his younger brother, Hoyt, was spending the summer with friends near the college, was in bathing off the dock with four of the Bath camp, fire girls. He was teaching Miss. Dubell to dive. She could not swim and he, being an expert swimmer was to bring her back to the shore after the dive.

Miss Dubell dove off the dock and Hopkins, waiting for her to come up, was seen to struggle, and when she came to the top he was unable to reach her. She went down again and then again and as she came to the surface the third time, Hopkins summoned all his last ebbing strength and brought the girl to the end of the dock where she was assisted by Howard Purdy, of Penn Yan, who was attracted by the cries of the other girls. Hopkins at once sank and Purdy, who dived after him, could not locate him. Sheldon Barrus, a Keuka College student, was more successful and reached Hopkins on the dock.

Dr. Poole says the young man did not drown but died from acute dilation of the heart.

Splendid Grant Made By Harvey

$300 Is Granted to the Regimental Fund of 59th

Lieut Rackham of the 59th Battalion motored up to Buckhorn on Saturday afternoon to meet the Harvey council in accordance with Reeve Shaw's request. He explained the objects of the Regimental Fund, and was received most kindly. A grant of $300.00 was made by an unanimous vote. Considering that Harvey is one of the most sparsely populated townships in the district the grant is a magnificent one and shows that Harvey realizes her duties and is willing to do her bit." In the other townships gave proportionately to their assessment the 59th Regt. will indeed be fortunate.

Lieut Rackham is thoroughly appreciative of the treatment accorded him and the battalion he represents.

W. H. LACEY, B.O. OPTOMETRIST

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—The following is an extract from a letter written in England and published in the July Bulletin of the Red Cross Society

We are receiving some supplies, which are quite useless, and only a waste of valuable material. We are now quite past the stage where any supplies can be received and forwarded which are not fit for use and also quite past the stage when the truth about supplies must be withheld for fear of hurting the feelings of the workers. The one desire of us all is to relieve the sufferings of the sick and wounded, in the best possible way, not to please ourselves.

There is absolutely no reason why any community or organization should send in supplies badly made, or badly packed. It is waste of time, and material, to make dressings and garments which are useless. No one has any use for slackly-wound bandages, etc.

We appeal to women who are taking up Red Cross work, to study our instructions and to carry them out faithfully."

Acting upon the above, the Red Cross Society of Peterborough decided to look into the matter, and find out whether the hospital supplies which were being forwarded by them from Peterborough were satisfactory for Red Cross needs. It was found that the packing could be very much improved, and in compliance with the following request, a new method has been adopted

"Toronto General Hospital,
July 29, 1915.

My Dear Miss Rush, The Red Cross Society has asked to have as many dressings as possible packed in bulk.

The different circles in Toronto have commenced packing in canton flannel bags that fit the tin boxes in which the dressings are finally packed for transportation. The bag must be packed in the tin box, and if you wish to pack your dressings in this way, I shall be very glad to send you a box and sample bag with full instructions for packing.

This method of packing is most satisfactory as there is no space wasted in packing individual wrappings.

Hoping you can adopt this method,

Very truly yours,
Jean J. Gunn,
Superintendent of Nurses."

In order to pack in the tin boxes, which measure 12 in. by 14 by 14 in. the dressings, etc., must be made the exact size given in the suggestions for work the standard sizes of the Red Cross Society.

It is hoped that this will clear up any misunderstanding that may have arisen owing to the seemingly arbitrary changes adopted by the local Branch

Yours, etc

REV. JAMES SWEENEY.

There passed away at 8 o'clock this morning, at St. Joseph's Hospital, Rev. James Sweeney, for the past ten years a resident of Ashburnham. The late Father Sweeney had been in failing health for some years, having to retire from the active duties of the Priesthood, ten years ago. For the past seven weeks he had been ill in St. Joseph's Hospital. He was 57 years of age, and was born in Fintona, County Tyrone, Ireland. He received his early education at Burnley where his parents took up residence on coming to Canada. Upon completing his studies for the Priesthood, thirty-three years ago, he was ordained by Bishop Jamot at Bracebridge. Following his ordination he was curate at Lindsay for four years, after which he was appointed curate at Bracebridge, where he remained three years. He was then Parish Priest at Burnley for eight years, and for the same length of time previous to his retirement was Parish Priest at Victoria Road. He was a man whose kindliness of heart was well known to all, with whom he came in contact, and his passing will be learned of with deepest regret by hosts of friends.

He leaves one brother, Dr Michael Sweeney, in Michigan, and two sisters, Misses Catharine and Mary Ann, with whom he resided at 373 Burnham street.

The funeral arrangements have not yet been completed, but will be announced to-morrow

Letter From Mr. W. J. Hanna

Confirms Legislature's Willingness to Validate Grants Made by the City For Military and Patriotic Purposes

A communication has been received from Mr. J. H. Hanna, the Provincial Secretary, advising the city that the Legislature will endorse any grants that the council might make for military and patriotic purposes up to a reasonable amount. The matter will come up at the next meeting of the city council

The question arose out of the recent request for grants to the 59th Battalion and the 9th Mounted Rifles. The council decided that it would be unable to provide funds for such a worthy cause unless steps were taken to secure legislative sanction. With this object in view Mayor Butler and Ald. Green made a trip to Toronto. The communication now in hand confirms Mr. Hanna's promise to meet the wishes of the city to a reasonable extent.

German Hopes of March to Petrograd End in a Failure

THE FRENCH GAIN CONSIDERABLE GROUND IN ALSACE

Germany's Drives Against Russia Have Not Had The Desired Effect

Every Success of Theirs Brings Them Nearer to Ultimate Defeat---Brings More Powers Into the War.

Special Cable to The Examiner

LONDON, Aug. 24.—Germany's latest "colossal miscalculation" monopolizes discussion in well informed British circles, writes Edward Price. That which answers to this description is Germany's supposed opinion that its drives against Russians would have the double effect of making Russia eager for peace and frightening the Balkan States into a final resolve not to move in favour of the allies. As regards Russia, M. Sazonoff, Minister of Foreign Affairs, says: "There will be no separate peace and no peace at all until the central empires are beaten."

As regards the Balkans, the best information indicates that every fresh Germanic victory brings them near the decision to join forces with the allies.

Thus emerges the interesting fact that, so to speak, the more the Germanic powers win the more they lose. This phenomenon is explained here as follows: Freedom grows more anxious as thralldom draws nearer. Before the war began the special cable service of The Toronto Daily Star and the Chicago Dily News, carried more than one despatch that if Germany with its philosophy of war and conquest, which had become associated with its politics, ever threw its armies against Europe, it probably would go on until it involved every free State of Europe. It was pointed out that the greater became the menace of the Germanic triumph, the more formidable the achievements of the Germanic armies were, more difficult it would be for any independent nation to remain neutral. This is what has happened. The confluence of the anti-Germanic belligerents will probably cease to grow only when the fear of a greater Napoleonism shall have vanished.

Kaiser to Cut Meat Supply of Civilians

Special to The Examiner

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24.—Germany is facing the necessity of reducing the meat consumption of her civil population by 40 or 50 per cent., according to a report compiled by the American Association of Commerce and Trade in Berlin.

The bread card system the Government enforced soon after the war began has resulted in a surplus of wheat and rye flour, which will make possible an increase in the bread allowance during the coming year.

Introduction of a meat card scheme to restrict consumption and at the same time insure reasonable prices to the masses is forecast by the association.

From statistics gathered before the war, it is estimated that Germany depended upon imports from other nations for about 27.3 per cent of her food stuffs.

"In analyzing the effect of these figures upon the general situation," says the report, "it should be borne in mind that Germany's isolation is not complete, since about 8,300,000 bushels of wheat have been brought in, and not much less of fodder, which is about one-tenth of normal imports per year."

"It can be assumed," says the report, "that one-quarter of the normal demand for foodstuffs has been brought in. Since the beginning the German army in the field has been suported to a certain extent from products of the occupied territory, which saving in home products can be estimated at 5 to 6 per cent."

GERMAN LOSSES WILL STAGGER HUMANITY

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, Aug. 24. — Though the Germans report Field Marshal Von Hindenburg's armies advancing east and south of Kovno, that General Von Gollwitz's army is penetrating south of the Narew across the Bielostock-Brest-Litovsk railway, and that Prince Leopold's army, fighting victoriously, has crossed the Wyksso-Brest-Litovsk railway, the admission is made that the Bavarian armies drove the opposing forces, which had again obtained a foothold, out of their poitions early yesterday, which was an admission that the Russians are fighting desperately and must have administered a smashing blow to Prince Leopold's troops.

Great battles north of Pisca and north-east of Vlodava are still raging. There is no news from the south-western front of Brest-Litovsk.

All the military experts agree that when Germany counts the cost of the invasion of Russian the losses will stagger humanity.

Germans Meet With Stubborn Resistance Enemy's Advance Checked

Russians in Engagement Near Brest-Litovsk Fortress Hold Enemy Back---German Hopes of March to Petrograd End in Failure.

Special to The Examiner:

ROTTERDAM, Aug. 24.—Forty British warships bombarded German batteries in Belgium. ZeeBrugge suffered badly from the attack. A submarine canal was shelled.

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 24.—Berlin despatches admit stubborn Russian resistance near Brest-Litovsk fortress, where the German advance is checked.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—The failure of the German fleet to protect Von Hindenburg's left wing by capturing the Gulf of Kiga ends German hopes of a march to Petrograd.

PARIS, Aug. 24.—French troops continue to make gains in Alsace at the point of the bayonet. Considerable ground was gained near Linge and Barrenkopf after severe shelling.

ROME, Aug. 24.—A fleet of transports convoyed by warships left Naples, Syracuse, Taranto and Brindisi. They are likely bound for Smyrna.

PARIS, Aug. 23. — Rome despatches to-day say several transports laden with troops had left Italian ports presumably for operations against the Turks at the Dardanelles or Asia Minor.

VIENNA, Aug. 23.—Italian forces have evacuated Pelagosa Island after destroying buildings. Naval attacks by the Austrian fleet made the enemy's position untenable.

LONDON, Aug. 23.—The Victoria Cross to-day was awarded to Lieut. F. W. Campbell, of the 1st Canadian Battalion, from Mount Forest, Ont., for bravery. He has succumbed to wounds received when he alone with two machine guns held an enemy counter attack.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24.—The Government is wasting no time getting evidence on the Arabic disaster. The State Department instructed Ambassador Pake in London to cable survivors' statements. The policy of the United States will be based on these statements.

BERLIN, Aug. 24.—Forty enemy ships appeared off ZeeBrugee yesterday but steamed away when bombarded by our coast artillery, said the War Office statement.

SOFIA, Aug. 24.—There is a great shortage of coal being felt in Constantinople. There is no gas available for lighting and the train system is almost paralyzed. Movements of troops will be greatly hindered.

LONDON, Eng., Aug. 24.—A "new big peace scheme" is being developed in Berlin, it was reported to-day. The scheme will be disclosed to the world within a fortnight if German plans do not miscarry.

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 24.—Germany has apologized to Denmark for violating Danish neutrality in entering the Danish territorial water last week to shell the British submarine E-13, which went aground.

German Spy in the White House Says N.Y. World

Special to The Examiner

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24.— Allegations that German diplomatic and secret service officials have been able to learn the "actual feelings" of President Wilson and the chiefs of the State Department, through an agent who had entree to the White House, caused grave concern in administration circles.

White officials refused to comment for publication, it was admitted that secret service agents and officers of the Department of Justice have been trying to determine whether these reports have the slightest foundation in fact. It was pointed out that President Wilson has granted appointments only to his most trusted advisers, since the German situation became acute, except where certain persons have been received to tender invitations and the like. The latter have had no opportunity for general conversation.

"LEAK" HIGH UP.

Therefore if the allegations be true, the "leak" must have been from an unusually confidential administration source. The charge, as made public in the New York World today, was that an agent of Germany designated as "M.P." obtained from the President and Secretary of State their real views on the controversies with Germany and with Great Britain and communicated them in the form of "conversations" to agents of Germany.

At the White House and the State Department it was stated that nothing would be said "at this time" regarding the allegations. It was learned, however, that Department of Justice agents already have tried to ascertain whether there actually is a "M P." and what his connection is with the Germans of this country. The investigation so far, it was stated, has failed to reveal that the President's confidence has been misused.

ARE SUPERIOR IN FIGHTING QUALITIES TO THE ENEMY

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, Aug. 24.—"My men, man for man, are superior to the Germans in fighting qualities, and the endurance of my guns is better than the German guns. For instance, my thirteen-inch shell is equivalent to their seventeen-inch. The issue is now one between Krupps and Birmingham.

"This is the message Sir John French asks us to convey to the people of England," said James O'Grady, who is back in England from a visit to the trenches, to a Daily News representative last night. O'Grady went out to France with labour colleagues on a mission connected with the removal of the international trade union bureau from Berlin.

"This mission," he said, "was successful, inasmuch as the French trade unionists agreed with Great Britain and America as to the desirability of removing the trade bureau to Switzerland, a neutral country, in order that the International Union should, after the war, continue to operate in its old effective way. It now remains to be seen what attitude German trade unionists will adopt towards the proposal, as they constitute a formidable section of the Bureau which they initiated."

NO OFFICIAL CONFIRMATION

Special Morning Cable:

LONDON, Aug. 24.—No official confirmation came from Petrograd to-day of the report that a German auxiliary cruiser and a German submarine were lost in the Gulf of Riga naval battle last week. The submarine was reported to have gone aground and the auxiliary cruiser to have struck a mine.

Was a Shock To the Mayor

Lieut. Gibson Killed in France Was a Friend of Pete Campbell

Toronto, Aug. 24. The news of the death at the front of Lieut. Frank M Gibson, son of former Lieutenant-Governor of the Province, came as a severe shock to Mayor Church, to whom he was well known. The young lieutenant had on many occasions before his departure visited the Mayor, and when he heard at Valcartier of his election, sent a warm congratulatory letter, in which he said

"We just heard of it a day or two ago, and Pete Campbell, Bickel, Alex Sinclair, Bob Davidson, and everybody joins in wishing you a prosperous term. You have come into office at a critical period in the city's history, I should judge, and you must be very proud of the people's opinion of you."

The Mayor was at the graduating exercises of the class in which was Lieut Gibson, at the Royal Military College, at Kingston. There the Lt.-Governor of the Province stated that if he had a dozen sons he would send them all to that institution, and he deplored the lack of military training in the schools and the lack of land defences.

Colonel Currie told the Mayor that on the day of the St Julien battle, Gibson got out of a sick bed and asked to be allowed to perform the duties of signal officer or acting adjutant.

France has already succeeded in getting back the manufacture of porcelain doll's heads, which it lost years ago to Germany.

Russian Situation Improving---Armies Are No Longer in Danger

Special Cable:

LONDON, Aug. 24.—Telegraphing to the Times, from Petrograd the correspondent of that newspaper in the Russian capital says:

From the official communications and other reliable sources much-needed comfort has been derived since Friday. The unexpected brevity of the resistance of the strong fortifications of Kovno has, contrary to the gloomy forebodings, not entailed a rupture of our main line of communication. The surviving garrison was forthwith reinforced by troops who are staunchly holding the line from the right to Janow and on both banks of the Niemen south of Janow and Altsouns.

Behind the screen of Gen. Schmelow's cavalry masses a huge German concentration is believed to be in progress and making preparations for a drive from Dvinsk to Vilna. There is no anxiety here at present that the enemy will be able to endanger the retreat of the armies operating between Grodno and Brest-Litovsk. The rearguards of these armies are holding back the enemy along the line of Ossowetz, Bielsk and Brest-Litovsk. We still hold the Bielostok-Brest-Litovsk railway, and still have four double track trunk lines clear for the movement of our troops north and east.

NO SECOND SEDAN.

The German expectation that Grodno would be our Sedan may be treated with equnimity. It is true there is the onslaught of Brest-Litovsk still to be reckoned with, but its eventual loss probably already has been discounted.

Had the Russian armies operating from Kiev a special mission to maintain direct contact with the central and northern groups the fate of Brest-Litovsk might have exercised a more important influence on the course of the campaign than is now the case.

The Russian armies continue their steady and well ordered retreat to their appointed line, inflicting enormous losses on the enemy.

The munitions bill went through its final reding in the Duma yesterday. The house voted a rider calling upon the Holy Synod to suspend the peace days, which are seriously curtailing the output of munitions, and insisting upon government departments working full time.

Something New.

Many advertisers are constantly trying to think up "Something New" or "Different" and the results are startling to be sure, but certainly not convincing nor conducive to increase in the business of the advertiser.

The craze for originality is a mistake. People do not care for stunts or mental gymnastics. They do want to know the facts in regard to your business and whether you can offer better prices or better quality than your competitors.

Tell the facts in a straightforward, unassuming manner. You will gain the confidence of your patrons, and you will find that advertising pays abundantly.

Submerged For 70 Hours In Darkness Without Food

Examiner Special:

MILAN, Italy, Aug. 24. The Italian submarine Nereid which the Austrians asserted that they had sunk, has arrived safely at a port in the Adriatic, having escaped from the Austrian warships. Her crew suffered a nerve-racking ordeal through the fact that the Nereid was compelled to remain under water for 70 hours because of an accident to her machinery, the commander of the submersible and three men of the crew dying from exhaustion.

The submerged crew worked without rest for the 70 hours, at which time the repairs were completed and the vessel rose to the surface. She immediately headed for an Italian naval base. Two more of the crew died on the way to port.

For a great period of the 70 hours the imprisoned men were without food, and were in complete darkness.

The Nereid when attacked by the Austrians was compelled to sink below the waves in great haste, owing to the superior forces arrayed against her.

Germany Said To Have Sent Ultimatum To Roumania

Special to the Examiner.

LONDON, August 24. A Reuter despatch from Sofia, Bulgaria, says:

Private advices form Bucharest say it is feared there that Germany has sent an ultimatum to Roumania regarding the right to transport munitions of war for Turkey through Roumanian territory. The Roumania Cabinet is firmly resolved not to grant this permission.

A large number of cars laden with war material has been held up at Predeal, a village near the Tomos Pass, where it is reported Roumania troops are concentrating. Troops are also massing at Jassy, about 200 miles to the north-east of Bucharest, and at Petroleni, [illegible] have been garrisoned.

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

Hollis G nodded friendly and said somethin' to Corrigan. Corrigan eyed him sorter close, but said nothin' of importance. I low'es Hellion was I don't know, but all he mumpin' must have been directed that

"Well," sez I, "seein' it's turnin' I'm Happy Hawkins," sez I, and I told him of how imprudent Belle Stern, Peddler Emmons had been of Belle's tellin' on his face. Ah, such was now to him.

"Belle Stern got away," sez he in a queer voice which sent a queer stinkin' thrill

"Was she killed?" sez I.

Corrigan, in my excitement by his guard I'm sure, and his eyes looked a little. "No," sez he, "she wasn't killed, but she tried mighty hard to get killed and she still may be, for she failed I reckon the Sterns have some soft toes."

I hadn't any more questions to ask so I called Hellion up to my usual patter on the head. The dog tested his claws in my thigh, but he was a and he kept his eyes on Corrigan while I told about little Connie and how Hellion had settled it with Old Nick, and all the time Corrigan looked as though some one was standin' behind him.

"And you beat this dog away from you?" sez I at the close.

"I did," sez Corrigan. "But I'd chop off my hand with as much before I'd do it again. I haven't touched a card since."

"Corrigan," sez I, "I think a heap of him; but if he's still your dog, why, he's still your dog."

Corrigan dropped to one knee and putting his hands to his head he began to moan. For a minute Hellion stood lookin' at him with his ears cocked, and then he touched his cold nose to Corrigan's ear. The man only moaned the harder, and the dog began to lick his hand and look to me as his tail and to whine through his nose.

Then, seein' Corrigan put his hand on the dog's head and said in a trembling voice: "Ah, Daniel, Daniel, ye devil ye; me heart's been like an empty dog kennel ever since ye left."

Hellion's tail was raisin' a breeze by this time, and there wasn't any doubt as to who stood the higher with Corrigan, speakin' to him as though they were both men together. "Daniel, would ya believe it—I haven't had me slippers on since you left."

Well, that tool dog gave a yelp and headed into the shack on a run. He soon came back with a carpet slipper, and that fool man sat right down on the ground, pulled off his boot and put it on—and he'd have done it if there'd been ninety ladies present. The dog grabbed up the boot and tore into the cabin, comin' back with the other slipper, and then goin' in with the other boot; and Corrigan's cold, hard eyes got warm and soft.

I shook hands with Corrigan and patted Hellion on the head, and they both tried to be polite; but they were dead anxious to be left alone so they could be just as slushy as they blame pleased.

I took Hollis G. over to the Horseshoe to see the Kastles, too, and I was surprised to find how well they all got on together. Douglas had been champin' his bit constant since Kate had left; but the old man's eyes were full o' peace, as though it was mighty restful to give up tryin' to run the Earth and to just loll back and be a passenger on it.

Now, when he found out that Tom Smith was to be a tree man and the son of Hollis Gordon Mortimer, Father Kastle began to throw out his knees and head up like a race hoss, and when Hollis G. was able to tell him that some papers which he had thought weren't worth much except as pipe lighters, were climbin' up the grade again, it was just all Father Kastle could do to keep from breakin' out into a song of praise regardin' the superiority of his keen judgment.

But after all, it was Douglas who rang the bell with Hollis G. Douglas had took up surveyin' and was buildin' a road called the Texas & Pacific, but he had one o' these minds which can do several things at a time better than one, and he hadn't stopped at just buildin' the runnin' part of a railroad, but had poked around until he had seen into how more money was made in squeezin' a road than in buildin' one, and he knew that this road was nothin' but a pry to open up the U. S. Treasury. I never could understand these things, but Hollis G. did and he and Douglas held a conversation as polite and calculatin' as a game o' poker.

A big eastern railroad and the Southern Pacific clique were skirmishin' to get hold o' this pry, and Hollis G. hadn't been able to tell which crowd to throw in with, but held leanin's toward the eastern road. After he had dealt a few rounds o' talk regardin' the closeness of family ties and such items, he offered Douglas the job of general manager of something or other, and Douglas intimated that the Southern Pacific crowd held the cards to win the Texas & Pacific, so Hollis G. was able to jump with his eyes open.

Well, when Tom Smith and Kate got back, Kate was wearin' a dress she had managed to pick up in Paris—Paris, Texas, I mean of course—and she held her head up and her shoulders back as a warnin' to any parents-in-law who might be prowlin' about, but ther wasn't any occasion.

Hollis G. took one long look at her, patted her on the shoulder, kissed her, and called her daughter; and the Begum was so glad to get her son back that she was willin' to get enthusiastic over anything that went with him.

Hollis G. sized up Tom Smith about as shrewd as he had Kate, and it was plain that the boy's clean, strong lines, and the fire in his eyes were pleasin' to his dad, who shook hands with him long and earnest, and said, that while he was some risky, he was positive sure that he had gone to the only school that was altogether suited to him. Then the Begum wilted down and cut so sobby that I didn't have the nerve to stick it out to the finish.

I had told Hollis G. about how Tom Smith had handled the Begum when their will had locked, and Hollis G. had pulled back his early dream of a happy, peaceful home. He counted big on Tom Smith settin' up house keepin' close to his own place in New York City, and then when the Begum was out runnin' the town, he could sneak over to his son's and have his daughter-in-law make a fuss over him, but Kate vetoed this pronto and Tom Smith stuck with her. No more East for them!

They finally compromised on a long visit, and after they had left, we turned to and made ready for the winter, but it did seem doleful after all the stimulatin' times we'd had.

Tom Smith wrote to me frequent for a while, and once in a long time Hollis G. jerked me out a scribble, but our trails ran far apart and we each had plenty to do. They cleared up Tom Smith's record until chalk would 'a' made a black mark on it, and he was free to go wherever he pleased; but though he tried it a couple o' rounds, the East wasn't suited to him, and he wound up by buyin' the range over which he had once herded goats. From all accounts it was a good thing that Hollis G. didn't get any joy out of money except to round it up, for Tom Smith was generous to a fault—and faults were mighty common in those parts at that time.

Old Josiah provided him with all the advice he could handle, and Corrigan finally went to live with him. Tom Smith kept enough cows to be an excuse for havin' a big outfit; but from all I could learn his main business in life was to knock holes in the fence so that young fellers who were tired of wolfin' it outside the law could get a chance to sneak back into the fold.

Tom Smith built a big house up on top of his mound. Hollis G. provided him with more loot than he ever could have lifted on the road, and Kate was just the woman to balance him; so I never felt called upon to do him any special reverence. The fact is, I told him right to his face that he reminded me of a cork thrown into an ocean of luck, and that if ever I heard tell of his braggin' about his fine swimmin', I'd sure shoot his ears off. Kate's brother, now, he was plumb worth botherin' with in the railroad business, and after Hollis G. started to boost, he turned up exactly the same cloud o' smoke that Tom Smith should have raised, if things ever did turn out accordin' to the plans and judgment of a parent. Hollis G. was powerful fond of both these boys, and he used to say that Tom Smith was the child of his heart, and Douglas, the child of his mind, and they were all satisfied.

Kate's father lived long enough to take a few rides in Hollis G's private car and to go to the most expensive health resorts in the country, but he never reached any higher on this earth, than he did on the night he stood on top of his own judgment and held open the door so that his daughter could pass out free into the life which had called her.

What became of Isaac? Why, Isaac never did another single thing except to ride the gubline in ample style. He lingered around until he was able to prove that it really was him who had straightened everything out, and then he put on modesty as a cloak and permitted his friends to show their gratitude in the way that suited him best, and he had enough of little Connie's grace about him to be full welcome wherever he went.

Hollis G. got him passes wherever railroads ran, and as far as downright independence and sunny disposition went, the birds of the air had to take off their hats to him. He kept a new chariot at Tom Smith's and his old one at Jim's, and whenever he estimated that he needed a little more health, he started right out from wherever he was and headed straight for old Josiah's.

Isaac never did a thing but play from mornin' till night until finally he played out altogether after livin' years longer'n he had any right to. He carried an umbrella to the last and if it wasn't the same one, he kept it patched up so no one else could tell the difference.

And old Josiah—well, he just sat at his doorway with his red pipe in his lips, his wolf dogs at his feet, and his eyes lookin' out beyond the horizon. Most men face the east naturally, but he mighty seldom did. It was in the settin' of the sun that he looked for his real dawn, and though they say that no one ever saw a hard look in his eyes, after this, they sometimes were lifted as though he actually was gazin' into a face no other body could see.

Here and there in unexpected places, a teller still comes across some one who got just the right touch from old Josiah to head him in the right direction, and if he never did nothin' else for me except start me to listenin' to the still, small voice of my own instinct, why, I'd feel mighty thankful to him every time I turned my [illegible] for his voice has pointed out the way to me when my fool judgment couldn't see two feet into the mists.

TO THE PANAMA PACIFIC EXPOSITION VIA THE CANADIAN ROCKIES.

At the present time a great many are planning their annual tour. Considerable numbers visit the popular California resorts, while many prefer the unsurpassed resorts, palatial hotels and magnificent scenery of the Canadian Rockies. This year, why not combine the two by a visit to the Panama Pacific Exposition?

Numerous people in comfortable circumstances, well able to afford a trip, have the mistaken idea that a journey of this nature is most expensive. This is far so, thanks to the modern railway facilities, an extensive trip, both interesting and educational, can be made with speed and comfort at a comparatively small cost. Why not investigate?

Those contemplating a trip of any nature will receive full information from any C.P.R. Agent, or write M. G. Murphy, District Passenger Agent, Toronto. m-a-f-44-1w34

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Her Leap Year Privilege

How a Fortune Was Lost.

By CLARISSA MACKIE

"Tum-te-tum, tum-te-tum!"

Angela Winton watched the little fingers wander uncertainly up and down the piano keys.

When the pupil had gone Angela closed the piano with a sigh of relief. Twenty years of teaching music had worn her nerves to a fine edge.

"I wonder if it will always be the same?" she thought as she went to open her letter box. There was a letter.

A little color flashed into her pale cheeks as she read the name in one corner of the business envelope:

JOHN T. CATESBY
Attorney and Counselor at Law

John Catesby was an old friend of Angela's, and she tore open the letter with a feeling of impatience at her swift conclusion that John's unexpected letter was in direct response to her query of the moment before. Very likely it had to do with the bridge club to which they both belonged. The letter read:

Dear Miss Winton—Please call at my office immediately, as I wish to consult with you concerning an important matter of business. Faithfully yours,

JOHN T. CATESBY.

"Dear me! I wonder what he wants to see me about? I may as well dress and go downtown now," she thought as she folded the letter.

An hour later Angela presented herself at Catesby's office. She was a small, timid looking woman with soft brown eyes and a wealth of glistening brown hair. Twenty years of battling with the world had made Angela bold of heart and unafraid, but the appealing look remained in her eyes.

An office boy took her into John Catesby's private office, and Catesby grasped her little gloved fingers in his large hand and forgot to release them for a moment.

"You wished to see me?" asked Angela, and, thus reminded, he drew forward a chair beside his own.

"Listen to this," he said in an odd tone, picking up an open letter:

Sydney, Australia, Jan. 18, 1915.

Dear Sir—Kindly inform my niece and only relative, Miss Angela Winton, that it is my intention to bequeath my entire fortune of $1,000,000 to her, provided she is married at the time of my death. She is the only old maid in the Winton family, and if she is still unmarried when the announcement of my death is made she will merely receive a small annuity, while the remainder of my estate goes to charity. As I am suffering from an incurable disease it behooves my niece to hasten to the altar.

JOSEPH HENRY WINTON.

"How utterly absurd!" cried Angela as rosy blushes invaded her smooth cheeks. "The very idea! He might as well cut me off with an annuity and be done with it!"

Another letter had been received by Catesby on the same subject. The lawyer had been a protege of Winton, who had sent him to school, to college and had paid his way while he studied his profession. Winton never married, and, as stated in his letter, Angela was his only relative. He was very fond of her and had noticed what Angela had not even suspected—that his protege loved his niece. He was in hopes that the two would make a match. In this event they would inherit his fortune together, and John would make a capital manager of the estate.

Finding that death was not far distant, he had written the two letters, the one intending to influence his niece, the other to advise Catesby of his desire to leave them his property jointly. In the one for John's private reading he had told him that it was his intention to place his niece in a position which would place Catesby in a position to marry her.

"Excuse me just a moment," said Catesby, rising. "I am called away on a matter of business."

He went into the outside office, where a client was waiting for a few words of advice, and Angela was left alone with her startled thoughts.

How glorious to be the owner of a great fortune! What bliss to travel, to have beautiful clothes, to help the needy!

How sordid it was to consider that she must marry and lose her freedom, but who on earth would marry her? Common sense told her that many unscrupulous men would embrace the opportunity to become the husband of an heiress.

From an adjoining office came the lowered voices of two stenographers.

"I saw the letter!" insisted one impatiently. "It said she must marry before he died or she would lose the money! The idea!"

"As if such an old maid could find a husband quick as a wink!" giggled the other. "Did you ever see such a little brown mouse of a woman?"

"I wonder if she knows it's leap year and she has the privilege of asking some man to marry her? It's her only chance to get the million, believe me!"

When Catesby returned to his desk he found Angela drawing down her veil. Through the filmy meshes her cheeks were pink and her eyes flashed dangerously. All Angela's fighting instincts were aroused. She must have that million at the price of her pride, at any price!

For the time avarice possessed her soul.

"And now, Miss Winton," smiled Catesby ruefully, "let us plan how we can agree to your uncle's eccentric proposition. Of course you do not want to lose a fortune."

"Of course not," said Angela crisply. "I shall not lose it, Mr. Catesby."

He stared at her.

"You mean that you are going to be married?" he asked.

Angela nodded.

"Then the matter is simplified," he said brusquely. "Perhaps you can arrange to be married immediately so as to gain the fortune. You may as well have it."

"Yes," said Angela mechanically.

He opened the door for her.

"You will let me know at once?" he asked in such an altered tone that Angela flashed a glance at him. His face was pale and stern, and the friendly look was gone from his dark blue eyes.

It was almost as if he had guessed Angela's bold intention.

"I've got to—I've got to look out for the future," thought Angela all the way home.

That evening Angela sat and thought and thought of all the men she knew who were eligible. When she had weighed and sifted them and discarded the impossibles and the undesirables there remained but two—Roger Frame and Dr. Deering.

Roger Frame was a civil engineer, or, rather, an uncivil one—brusque and bad mannered, but withal a fine, strong character and a good friend.

"And," debated Angela, "it must be desirable to have one's husband a good friend as well."

Dr. Deering was her minister, the middle aged rector of her church.

"I will explain to them," thought Angela, with hot cheeks. "They will understand, and, as that office girl said, it is leap year. I am only taking advantage of my privilege."

The next morning Angela arrayed herself in her best frock, happily a new one of soft gray with a hat to match. The hat was trimmed with violets, and at her breast she pinned a bunch of the same sweet purple blossoms.

Who could guess the panic in Angela's heart when she stood before Roger Frame's office door? All her principles were in revolt, in arms against the fear that she would lose Uncle Joseph's money.

Facing Roger Frame in his private office, Angela's panic found refuge in hasty speech. Her words tumbled desperately from her lips.

Roger Frame's rugged face was gravely tender as he took her hands in his.

"You have done me such a great honor, Miss Winton," he said gently, "that I am proud of your confidence in me. But, you see, I've complicated matters by engaging myself to Mrs. Weed, but sit down and let us talk it over."

Angela smiled bravely and shook her head. "I've another name on my list," she said hardily. "The rector."

"Dear lady," said Frame earnestly, "I wish you much joy and success in your quest. Dr. Deering is a good fellow, but I'd like to wring your uncle's neck for placing you in such a position!"

Angela's lip quivered. "If Mr. Catesby had only thought of some other way out of it," she said piteously.

"Catesby? He's the lawyer in the case?" asked Frame quickly.

She nodded. "You see, I must do something, Mr. Frame," and with one shamed look over her shoulder, she slipped out and closed the door upon a very angry man.

Roger Frame jerked the telephone receiver from its hook and called John Catesby's number.

Dr. Deering's reception room was bathed in mellow sunshine when a trim maid ushered an agitated Angela into the room.

"Dr. Deering is engaged at present," said the servant. "He will be at liberty in a little while."

Left alone, Angela could hear the frightened thumping of her heart.

There was the purr of a motorcar outside and the sound was instantly stilled. The rector had another visitor. Angela's courage waned rapidly. She had arisen in a panic when the servant ushered a man into the room with the same explanatory formula.

The man was John T. Catesby.

"Ah!" he cried quickly. "Have you seen him? Am I in time?"

"I haven't seen him yet," admitted Angela faintly.

"Then—then"—he stammered excitedly, "why not marry me, Angela? I love you. I want you for my wife." He held out his hands. Angela placed her trembling hands in his. "If I have to marry any one," she faltered: "I'm so glad it's you!"

He drew her closer.

"Suppose your uncle had never written you? Suppose there had been no fortune involved?" he whispered.

"Your love would have been riches enough," said Angela, her face against his and her pretty hat all crooked.

He smiled contentedly.

"Then you may read this," he said drawing a cablegram from his pocket. "It came half an hour ago."

It was from Sydney, Australia, and dated the day before. It announced the death of Joseph Henry Winton.

Angela would have drawn away from his arm, but he held her closely.

"And you come to me after that?" she asked.

"Didn't I say I loved you?" he retorted gruffly. "I've been screwing up my courage to tell you. Your becoming an heiress was a dash of cold water."

"But what shall we say to Dr. Deering?" questioned Angela.

"Why, we'll ask him to officiate at our wedding next week!" was Catesby's brilliant suggestion.

Many Children Die From Summer Complaint

When They Could Be Saved By Using

DR. FOWLER'S

Extract of Wild Strawberry.

Mrs. Guy R. Rhyns, Middle Clyde, N.S., writes: "Last summer my little boy Ross, then a year old, had summer complaint. He was so bad the waste matter from the bowels looked as if it had come from a broken boil. I live some distance from a doctor, but I sent word to him to come as soon as he could. In the meantime I gave him Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, and he gradually grew better after the first two doses, and after using all the bottle he was cured. I am the mother of three children, and I could not get them through the long summer months without it."

Thousands of families throughout Canada and the United States have used this sterling remedy during the past 70 years and have always found it a "friend in need."

When you ask for "Dr. Fowler's," see that you get "Dr. Fowler's." Don't accept some no name, no-reputation medicine which some dealer may say is "The same" or "Just as good."

CODE OF THE SEA.

Maritime Law Was Really Cradled in the Island of Rhodes.

The Phoenicians were the first to make long voyages and the first to arm their vessels for war. They readily availed themselves of the advantages of a marine and thereby soon secured an extensive commerce. In time they assumed the empire of the sea, a sovereignty they long continued to enjoy, during which time they became tyrants of the sea and exercised piracy. They were the first sea pirates known to history.

After the Phoenicians, the Argives and then the Cretans assumed dominion of the sea during various epochs, but it remained for the inhabitants of the island of Rhodes to create, digest, and promulgate the first system of maritime laws of which we have any authentic knowledge. So great was the success the attained their code has always been referred to as the "cradle of maritime law."

Nevertheless as far back as the reign of King Hammurabi, who was a contemporary of Abraham, 2,250 years before Christ, we find in the Code of Hammurabi numerous sections which fix the obligations resulting under contracts for boat building, hire or charter of vessels, transportation of goods for hire, collision, etc., and the principles then laid down are in many instances recognized at the present time as the rule of decision.

The Persians and then the Greeks in turn succeeded the Rhodians as masters of the sea. These two countries maintained large fleets of war vessels, called by the ancients first class vessels of force, as distinguished from [illegible] ships of burthen. The great naval battle of Salamis, fought by these countries, in which it is said over 1,500 vessels took part, followed by that of Platea and of Mycale, demonstrated to the Greeks, with the success of their arms, the immeasurable value of sea power. They lost no time and spared no efforts in the creation of a still greater navy and adopted measures they deemed judicious in furthering the interests of their merchant marine. Among other things, they established a special jurisdiction of Athens, to pass upon maritime transactions.

Bare Possibility.

Mr. Timson: Hurry, Mary, or we'll be late for the play.

His Wife: But I can't leave the house mussed up like this.

Mr. Timson: Who is going to see it while we are away?

His Wife: It's hard to tell. A burglar might break in.

Straightened It Out.

Archbishop Magee was once present at a full dress debate on the eastward position, which doubts were expressed as to the exact meaning of the words "before the table." After a speech or two Dr. Magee seized a piece of paper and wrote: "As to the phrase, 'The piper played before Moses,' doubts have arisen. Some believe its meaning to be that the piper played before Moses—that is, at a period anterior to his birth. Others hold that the piper played Moses in the sense of preceding the great lawgiver when he danced, while others teach that the piper played (coram Mose) before or in the presence of Moses when the son of Amram dined. All these are wrong. The phrase is to be understood as implying that the piper played at the north end of Moses, looking south." The document was handed up to Archbishop Tait, who looked grave.

Comfort and Cure For Baby's Skin Troubles

Dr. Chase's Ointment Cured When Baby's Body Was Covered With Distressing Eczema

If every mother could try Dr. Chase's Ointment for the chafing, skin irritation and resulting eczema which tortures so many babies, what a blessing it would be for the little ones.

This letter will give you an idea of what a wonderful work this Ointment is doing in the way of bringing comfort to children who are so unfortunate as to contract eczema. It is so easy for this trouble to develop from chafing or irritation caused by the clothing, and so difficult to get it cured, that Dr. Chase's Ointment is appreciated when once its healing qualities are known.

Mr. M. L. Doucet, Postmaster, Dugnayville, N.B., writes: "I believe it is my duty to recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment as a cure for eczema. My baby was seized with eczema and his face and arms were covered with this terrible disease. After trying all sorts of ointments the disease continued to spread until it covered the entire body. When the itching became bad he would scratch himself and was sometimes found in his cradle covered with blood. Hearing about Dr. Chase's Ointment I bought two boxes and before this was all used the child was cured. That was a year ago, and there has been no trace of eczema since. I recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment to all who suffer from eczema as being the best treatment in the world for itching skin diseases."

Dr. Chase's Ointment is for sale by all dealers at 60 cents a box. It is a good idea to keep it at hand along with the bath soap to be used for roughness of the skin, chafing or irritation. Prevention is so much better than cure. Powders clog the pores, but Dr. Chase's Ointment cleanses the pores and thereby keeps the skin soft and smooth. Sample box free if you mention this paper. When Turkey Was Great.

The Turkish empire reached its greatest glory in the reign of Suleiman the Magnificent, who held the throne from 1520 until 1566. Besides his North African possessions his territories extended from near what is now the border of Germany to Persia. There was at that time no other state that approached the Turkish in extent or wealth.

Not Enough to Go Around.

"What are you laughing at, dear?" asked a fond mother of a little four-year-old miss who seemed to be greatly amused.

"Oh, at something funny that happened," was the reply, "but it's no use to tell you, because it isn't funny enough for both of us to laugh at."—Chicago News.

LIGHTS ON THE MILK PROBLEM

H. H. Dean in The Farmer's Advocate

Two rather remarkable pamphlets have recently come to the writer's notice with reference to the milk problem. One is prepared by Dr. North for the New York Milk Committee and the other by Prof. Rosenau of Harvard University, who is retained and instructed by an Insurance Co. "for the use of its policyholders." We can understand a milk committee being interested in the milk supply of a large city, but that a Life Insurance Company should take up the question for the benefit of policyholders is a "new one" to us and will, I think, be news to most of The Advocate readers. And yet on reflection it is doubtless economy for a Life Insurance Company to endeavour to save life and to guard against dangers from food in any form. This is cheaper and better than having to pay losses on lives of policy owners.

The pamphlet by the New York Committee is called "Safeguarding Nature's Most Valuable Food, Milk." The opening paragraph deals with "the food value of milk." The author gives a brief table of relative values for milk and seven common foods. He concludes: "It can be seen from the above tabulation that when the consumer pays eight or nine cents for a quart of milk he is getting an amount of food for which he would have to pay an average price of 22 cents if his money were spent on beef, chicken, oysters, eggs or pork. Milk at 8 or 9 cents a quart is, therefore, a real bargain."

The next refers to the fact that in the States, and the same may be said for Canada, "The milk industry is one of the giant industries. It is close to the pocketbook of practically every farmer and close to the health of every consumer."

Clean milk comes next. He points out that "A filth call can run into any cow-stable and take its dinner from a cow and run out again with certified milk in its little stomach."

The author commends "clarification of milk because it adds to the safety of raw milk by removing blood, pus, waste tissue and large numbers of bacteria." However, he recommends pasteurization at "such a temperature and for such a length of time as will destroy the worst bacteria with the least damage to the milk itself." He thinks 145 degrees F. for 30 minutes is the best, in practice. Five reasons are given for pasteurizing milk which may be briefly summarized by saying it prevents infant deaths and the spread of disease germs. This statement is made: "No epidemic of disease has ever been traced to pasteurized milk. The objections raised to pasteurization that it is a substitute for cleanliness and affects adversely the digestibility and food value of milk are met by saying, the Health Office should prevent the first, and experiments with infants in New York at 55 municipal milk depots where 18,000 are fed daily in summer and 16,000 in winter disprove this second assertion about pasteurization of milk spoiling it for infants. "For three years all of this milk has been pasteurized. Records have shown that the babies have gained weight, have kept well, have shown no signs of rickets, or scurvy, and in every way give evidence that pasteurized milk is not inferior in food value or digestibility to raw milk. The death rate among infants during this period has been reduced from 125 per 1,000 to 98 per 1,000 births—which places New York city in the lead of any large city of the world in the reduction of infant mortality."

The advice given for buying milk is "Three matters are of chief importance to be considered. These are safety, decency and price. Safety comes first and is more important than decency or price."

The pamphlet concludes, advising Municipal Milk Control, by establishing a Milk Laboratory in every city, then pasteurizing and compulsory bottling of milk under sanitary conditions, and finally grading the milk before pasteurization into three grades, A, B and C, with bacterial standards for each grade. A valuable summary of the important points covered is given on the last page.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

GOOD STYLE FOR THE YOUNGEST MAN.

By Anabel Worthington.

Our very young men like their garments extremely simple, much as do their elders. The boy who is to play with the freedom that he should enjoy is subject to many changes of raiment if he is to be kept always as fresh and clean as childhood should be.

The suit which is pictured herewith is the simplest form of the Russian suit. It has the usual coat or blouse and in this example the closing is arranged in double-breasted manner. There is a tuck at each side of the front panel and a similar tuck at each side of the back. The neck is high and is finished with a straight band collar. Little sleeves are made full length and in place of a cuff the material is tucked lengthwise of the arm above the wrist. Of course, it is always possible to replace the tucks by a few gathers and a band cuff.

Small boys is made with either open edges at the knees or with the bloomer gathers to complete the costume and make it suitable from the young man's point of view, and at the same time spare the mother much worry on the score of underwear.

Duck and linen are favorite materials for these suits, and there are numbers of other fabrics in which they may be made. Serge, flannel, cheviot, tweed, cashmere and Bedford cloth are also suitable materials.

Lonsdale drill and the like. Gingham is not too light a fabric, and for dressy usage pongee silk and poplin will be found appropriate and becoming.

The pattern of this suit, No. 7201, is cut in sizes 2, 4 and 6 years. Medium size requires 2⅝ yards of 36 inch material.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

MEMORIES OF THE BASTILLE

Only Seven Prisoners in the Famous Fortress When It Fell.

In the French republic "the day we celebrate" is the 14th of July, memorable as having witnessed in 1789 the destruction by the people of Paris of the grim old Bastille, a fortress identified with despotism and cruelty. Poorly informed writers, not French, in referring to this event, give the impression that the Bastille was crowded with prisoners.

Lamartine in describing the destruction of this hated place said that the Bastille, long cleared of all guilt by the gentle spirit of Louis XVI., when the mob rose against it, represented only recollections of old horrors. The vaults restored to light only seven prisoners. Three of these, gray headed men, were shut up legitimately, or by family motives they had been withdrawn from the judgment of the ordinary courts of law. Two of them, Tavernier and Withe, had become insane. They saw the light of the sun with surprise, and their incurable insanity caused them to be sent to the madhouse after they enjoyed fresh air and freedom for a few days. The third was the Count de Solages, who thirty-two years before had been sent to this prison at his father's request. He was recognized by none after his release, and died in poverty.

The other four prisoners had been confined four years and on purely civil grounds. They had forged bills of exchange and were arrested in Holland on the requisition of the bankers they had defrauded.

"These seven prisoners," says Lamartine, "were released, caressed, even crowned with laurels. They were carried by their liberators like living spoil snatched from the hands of tyranny. They were paraded about the streets, and their sufferings were avenged by the people's shouts and tears. The intoxication of the victors broke out against the very stones of the place, and the embrasures, torn from the towers, were hurled with indignation into the ditches."

It is in "A Tale of Two Cities," regarded by many as Dickens' masterpiece, that the American and English reader gets his information concerning the Bastille from the fictitious character of Dr. Alexander Manette, a physician of Paris, confined there for eighteen years.

His Best.

"What is your son going to be when he grows up, Mr. Jigthorpe?" asked the visitor, patting little Willie on the head.

"Well, really, I don't know yet," replied the proud parent, "but from the size of his appetite I think he has a decided bent toward the beef packing industry."

Meeting the Collectors.

"Do you find it difficult to keep track of your business engagements?"

"Not at all. By consulting each morning my list of accounts payable I am able to tell almost positively who will be likely to call."

WIGS FOR OPERA STARS.

They Are Large and Costly and Difficult to Adjust Properly.

The largest and longest wigs made for the market are made for the operatic stage, and the largest of these are made for Wagnerian parts. Most actresses play in their own hair, supplemented by a switch, but in opera any singer would look absurd if she sang a role in her own hair. Much of the effect of heroic size and stateliness that operatic singers get is due to their luxuriant tresses.

Operatic wigs, even the most beautiful, do not cost more than $350 or $400, because they are made of short hair. It is the long hair which is made up into wigs and switches for private personages that costs. Out of each head of hair that the wigmaker buys he saves the longest hairs (about one-sixth of each head) for his private trade. One switch may be made up of the long hairs of half a dozen heads. If the shade is an uncommon one this makes long switches very expensive.

The operatic wigs are made up of short hair, set into soft linen strings. Each of these strings is called a strand, and into each thousands of hairs, from a foot to a foot and a half long, are woven. Each strand looks like a very heavily furred tail. Some wigs are made up of eight or ten strands, and some of the largest have as many as twenty.

The more hair of her own the singer has the harder she finds it to make her wig look natural. She first braids her own hair tightly and winds it about her head. Over this she winds cotton gauze—surgical gauze—bringing it low about her forehead. When she puts on the wig she pins it firmly through the gauze into her own hair, then brings the face locks of the wig down and pins them to the low bandage that comes about her forehead and behind her ears. No matter how wild a scene she is called upon to enact, the hair about her face does not become disarranged. The strands of the long wig behind, being made up as they are of short hair, do not become tangled. They divide beautifully and smoothly. The singer can bring a long curl over her shoulder, or one over each shoulder. If the wigs were made of long hair as they look to be, the hair would tangle terribly, and at the end of a dramatic scene the singer's locks would be an untidy mess.—Every Week.

Religion in Holland.

The following incident was told by Lecky in somewhat whimsical illustration of his belief that if religion were to die out of all other European nations it would still survive in Holland: A Dutch peasant was in sore straits about the impossibility of making his hens observe Sunday. He came to his pastor with a present of eggs. He regretted, he said, that he could not prevent his hens from laying these on the Sabbath, but he made what amends he could by giving them to God's minister that they might be handed over to the poor and infirm.—"Old and Odd Memories."

The Iron Crown of Italy.

Napoleon in 1805 was crowned king of Italy at Milan, and with his own hands placed the ancient iron crown of Lombardy on his head. This most famous crown of Europe is so called from a narrow band of iron, miraculously preserved from rust, attached to the inner circumference of the circlet. It is composed of Jewels and embossed gold, the workmanship of which bears strange resemblance to that on the enameled gold ornament belonging to King Alfred which was found in Somerset and is now preserved in the Ashmolean museum at Oxford.—Westminster Gazette.

Disappointing.

"I don't think much of Binks' sense of propriety."

"What's the matter now?"

"Last night after the theater I offered to drive him and Mrs. Binks out to their home, ten miles in the country."

"Well?"

"The chump accepted."—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

As Spoke in Lunnun.

A woman entered a bus and took a ticket which expired at the tower of London. As she made no attempt to alight at that point the conductor called out: "'Ere yar, lady! You want the tower, don't yer?"

"Yus," she replied, "but as I ain't got nowheres to put it I'll go on to the next stop."—London Standard.

Noble Dissatisfaction.

It is said that Tennyson was seventeen years in writing "In Memoriam." He wrote the little song, "Come into the Garden, Maud," fifty times before he published it. The wife of a distinguished painter said, "I never saw my husband satisfied with one of his productions." Self dissatisfaction lies at the root of our noblest achievements.—Christian Herald

BAD WEATHER FEARED IN CANADIAN WEST

Special to The Examiner:

WINNIPEG, Aug. 24.—After two or three weeks of torrid weather, temperatures all over the Canadian prairie west took a tumble last night, and yesterday it was cool with a strong north wind. With the full moon tomorrow, old timers are shaking their heads, twenty four hours of north wind, then drop and frost, they say. Temperatures below forty were fairly common all over Saskatchewan. The thermometer dropped to 34 at Kindersley.

The great bulk of the crop is safe from anything but killing frosts which need not be anticipated. Light frosts might occasion some loss in grade to late ripening grain. Probs to-day are as follows: "Fair and cool to-day and on Tuesday; rather low temperatures to-night but any damaging frost is not indicated."

To Banish Wrinkles and Freshen Up Quickly

After a strenuous day outdoors, when winds, heat and exhaustion have combined to take away one's freshness and caused the skin to wrinkle and sag—or after a tedious or fretful day indoors—one often has urgent need for some quick rejuvenator. Maybe there's a dance on for the evening, or some other social event. How in the world can one make herself presentable, looking as she does? It's quite easy.

Just get an ounce of powdered saxolite and a half pint witch hazel at the nearest drug store, mix the two and bathe the face in the solution for two or three minutes. Then look into your mirror and behold the wonderful transformation! Wrinkles have vanished, loose tired muscles have been rested and "firmed up," marks of fatigue have flown, and you look so much brighter and younger you can hardly believe your eyes. No one need hesitate to try this, the witch hazel and saxolite being so perfectly harmless.

RISE IN PRICE OF TEA IS EXPECTED

Special to The Examiner:

The tea market continues to be affected by two abnormal factors—heavy consumption in Russia and freight difficulties. Not only have old stocks of teas been cleaned up in many large markets, but new supplies are distributed to the trade as they arrive. The result is that the present season on the Chinese tea market has begun with increased prices. It is reported that shipments estimated at several hundred thousand poods (1 pood equals 36.1128 pounds) of tea are now lying at Vladivostock, but that a very limited number of cars is being placed at the disposal of the shippers to transport it. If the transportation facilities do not improve in the near future it is likely that tea prices will experience a further rise.

A LUMBERMAN'S OPINION.

A Deathbed Triumph

By WILLIAM CHANDLER

An old man lay on the bed of death. A doctor sat by him intent upon some method of saving his life. An entirely different problem was in the mind of the sufferer.

"Doctor," he said presently, "can't I die for a short time, then come to life again for a certain purpose?"

"What purpose?" asked the doctor.

The invalid cast his eyes about the room to see that no one was present then, stretching forth his hand, drew the doctor to him and whispered what he had to say. When he came to a pause the doctor said:

"I have suspected as much."

"Can it be done?" asked the invalid.

"It can be tried."

Some more conversation followed in which the doctor gave the sick man instructions, and the sick man did the same by the doctor. Then the latter ended the matter by saying:

"Are you ready?"

"Yes."

The doctor took from his medicine case a tablet and placed it in the patient's mouth.

The sick man, who was lying on his back, stared at the ceiling, immovable. The doctor went hurriedly to the door and opened it. There stood the wife of the invalid.

"Madam," said the doctor, "I fear that your husband is dead."

The woman hurried into the room and stood over the sickbed for a few moments looking down into the pale face. The doctor, who was beside her, closed the eyes of her husband, then led her away, saying:

"This has been a long trial to you. Your watch is now over. Go and rest yourself."

She suffered herself to be led away and within an hour was in bed and asleep.

Paul Markham passed away at dawn the next morning. Preparations were made for the funeral, which was held three days later, and on the fourth day his widow, who was his second wife, and her two children by a former husband, all dressed in deep mourning, entered the drawing room of the house in which Mr. Markham had died and took seats. A number of other persons, including a lawyer, entered, and when all were seated the attorney unfolded a document and was about to begin its reading when Dr. Blanchard, who had attended the deceased, entered in company with a girl of fifteen. There was about her a melancholy that savored of despair.

"I have here," said the lawyer, "the last will and testament of Paul Markham, deceased, executed one year ago."

He then read the will, which left all his property to his beloved wife, Jane Markham, trusting that she would sufficiently provide for his daughter, Ethel Markham. Having stated that the will had been duly signed and witnessed, he added that it would be immediately filed for probate. He was refolding the document when Dr. Blanchard arose and, drawing a paper from his pocket, said:

"I have a will executed a few hours before Paul Markham's death."

The widow's countenance changed immediately.

"If you have any such will," she said, "it is a forgery. At any rate it was not witnessed. That I know, because I was in attendance upon my husband every day and hour during his last illness, and I know no one who could have witnessed a will entered the house."

"What time did you go to bed the night your husband died?" asked the doctor.

"At 10 o'clock."

"Your husband did not die till 2 o'clock the next morning."

"He died at 9 o'clock in the evening. You called me into the room where he lay and told me he was dead."

"I told you I feared he was dead. He was very low. He revived, and at midnight I drew this simple will for him, bequeathing all his property to his daughter, Ethel Markham. Two persons came at my call and witnessed the will while you were asleep."

The woman stared at the doctor, although she could hardly believe her senses. For years she had dominated her husband and for a year, since she had forced him to make a will in her favor, had watched him carefully to make sure that he did not make another. At the very end of his life he had outwitted her.

"Let me see it," she said to the doctor.

He held the paper before her. She read it and recognized her husband's signature, though it had been written in the agony of death. Realizing that she had been foiled she arose from her seat and, followed by her two children, stalked out of the room.

Dr. Blanchard by the terms of the testified will was made Ethel's guardian, and she thereafter made her residence with him. Her life had been nearly crushed out of her by her step mother, and it required some time to restore her to a healthy state of mind and body. But by the time she came of age she was completely recovered, for her surroundings as a member of the doctor's family were all that could be desired, and he knew how to treat her to her advantage professionally. In his old age his savings of years were swept away in a commercial panic, and Ethel Markham provided for him and those of his family who were still too young to take care of themselves.

GERMAN ATTACKS RESULT IN FAILURE

THE FRENCH INFLICT TERRIBLE LOSSES ON FOE

Foe's Unsuccessful Attacks Have Cost Them Terribly

Violent Assaults on French Positions in the Vosges Are Repulsed Without the Slightest Gain---Attacked After a Heavy Bombardment---Mines and Russian Destroyers Were Big Factors in Naval Victory.

RUSSIANS ARE OVERJOYED AT SUCCESS

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, Aug. 24 (French Official Communique)—For forty-eight hours the Germans have been hurling infantry against the French positions on the Vosges Heights with terrible losses, without any gain.

These attacks became more violent yesterday, assaults on the preceding day having failed. At dawn the Teutons heavily bombarded the French works on Lingekopf, near Barrenkopf and Schratzmaennele. And then launched successive charges throughout the day.

The War Office reported repulse of all these attacks. Germans were beaten in an isolated assault on the crest of Sondernach Wood.

In the Arras region, artillery duels continued throughout last night, but there were no important infantry actions.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 24.—Frank admission that the important cities of Vilna and Bielostock will shortly fall into the hands of the Germans, thus severing the Petrograd-Poland railway, was made by a high official of the Russian War Office to-day.

"Our forces, however, will retain two trunk lines and various branches, sufficient to withdraw our armies without danger of capture," said this War Office official in an interview approved by the Government. "We do not believe that Petrograd is in any danger from the German armies. Ample forces have been concentrated, and necessary measures taken to protect the capital.

The War Office gives full credit to German strategy for directing a campaign that would be recorded as one of the greatest offensive movements in the world's history. But the War Office is greatly cheered at the rapid increase in the production of war munitions and sees a bright outlook for the future.

"The idea that the Germans have crushed our armies is ridiculous.

That is just what the Germans have been unable to do. They have pounded down forts and forced to retreat, but territory is something that always can be regained.

The day is not far distant when we will again assume the offensive and push the Austro-Germans back to their own borders. There is no concealing the fact that our present difficulties are due to errors we have made in the past. But we are firmly confident that they would be followed by a moment of complete triumph."

War Office officials urged the people to repose the fullest confidence in the success of the Allied forces now attacking the Dardanelles. "Though the progress of the Allies seems slow, the truth is that the most intense warfare presently would be proceeding," he said.

"The results that would be finally manifested will be enormous."

LONDON, Aug. 24.—Press despatches from Petrograd to-day, unconfirmed by the Admiralty, credited lines and Russian destroyers with the work of destroying German ships, excepting action in which British submarine sank German Dreadnought.

The German destroyers, these despatches said, made their way into the gulf through the mists and attacked the Russian battleship Slava. Russian torpedo boats joined in the fight and drove the Germans into the mine fields, sinking several by shell fire.

SON OF LOCAL MAN KILLED IN ACTION ON JULY 30TH

Mr. and Mrs. T. Blunt, 496 College St. Receive Sad Intelligence of the Death of Their Son In France —Killed By Shell

ANOTHER SON A PRISONER

Killed in action somewhere in France, by shell on July 30th, was the message that reached Mr. and Mrs. T. Blunt, 496 College Street, late yesterday afternoon, referring to their son, Sergt.-Major J. W. Blunt, age 28, 9th Batt., 42nd Infantry King's Royal Rifles. As confirmed by the War Office was the report of another son, Corporal James Blunt, age 30, "The Band" King's Royal Rifles, shot in the abdomen and taken prisoner by the Germans on Nov. 26, 1914

The two brothers joined the K.R.Rs ten years ago and have served their king and country in Great Britain and in Egypt and the Soudan. During the last four years the Sergt Major was in charge of the instruction school in the military depot at Winchester, England. He trained his own company of 300 recruits, part of Kitchener's army, and led them in the trenches for the six months immediately prior to his death. His loss is keenly felt by his sorrowing parents as well as by his brothers and sisters. His brothers are Thomas R., Dublin St., Dab. Manchester, Eng., Cyril, of this city; his sisters are Alice (Mrs. Wootton, Toronto), Edith (Mrs. Picard), Stewart St., and Violet, of the Empress Hotel.

Corporal James Blunt served the whole of his time with the Band, K.R.Rs, and on war being declared was drafted to France with the first contingent of the British. He took part in the famous battle of Mons, and was subsequently wounded and taken prisoner in the district of Ypres, in France. No word has been received from him and his fate at the present time is unknown.

Mr. and Mrs. Blunt have resided in Peterborough nearly three years, and are well and favourably known throughout the city. Mr. Blunt being the Sergt.-Major of the local Salvation Army corps, and their son, Thomas R., the bandmaster of the Young Peoples' Band, Salvation Army, city

UP TO PETERBOROUGH NOW

Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,—The new depot battalion scheme for Peterborough, is now ready. It is up to Peterborough to make good. Headquarters have agreed that if we raise 1000 men or even 500, we may have them quartered, housed and trained for overseas right here at home. This ought to be a great thing for Peterborough, if Peterborough can back up its requests by providing the men. Word came from Col. Hemming, the O.C. at Kingston this morning to begin recruiting for it. This confirmed the wire sent from headquarters at Ottawa last night. All recruits now enlisted who want to stay here can do so. Let us put our shoulder to the wheel. They have done well for us at Ottawa and Kingston, and now we must do our share here if we are to have the benefit of a permanent establishment in Peterborough until the war ends or a local battalion to be trained here, and live here, getting ready for the sunny fields of France. Three Cheers!

MORE WORRY FOR WILSON

Southern States Resent Manner in Which the United States Administration Has Handled the Cotton Problem

THE ARABIC SITUATION

Special Wire to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24.—The effect of its emergency arrangements in preventing the disorganization of the cotton industry through the Allies' order, making cotton contraband, were watched by the administration to-day confidently, but with anxiety.

Not only is the matter of tremendous commercial importance, but its success in effect to sustain the market is admittedly of capital moment, politically.

The cotton growers' increasing resentment against the administration, freely expressed by Southern senators and representatives, for what was termed the State Departments lack of vigour in handling cotton negotiations with Great Britain has been the subject of worry to the President and his advisors.

THE ARABIC CASE,

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24.—It is undoubtedly true that President Wilson has decided what course to pursue if convinced that Germany meant to be deliberately unfriendly regarding the Arabic affair. There is no question that the German-American relations would be severed if Germany refuses to protect the Americans' safety on the ocean. The administration realizes a diplomatic break would be dangerous as the country doesn't want to be involved in war. It is thought an extra session of the Congress will be called to place the country in a position to meet eventualities. Declaration of war doesn't of necessity follow, but it is a possibility almost a probability, which must be considered.

RECRUITING TO BEGIN

Orders Received to Commence Enlisting for the New Peterborough Battalion—Should Prove Another Stimulus to Recruiting

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

At the meeting of the Speakers Patriotic League held in the recruiting rooms last night the question of the Peterborough Battalion was discussed and Mr. Burnham made a verbal report of all steps that had been taken in connection with the matter, and also gave us thorough explanation of what the government would require. Mr. Burnham received assurance from the Headquarters that this battalion would be trained at Peterborough and when trained would be drafted directly overseas, of course. It might be drafted by companies or as a full unit. This will depend entirely on the requirements of the service.

There is some confusion existing as to the status of the present recruits at Peterborough and whether that they shall be the nucleus for the new battalion. It was pointed out that while no doubt that the successful recruiting of the large number of men since the first of the month for the Mounted Rifles, Batteries and Infantry was largely due to the efforts made by the Speakers' Patriotic League, still there are a certain number of recruits, and especially the band, that has been recruited by the officers of the 59th. It was also pointed out that this battalion is over strength by some 100 men and no doubt that they will not be allowed to stay in that state. They will be drafted out from the 59th.

The new battalion, as it has to be organized from the ground floor up, and every private that is recruited has a chance for the non-commissioned officers positions, while in the present highly organized battalion all these men have been picked, and the men that leave Peterborough would remain as privates until an opening occurred.

Mr. Burnham wired the District Officer Commanding, asking if recruiting could start for the new battalion also if the recruits at Peterborough at the present time would remain with the new battalion. He received the following reply

"You may commence recruiting Peterborough battalion. Men recruited by officers of the 59th should be permitted to go to Barriefield if they so desire.

This clears the situation and all men that have been actually recruited by these officers will, no doubt, be allowed to go to Barriefield if they so desire. Still they have the opportunity to remain at Peterborough and assist in the work of raising the Peterborough battalion. It would appear to local loyalty to stay with the local organization to make it a success, as so much hard work has been put in to get it established. In addition to this the men will be properly housed and equipped while at Peterborough, and from reports that were received from Barriefield, and from the state of affairs on Sunday, the latter more comfortable place than camp in wet weather.

Everything is now clear and there should be a rush of the young men of the town to fill this battalion up, get trained into shape and they would be moved overseas in three to six months, or as soon as they do get into shape. If the band, already organized, decides to leave the town, why there are plenty of men behind this battalion to see that it is properly looked after.

ANOTHER DETACHMENT FOR BARRIEFIELD WILL LEAVE IN MORNING

Overseas Band and as Many Infantry Recruits as Desire to Join the 59th Battalion to Be Sent to Kingston.

THE MEN TO DECIDE

The local members of the 59th Band and as many of the infantry recruits recently enlisted who desire to go will leave for Barriefield Camp, Kingston, on the 8.10 train to-morrow morning. Orders to this effect were received by Lt.-Col Walker, the local infantry recruiting officer this morning. At the same time orders were received to begin recruiting for the new battalion to be stationed in Peterborough. The question of going to join the 59th or remaining here as part of the new battalion will be left to the men who have already enlisted. On their return to the Armouries from Lakefield this afternoon the men will be asked to make their choice. From surface indications it is likely that a large number of the soldiers will elect to go to Barriefield, and those who desire to do so will leave to-morrow morning. The band, in charge of Bandsman Peyer, is to go anyway and will be joined at Barriefield by nine sixteen or eighteen bandsmen. It is a matter of regret that such a splendid organization could not be kept in Peterborough, but as a matter of fact the band was recruited for the 59th Battalion. There will undoubtedly be a large crowd of citizens out to say farewell to Peterborough's latest contingent. The boys have earned the admiration and respect of everyone by the way they have conducted themselves in uniform. No complaints have been heard of their conduct which has been exemplary.

Just how many are going will not be known until this afternoon, but it is likely that the band and some sixty recruits at least will be in the detachment. Another draft for the artillery may also go at the same time. The band will take their borrowed instruments to camp but a Barriefield with them as in Peterborough, detachment will make an impressive showing as the entire Barriefield. They will be the first band to reach the camp with an overseas band to play them in.

ASKS ABOUT FRIENDS

Mrs. George Long, George Street, has received the following letter from her son, Lance Corp. F. J. Long of the 16th Canadian Battalion who is a prisoner of war at Paderborn Germany

Dear Mother, Just a few lines to let you know I am improving and am feeling quite well am now out of bed, and have a walk in the garden here every day. All the other Britishers here are well. How is everybody and everything? Hope all are well. The weather here is fine now. I haven't had any word from any of you since I've been here, but I understand it takes quite a long time to get a letter to Canada and back. How are Bob and Lizzie and Sam and Nell? Get lots to eat here and the attention is very good. Well mother, there's nothing much to write about. Hope you received my other letters. Two letters and four post cards a month are all I can write you, so don't worry when you don't hear from me. Well, I guess I'll have to close now. Give my regards to all and don't worry about me at all. Love from

Thirty-third Battery Has Received New Guns

Mr. Frank Degen 384 Aylmer Street, has received the following interesting letter from his son, Gunner George Degen of the Peterborough detachment thirty-third Battery Canadian Field Artillery, now stationed at Barriefield, Kingston. The letter reads as follows:

We got our guns Saturday. We haven't got our full equipment yet but expect to get it soon. We are here about two days Tuesday morning, and believe me I was out the first morning we crawled out at 5.30. The work is pretty easy so far, but we will probably get a little harder later on. Elmer Dowler and I have been over to Kingston several times. I expect to be home on leave in the course of three or four weeks.

RAZORS FOR SOLDIERS AT THE FRONT

The Morgan Hardware Company is prepared to receive contributions of old or spare razors for the use of the troops at the front. This is a worthy cause and one that should meet with a ready response. The appeal has been made through the Advisory committee of the Ontario Retail Hardware and Stove Dealers' Association. The following communication from the Committee is self explanatory.

"The Advisory Committee makes a strong appeal to all members of our Association to give a hearty response to the request of the Master Cutler of Sheffield, England, for old or spare razors, which will be put in shape, honed and delivered to the war office for use of the soldiers at the front. The need for this worthy and patriotic object is urgent."

Funeral of Mrs. S. J. Anglesey

The funeral of the late Mrs. S. J. Anglesey took place from the family residence, McGill street, this morning, at 9 o'clock, proceeding to Sacred Heart church, where Father McCauley said mass.

The pallbearers were Messrs. Alex. McDonald, Michael McDonald, brothers of the deceased, Mr. Sullivan, Frank Young, P. Anglesey and Daniel McDonald, a cousin.

She leaves to mourn her loss a husband and one child. Interment took place in St. Peter's cemetery.

Was Fined Five Dollars

W. J. Rome, driver of one of His Majesty's mail waggons, was fined five dollars in this morning's Police Court for refusing to stop when signalled by a traffic officer at the corner of George and Charlotte streets.

Belmont Man in Trouble.

C. Monro of Belmont Township appeared in court on a charge of arson. It is alleged that he was concerned in the destruction of a driving shed. He was remanded and will later appear before County Police Magistrate Lansley for trial.

Non Support.

A local man was charged with non support. The case was remanded for a month in order to effect, if possible, a family reconciliation.

In sewing on buttons place a pin between the button and the material, and then sew on in the usual way, afterwards pulling out the pin. The button is then not drawn tight to the fabric, so that in fastening it it goes through the button-hole without dragging at the fabric.

MANY U.S. VISITORS AT LAKE HOUSE

Special to The Examiner:

CHATEAU, Lake Louise, Alta., Aug. 24.—American tourists are still pouring into Canada spending several delightful days in the Canadian Rockies. Among the most prominent registered at the C.P.R. hotel at Lake Louise are Mrs. W. W. Taft, wife of ex-President Taft of the U.S., accompanied by Miss Helen Taft and Miss Heron. The party spent a most enjoyable time taking in the various indescribable trips, and subsequently leaving for Victoria. Mr. W. B. H. Dowse, of Boston, justice, accompanied by his wife and daughter., Mrs. Manning, New York, Rev. Dr. Gardner, with wife and daughter, Philadelphia; Mr. Geo. and Miss Otis Skinner, Philadelphia, are also registered here.

RICE LAKE TRIPS

Cheap Fares on the Steamer "Geneva"

The steamer "Geneva" will leave the George Street Wharf for Gore's Landing and Harwood, Rice Lake, on Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday, at 9 o'clock, a.m., sharp, calling at East City at 9.40, and Street Railway Wharf at 9.25, returning at 7 p.m. Round trip tickets on Wednesday and Friday only 25c. 9d-44

LIVE STOCK MARKET

TORONTO, Aug. 24.—Live Stock Market—Receipts fair; trade slow, prices weak. Ewes, light, $6.25 to $6.75; choice steers, $8.25 to $8.50; hogs, fed and watered $9.00 f.o.b., $8.55, off the cars, $9.15 to $9.40.

SASKATOON HAS GOOD WEATHER

Examiner Special:

SASKATOON, Sask., Aug. 24. Twenty-five per cent. of the wheat crop in Central Saskatchewan has been cut, according to the crop reporters of the Provincial Government. The total area cut would have been much greater but for the heavy rains of the past week. A binder twine scarcity was threatened last week but this week harvesting supplies are all normal.

The past two weeks have been ideal weather for late crops and 15 per cent. of the oat crop has been cut. Already some barley cut in this district has been threshed yielding 65 bushels to the acre. All grade samples which have been shown so far are of the highest quality.

ENCOURAGING ALL ROUND.

The invasion of Great Britain by German armies, is farther away than ever. Its improbability is strengthened by the failure of the German fleet, to win success in invading Russia from the sea. Here a comparatively weak Russian naval force by shrewd strategy, disastrously mauled the Germans who failed to effect a landing of a sufficient forces to escape annihilation, not to speak of its being a serious menace to Russian land forces at the northern end of the battle line.

If Germany, after careful preparation could not turn her naval power to advantage in effecting a sea invasion, in the face of a much weaker naval force, what would she be able to do in invading Britain, with the mighty sea forces of the British navy watching for her in the North Sea?

We don't know many details of their presence there; but they are there; and if Germany wants to be convinced of the fact it has only to bring its fleet out of hiding.

We have no reason to be discouraged over the outlook. We may fully trust the British navy which, though it has had no chance to show what it could or can do, has been a silent power of protection, as it will be a loud power of protection if its ability to afford protection is challenged. It is true that the submarine danger is annoying and disquieting; but, apart from the wanton destruction of life and property involved, it has little or no strategic value. It is in this respect mere pin-pricking.

The war is a deadly grind; a hard up-hill game. But things are by no means hopeless. Germany and Austria have pretty well exhausted the advantage derived from years of preparation, and though yet strong they are becoming weak. On the contrary the Allies, though not weak, are becoming stronger.

We must expect a see-saw of victory and reverse, of advance and retirement; but on the whole the cause of the Quadruple Entente, is gaining. To get an idea of the situation and prospects the whole field of operations must be considered. When this is done we can see that the outlook is not hopeless but hopeful.

The set-back Russia has received is serious; but a compensation is preparing. The very difficult campaign for crushing Turkey is progressing slowly but surely, and it will be helped by the entrance of Italy into the struggle; and the very probable assistance of the Balkan States will hasten the elimination of Turkey as a source of German strength, and throw open the back door to a danger that will give Germany and Austria something to think about besides Russia. While this is impending in the south, on the western front the strength of the Allies is growing every day, and the forces of Germany are not growing substantially and permanently stronger On the whole the situation is brightening and much more encouraging than discouraging.

The task before the Allies, before the British people, and before the Canadian people, is still formidable, and the lightening of the difficulty, and the beginning of the end depends largely upon the energy we throw into our share of the struggle. The hosts of Germany and Austria, and the forces of their opponents are composed of individual men. Remembering this we see that every recruit added to the ranks counts. No Canadian, no young man in Peterborough, can take comfort to his conscience by the argument that one man more or less doesn't count.

Every man counts, and you are the next man that is called upon to enlist.

The Government's consent to enlistment for a Peterborough battalion, or a half battalion is another encouragement. Men who enlist in it will be kept together, and the spirit of comradeship strengthened. The men will be trained and housed in Peterborough.

This is not only an added inducement to recruiting, and makes easier the duty of men to enlist, but it should enlist our other citizens to coperate and give full realization to the fact that Peterborough, as The Examiner has long contended should be done, is made a military centre.

Details are at present lacking, but there is one detail on which everything depends. To realize the full advantage of being a recruiting and training centre for a new battalion depends on recruiting the battalion; and that depends upon the response of the men eligible for enlistment.

PREPARE THE WAY.

Dr. Edwards, Conservative member for Frontenac, has no more use for Henri Bourassa, the arch-Nationalist, than Hon. Mr. Blondin, a member of the Government of Canada, has "for England and the English." The outspoken doctor in a recent speech, declared that Henri Bourassa, who urges Canadians not to enlist, should be interned with the Austrians and Germans. This is caustic counsel, and might be acted upon with advantage. But would it be consistent—could the Government consistently undertake to lock up Henri Bourassa, when it keeps in its cabinet men who have been more outspoken than Bourassa in expressing hostility to British institutions and British interests? It is not stated that Hon. Mr. Blondin has ever recanted his disloyal and traitorous opinions and utterances; and there seems little prospect that he will be one of the members of the cabinet to be sent through the country to make speeches to stimulate recruiting.

Political necessity makes strange bed-fellows; but the unwritten law that the provinces should be recognized in cabinet composition, does not compel the Premier to select avowed traitors, like some of the Nationalist members, to be His Majesty's advisers. Surely there are, among the Conservative members of Quebec, some men who have not bowed the knee to Baal—or Bourassa. We have, French Canadians, like Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. Rodolph Lemieux, firing the heather of recruiting in Quebec. Why not have some French-speaking members of the Cabinet do the same thing? It may be argued that their history of loyalty to British interests, to the interests of Canada and the Empire, forbid them being depended upon. Then why keep them? Why not away with them and give their places to men who, by their very presence in the Cabinet, will not, by their unrepented disloyalty, exercise an adverse influence to recruiting, and give tone to the absurd stories of British rapacity and threatened conscription, that the Nationalists have circulated among the simple habitants? At this time all parties are with the Government in its efforts to contribute to the speedier ending of this war; but the popular zeal is not stimulated, nor is recruiting stimulated, by the fact that the Governemnt contains members of a faction whose respect for the flag and what it stands for, is implied in the statement that they had "to shoot holes through the flag to breathe the air of liberty"—shoot holes through the flag, that Rev. Father Minehan declared in the Opera House at our first recruiting meeting, stood for the highest type of liberty in the world. The flag has had many holes shoot through it, but they have been shot in the fight for the liberty we are enjoying and fighting for to-day.

It might be permitted without irreverence in connection with the Nationalist element, to adopt the language of Holy Scripture—prepare ye the way of recruiting and make its paths straight. We have enough hindrances to recruiting; enough idle excuses that cannot be eliminated as easily as the hindrances represented by giving place and authority in the councils of a British Dominion, to personal and physical embodiments of the disloyal cult of Nationalism.

WHY NOT LONG BOOTS?

A correspondent of The Globe, speaking with expert knowledge states that the Imperial Government is placing orders for long boots similar to those used by the habitants in the Province of Quebec and known as "Lace pacs." These boots as worn in Quebec and the Northwest have been hailed solos. The idea behind the sort conveniently is that the British troops will have to endure another winter on the trenches of Flanders and northern France, and that the long boots ordered will lessen materially the hardships of trench duty. It does not require military experience to understand that a soldier is standing in mud six inches deep and wearing a shoe five inches high, he must have wet feet, and on marching to and from the trenches through agitating feeds filled with mud puddles he is bound also to get his feet wet.

Germany and Russia provide the long boot Britain is beginning to order it, but tens of thousands of Canadian soldiers are to be sent abroad this fall again wearing the short boot and puttees, which are worse than useless for keeping out water lying in the bottom of a trench. The Canadian purchasing Commission has ordered no long boots yet, so far as the public know, and Canada's soldiers will have to endure trench life next winter for long spells with wet feet. The Militia Council may have good reason for refusing to move with the times and adapt the soldier's equipment to the conditions of service, but from the outside it looks like crass obstinacy of a most reprehensible variety. Long boots may cost a bit more than the footwear now issued, but pensions to soldiers invalided home because of rheumatism and frostbite will soon make up a far greater total. Why not long boots? The Globe.

The Meaning and the Merit of Various National Hymns and Songs

R. F. Sanford of Atlantic City, writes to the New York Times that the "Watch on the Rhine" is classical but that "Tipperary" is trash.

Mr. Sanford is comparing two things that are not in the same class. "Tipperary" is a popular song that happened to hit the public fancy during the war and was taken up by the soldiers in France. It was not written for patriotic purposes, or to express any national idea. The "Watch on the Rhine" is the German national hymn. We are not prepared to deny that it is good music, and the title would suggest that the words are not bad either. It suggests the defence of the German fatherland. Nobody dreamed of attacking the German fatherland. Germans defending their fatherland from invasion would have had the sympathy of the world.

But Germans singing "The Watch on the Rhine" in Belgium must have found themselves in a curious position. A Prussian soldier, ordered by the Prussian aristocracy, to defile a Belgian home with physical and moral filth, must have felt like a hypocrite as he sang "The Watch on the Rhine." There may be national hypocrites as there are religious hypocrites. There may be political tyrants who would abuse a flag as religious tyrants would abuse the symbol of atoning grace."

With the old Germany the Germany of music and philosophy and domestic affection and thrift, the world was in sympathy. Against the new Germany, which Bismarck and the Kaiser tried to create, Europe is in arms. "The Watch on the Rhine," is a German national hymn, is obsolete, out of date. It does not express the ideas of Bismarck and the Kaiser, of Bernhardi, and the German spies in the United States.

But on our own side, look at the "Marseillaise" hymn. There was a song for lovers of France and Liberty a song for the world to sing. Every man, woman and child in the British Empire, in France, in Russia, in Japan, in Italy, in Serbia, in Belgium, may sing that great hymn of liberty with a good conscience. Every lover of liberty in the United States may sing it as he sings the patriotic songs of the United States.

A century ago the "Marseillaise" hymn was a little ahead of the times. To-day it is just about abreast of the times. The British Empire that is allied with France today is a co-operative Empire. The humanitarian impulse of the French national hymn is the same as that which finds expression in the speeches of Lloyd George and the progressive legislation of the Asquith Government. So firm is our alliance that we do not care a fig which of the allies produces the best national hymn, the best cosmopolitan hymn, the best hymn for humanity and civilization. We are not worried by literary or musical vanities and cavalries. We stand together for a great cause.

Still there is something good and strong in "A Long Way to Tipperary." It may express our patience and our fortitude—our knowledge that the journey is long, coupled with our determination not to stop until the goal is attained. We are fighting for nationality in the true sense and for cosmopolitan in the true sense. As the ideal is high so must the journey be long, and beset with many difficulties and dangers as that of Christian in the "Pilgrim's Progress." There is a good omen in the union of the nation marching to the strains of the "Marseillaise" the song of ideals and the nations marching to the strains of "Tipperary," the song of endurance to the end of the long way.—Toronto Star.

Montreal—Grain shipments for the week ending Saturday were 728,014 bushels of wheat.

Milk For the Allies.

Chicago—The Borden's plant at Belvedere, Ill., is working at double normal capacity on a war order for 300,000 cans of condensed milk.

Copper Utensils at $1,000 Ton.

New York—Over $1,000 a ton is being paid by German government for copper utensils and material compared with recent price of $360 in London.

Streets Company.

Chicago—Streets Company, successors to Streets Western Stable Car Line Co., will incorporate in Illinois with $1,000,000 stock and $800,000 first 5's bond. Trust deed securing bonds provides a $50,000 annual sinking fund.

New York Bank Reserves.

New York—The actual condition of clearing house banks and trust companies for the past week shows that they hold $192,567,820 reserve in excess of legal requirements. This is an increase of $5,534,900 over the previous week.

Bank Must Co-operate.

In the flotation of a large British loan the cooperation of bankers outside of Wall Street will be necessary, says the Wall Street Journal. The difficulty of obtaining that cooperation has caused delay. Prominent bankers in the financial district frankly say they are disappointed over the attitude of bankers elsewhere towards a proposal meaning so much for American trade as that to supply Europe with the means of making payment for the things which it wants to purchase here. That the present difficulty will be overcome there is no doubt whatever. The bankers outside of Wall Street can be talked over, and possibly the proposition may be made somewhat more attractive than it was originally.

Market Shows Confidence.

The markets have given what is undoubtedly a remarkable demonstration of strength and faith in the future by disregarding entirely such items of bad news as have materialized during the past ten days, says Robert E. Kennerer Trust. These unfavorable factors were not of vital import, but they were quite sufficient to have, in other days, produced a decided effect on prices and it is indicative of present conditions that in this case there was not even a halt in the advance of prices. Another interesting and encouraging feature of the week was the exceptional ease with with the market absorbed all profit taking and other liquidation, proof beyond doubt of general public interest and confidence in the future of the securities markets.

NEW YORK, Aug. 24.—The market made a substantial recovery late afternoon with some of the leading industrials in the forefront of the advance. Many of them closed with net gains of from one to three points.

"Nothing Succeeds Like Circulation"

It is the circulation of The Examiner that gets it so many "Want" and "For Sale" advertisements—a circulation that gives the advertiser every confidence of producing quick results.

When you write a "Want", tell all the important facts. If you are advertising for help, tell just what is to be expected of the applicants. As a matter of fairness, those who seek employment should know all the principal facts regarding a position.

"For Sale" advertising in The Examiner will show the facility with which you can turn "used things" that are no longer needed, into money quickly.

BALL GAME FOR THE HALF HOLIDAY

Next Thursday being the last half holiday of the summer months, a baseball match is being arranged by local promoters between an All-star City League outfit and an all-star Inter-Catholic nine, to see how the two organizations really compare. There has been so little baseball weather for the past two weeks that the game should prove an attraction with the half holiday crowd.

It was the intention at first to allow the winners of both organization to meet and decide the baseball supremacy, but owing to the unavoidable postponement of the City League games, this is hardly possible, so the next best idea was adopted, viz., a game between picked teams from both outfits.

ONWARD TO BERLIN

Sung and composed by an old soldier.

The European war
The lust of one man,
The Kaiser is guilty,
Deny it who can.
See the human blood shed,
The work of one man,
The Kaiser is guilty
Deny it who can.

Chorus—

Onward Allied soldiers
Onward to Berlin,
While you fight for freedom
You are sure to win

Volunteer, volunteer,
Volunteer just now.
Mothers, wives and children
Are praying for you
The whole world is at war,
Neutrals now begin,
Join the Allied soldiers
Onward to Berlin

Chorus

Onward Allied soldiers,
Onward to Berlin
While you fight for freedom
You are sure to win.

See Belgium heroes,
See their noble king,
Fighting in the trenches,
Fighting against sin,
Neutrals you are guilty
If you don't begin,
Why not join the Allies,
Onward to Berlin

Chorus

Onward Allied soldiers,
Onward to Berlin
While you fight for freedom
You are sure to win.

See the German pirates,
See their sneaking way,
What will Uncle Sam do
Or what will he say
See the Arabic ship
Sunk by Germany,
And many passengers
All deep under sea

Chorus

Onward Allied soldiers,
Onward to Berlin
While you fight for freedom
You are sure to win

See the human blood shed,
The lust of one man,
Neutrals up and at him,
Do whate'er you can
One year of war is past,
The Allies will win,
Italy has declared war,
Onward to Berlin

Chorus

Onward Allied soldiers,
Onward to Berlin
While you fight for freedom
You are sure to win

FREEDOM OF GROUNDS FOR SOLDIERS

Toronto, Aug. 24.—The Executive Board of the Exhibition has decided to extend the freedom of the grounds to all overseas men who visit Toronto during the two weeks of the Exhibition. Their camp passes will entitle them to admission both at the entrance gates and to the grand stand. Dr. Orr announced.

Milk is used in mixing the various rations used in fattening, and is considered an essential ingredient both in this country and in Europe.

An Incident of Independence Day

By EUNICE BLAKE

Alice MacGregor was an American girl with Scotch ancestry. How many suitors there were for Miss MacGregor's hand only Miss MacGregor knew, for she never spoke of her offers to any one. Certain it is that there were two whose attentions were so marked as to be especially noticeable. These were John Kershaw, an Englishman, who had recently come to America, and Michael O'Connor.

Miss MacGregor, being a bit of a coquette—what girl is not?—may have accepted the attentions of one of these men as a foil for the other, but if this were true it was impossible for any one to tell which was the foil and which the man foiled. There were those who declared that the lady listened to both these suitors for the purpose of worrying them.

A crisis came in this triangular love affair on the Fourth of July. Mr. O'Connor wrote Miss MacGregor a note inviting her to accept a seat in a window above the store where he was employed to witness the Fourth of July parade. Miss MacGregor replied that she had already made a partial engagement for the day. She was not sure, she would know by the evening before the Fourth and would advise him. She had already received an invitation from Mr. Kershaw to the same effect and had written him the same answer she had sent O'Connor.

Now, each of the rivals knew very well that the partial engagement mentioned referred to the other. Mr. Kershaw, on the afternoon before Independence day, called on Miss MacGregor for a more definite reply to his invitation. She received him kindly, but declared that she did not think it would be appropriate for an American girl, especially one of Scotch descent, to celebrate Independence day with an Englishman. There had been a hereditary feud between the English and Scotch races until the crowns were united in one king, and there had been a long fight between the English and Americans. Why should she, a MacGregor born in America, celebrate the Fourth of July with an Englishman?

"But all that has passed and gone," protested Kershaw, failing to detect that the young lady was chaffing him.

"It's the impropriety of the thing," she persisted.

Mr. Kershaw left her without having secured a consent, and later Mr. O'Connor called.

"I don't think, Mr. O'Connor," said Miss MacGregor, "that it would be in order for me to view the Fourth of July procession in your company."

"Why not?" asked the young man, astonished.

"Because the day celebrates the winning of American independence from Great Britain."

"But I'm Irish not British at all."

"Ireland was a part of the mother country that oppressed the colonies. Besides, I had a great greatuncle who fought under the Scotch-Irish banner at the battle of the Boyne. Your ancestors were on the other side."

"Hang my ancestors! What do I care for a fight that occurred more than two centuries ago?"

"Nevertheless, the Fourth of July is a day that is, or should be, near to the heart of every American. It would be hurtful to my feelings to celebrate it in company with one whose ancestors were on the other side in the fight for independence."

"But we're all of the same blood—English Scotch Irish and Americans."

"Family feuds are the most bitter."

Mr. O'Connor was obliged to depart with no more comfort than his rivals had received.

During the evening Miss MacGregor called up each of the rivals by telephone and told him that she would occupy a seat on the stand from which the parade would be reviewed by the governor and she would be happy to see him there. She regretted that for the reasons given it was not appropriate that she should accept his kind invitation, but a lot of a that would be in order.

At first each of the gentlemen was so disgruntled at this disposition of his invitation that he vowed he would not go near the reviewing stand. But curiosity got the better of both. Miss MacGregor would undoubtedly have an escort. Who would that escort be? Not only curiosity, but rivalry, turned the scale.

Independence day opened bright, and in accordance with [illegible] gathered in the sunlight. Both of the suitors took positions where they could look upon the reviewing stand, and as soon as they saw Miss MacGregor take her seat they started simultaneously from different points to go to speak to her, reaching her at the same time. Beside her sat a gentleman with black hair and eyes, who, seeing the others approach to speak with Miss MacGregor, arose and lifted his hat with extreme politeness.

"Permit me to introduce to you, gentlemen," said the lady, "Mr. Marivand. Mr. Marivand is a descendant of the Marquis de Lafayette, who came over from France during our struggle for independence with an army to help us and rendered us valuable assistance."

Mr. Marivand bowed very low. In Miss MacGregor's eye was a sparkle which the Irishman perceived, but to which the Englishman was obtuse. However, both the visiting gentlemen, after a few remarks upon the beautiful day, withdrew, leaving the field to the descendant of Lafayette.

Miss MacGregor has not yet settled upon a husband.

The Hypocrite a Genius.

Really to be a hypocrite must require a horrible strength of character. An ordinary man such as you or I generally fails at last because he has not enough energy to be a man. But the hypocrite must have enough energy to be two men. It is said that a liar should have a good memory. But a hypocrite must have not only a good memory of the past, but a consistent and creative vision of the future. His unreal self must be so far real to him. The perfect hypocrite should be a trinity of artistic talent. He must be a novelist like Dickens to create a false character, he must be an actor like Garrick to act it, and he must be a business man like Carnegie to profit by it. Such a genius would not be easy to find in any country.—G. K. Chesterton.

Waves in a Storm at Sea.

An authority says the height of the waves in a storm at sea rarely exceed twelve feet and in very bad disturbances on the high sea they reach a height of fifty. Their length is never over 600 feet. In the southern parts of the Pacific waves forty-three feet in height have been measured, in the southern parts of the Atlantic thirty-nine feet, and in the Mediterranean twelve feet. At places where the waves strike at an object, such as a lighthouse, they rise, of course, much higher—from 100 to 200 feet. On the open sea, however, they never rise over fifty feet.

So Different.

A little New York boy, the son of a young society woman, was sometimes taken for walks alone with his devoted mother. One day the little chap, bored a little on one of these dignified promenades and comparing them no doubt with those he took in company with his nurse, said thoughtfully:

"Mother, I don't think you can be quite as pretty as nurse."

"Why, dear?" the mother asked.

"Cos not a single chauffeur has spoken to you or played with me since we started out," the child answered.

So Windy They Couldn't Fly.

Two old Scotsmen were one day disputing as to who remembered the windier day.

"I mind it bein' sic a win'," said one, "that it took the craws three oors to flee hame frae the dominie's field, an' that's no mair than a mile."

"Hoot, mon!" the other replied, "I've seen it that windy that the craws had to walk hame."

Well Posted.

"Excuse me, ma'am," said the book canvasser to the lady who had opened the door in answer to his ring, "but if you have a few moments to spare I'd like to show you the great work on the 'Habits of Savage Animals.'"

"No use wasting your time, young man," replied the lady. "I've been married three times and know all about their habits."

Richter and His Pets.

Jean Paul Richter surrounded himself with pets as though they were the necessaries of life. A favorite poodle accompanied him in all his journeyings and must not be excluded from any house where he entered. "Love me, love my dog." His birds hopped over the page on which he was writing, he waiting the while with suspended pen and continuing patience until they should pass. A tame squirrel sat upon his shoulder in his walks about town, and once, at the christening of a friend's child, where Jean Paul was to stand godfather, having forgotten to leave the creature behind, he was obliged to put it in his pocket and with difficulty prevented its escape with his left, while with his right hand and arm he held the babe.

Voice of The People

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Sir:—A recruiting campaign is necessary among the ladies of our city. The letter in last night's Examiner about what is going on on Rogers St. is only one instance for there is at least another lady in East City who has made herself conspicuous as a poor sport. Two single ladies belonging to the same society put themselves on record within the last few weeks as utterly opposed not to the war, oh dear no, but to our young men taking their part. Do these ladies seriously realize that we are only free from battle, murder and rape by the heroic fathers, brothers and sons who are manning our ships and trenches just as dear to their wives, mothers and sisters, as are these men who they are persuading not to enlist. Have they no feeling toward their sisters in the faith, thousands of whom have suffered in France and Belgium, and thousands more are in fear and trembling lest they share the same fate? Have they no sympathy toward those who may be their relatives in the British this world-wide war will most surely be treated not to an abstract chant of hate, which hurts only themselves but meted out to France and Belgium it not worse, if it is possible to imagine anything worse and nearly every week we have prove of more and more violation of international treaties as to the usages of war, as witness the murder of the passengers on the Arabic, and the murder of British sailors on the Danish coast.

How are the horrors kept from our fair shores? By the soldiers and sailors of the King.

With 150,000 men at the front or in training, another 50,000 at least is urgently needed. Canada has about eight millions of population, two millions of whom were born in other countries. 80 per cent. should be native-born. What do we find? Exactly the reverse, eighty per cent. are new-comers and twenty per cent. native-born. Parents in this city have given in some cases their only son, others father and son, and so on. Some families with from two to four sons have turned a deaf ear to the call to arms. The same state of affairs applies to the Red Cross work. The active workers are the noble and experienced ladies, who are the backbone of the regular mission and charitable societies of our city, but there are scores of women and girls having leisure, who have never attended a Red Cross meeting, never contributed a cent for material, never turned a stitch for our brave men who day by day are being killed and wounded for their sakes. What is the cry of the boys from the front in both contingents. Help [illegible] come over! we need you.

In one of the pulpits of our city on Sunday a visiting clergyman spoke earnestly of the necessity of the men and women standing bravely together in prayer and work as never before. The fact that Sir Wilfred Laurier and Sir George Foster are addressing recruiting meetings on the same platform speaks volumes as to the urgency of more men being wanted. May God grant that the urgency is not brought home to us all in Canada as in Europe. It will not be if we "Quit us like men, and be strong."

Yours truly,
Citizen.

Editor Examiner:

"There is something in the English after all."

However much we may claim for the patriotism of the native-born Canadian, and very properly so, there is no getting over the fact that when it comes to the crucial test he is not in it with the Englishman. We see that exemplified in the present great war struggle for supremacy. Commendable as has been the recruiting among the native-born Canadians in some districts, in others there has been a woful lack of enthusiasm and spontaneous recruiting, as compared with the Englishmen who have recently come to our shores, in all quarters. There is also a noticeable contrast in the readiness with which the Englishwomen give their consent to the men enlisting, even in cases of the most exceptional character, that must be obvious to all observers amongst us.

Let me mention one out of many cases by way of illustration. Mr. and Mrs. James Foster of 634 Union St., in this city, have made many sacrifices on behalf of the Empire's war, and have supplied their quota to the fighting strength of the British army by the following list of their relatives who have recruited, namely:

(1) Son James Foster, married, and has four children. He is at the front in the fighting line. He served 12 years in India.

(2) Son William Foster married and has four children. He is at the front in the fighting line. He served all through the South African war.

(3) Son John Foster now recruiting at Barrichefd.

(4) Son-in-law, Cornelius Oxford has two children, and is now recruiting at Barrichefd.

(5) Son-in-law, Frederick Hall served in the English navy now in training at Barrichefd, together with about forty nephews engaged in some branch of the war.

Yours truly,
Canadian.

FOREST FIRES IN THE WEST

Special to The Examiner.

VANCOUVER, Aug. 24.—While officials of the Forestry Department who are fighting bush fires in the neighbourhood of Vancouver, declare the situation is desperate the total damage since Saturday has been inside of ten thousand dollars. Coast mariners are having a difficult time in keeping schedule and the fog horns around the harbour are blowing incessantly. So thick is the pall of smoke that a city block is now the limit of vision, especially in the down town section.

Fire is threatening White Rock and several other villages.

M'CRACKEN'S LANDING FIRST ANNUAL REGATTA

Held Under Most Favourable Conditions—Weather Perfect and Events Keenly Contested

DISTRIBUTION OF PRIZES

The first annual regatta at McCracken's Landing was held Monday afternoon under most favourable conditions. The weather was all that could be desired, and a large and enthusiastic crowd manifested great interest in the seventeen events, which were run off with dispatch by the following officers: Judge, Mr. J. W. Wilson; starter, Ex-Controller McLean; timekeeper, Mr. Smith; records, Mr. Samuel R. Hall.

The government wharf and shore were lined with a fair concourse of holiday makers, there from the lake drive, from their "tin creams," and the cottages "down in front" Sunday best.

Everything went off in fine style from the time of the first gun to the singing of the National Anthem.

The opening sailing race was an easy win for Mr. Oxley. The wind was very light during the three laps.

The motor boat race, open to pointers, but for which Carl seems to have a "corner" on the first prize wherever he goes.

Another race which aroused a great deal of interest was the motor boat race, out to buoy, at anchor, starting the boats with the engines were stopped, turned up and run at full speed towards Lake Monaghan at the head of it, then they turned and made for the starting point. A fast boat would thus have further to travel on the return trip. Speed was a much less quantity on the trip, came in the "navy" and form.

The prizes, which had been on view on an extension table in front of Mr. Choate's store, were distributed by the Hon. Lawrence and Mr. Graham at the finish of the regatta, and the proceedings were brought to a close by the singing of "God Save the King."

The following is a complete list of the events, prize and their winners:

Open Sailing—Presented by Mr. Oxley in the "Cora," 2 pennant, "Canada," Mr. J. S. Knapman, in the "Cygnet."

Men's Single Canoe—1 paddle, Mr. Clive Hooper, 2, pennant, Mr. Harry Bowett.

Ladies' Single Skiff—1, Oxo cheese, Miss Hazel Rogers; 2, bread, Miss Irene Knapman.

Men's Single Skiff—Umbrella, Mr. Harold Wilson; 2, tin can, Mr. Gordon North.

Tandem Swimming Race—Boxes of chocolate to 1, Master H. Dwyer, 2, D. Dwyer and Redgath.

Mixed Tandem Canoe—1, paddle and butter knife, Mr. Clive Hooper and Miss Vera Steck; 2, two candlesticks, Miss Emma Austin and Mr. Stanley Hagerman.

Crab Races (Two)—1, boxes of chocolates, Mr. John Carlisle and Mr. Harry Blewett; 2, pennants, Mr. C. Selkirk and M. Johnson.

Ladies' Swimming—1, brass tray, Mrs. Frances Austin; 2, nut bowl, Miss Margery Austin.

Men's Swimming—1, silver breadtray, Mr. G. Douglas Carlisle; 2, pennant, Mr. Robert Neill, Jr.

Tug of War—Four leather pocket books, Messrs. Hilliard Willoughby, Harry Blewett, G. Douglas Carlisle and Dr. George Zimmerman.

Ladies' Tandem Skiff—1, china tea pot and cream pitcher, Miss Vera Steck; china sugar bowl, Miss Irene Knapman; 2, pennants, the Misses Stewart.

Married Men's Single Skiff—1, silver knife and fork, half dozen, Prof. Jean Stewart; 2, salad bowl, Mr. J. S. Knapman.

Children's Tandem Skiff (under 12)—1, jam, Miss Ruth Knapman and Miss Thelma Darling; 2, jam, Miss Vereen and Master Davis McCarthy.

Motor Boat, Race and Go Back 1, lantern, Mr. Harry Fitzgerald; 2, pennant, Mr. W. Blewett.

Lady's Single Canoe—1, biscuit jar, Miss Irene Knapman; 2, box chocolates, Miss Griffith.

Boys' Swimming Race, under sixteen—1, box chocolates, Mr. Donald Fitzgerald; 2, pocket knife, Mr. J. Dutton; 3, baseball, Mr. H. Johnson.

McCracken's Regatta Regrets.

Dr. George Zimmerman should practice swimming his knees under the deck of a canoe.

After winning the ladies' single canoe race, Miss Irene Knapman gave an exhibition of the latest method of doing the "slippy dip."

The next time Messrs. Russell, Patterson and Hooper participate in a race they will clean them bathing out.

Mr. Harry Fitzgerald paddled up for the lantern the Hon. Lawrence Graham almost had him to let him light a chime before men, etc.

Mr. Choate may have a pull with the weather man.

Dunmer shore was well represented—Horan for Dunmer.

McCracken Landing Association have their eyes on Bonaire Civic Holiday next year, which will mean one week ahead of Dunmer.

Von Bernstorff Gave $5,000

But Asked That His Contribution Be Not Made Public

Special to The Examiner:

New York, August 24.—The World published the facsimile of a cheque and letter from the German Ambassador, Von Bernstorff, sent to Marcus Braun, editor of Fair Play, now in Europe on a "secret mission." Fair Play is frankly pro-German, and is said to have 20,000 circulation. Von Bernstorff helped to the extent of $5,000 and said in his letter that the paper "has been living up to its name, and that it has always taken the American point of view. During the last seven months 'Fair Play' has, in its editorial policy, treated all belligerents justly and thereby rendered great service to the millions of foreign born citizens of this country, especially to those of German and Austro-Hungarian origin. 'Fair Play' has fought for the rights of the latter and for truth, always maintaining an American attitude, and showing true American spirit.

"You are at liberty to show this letter to anybody who is interested in the matter, but I beg you not to publish it, as this would be contrary to the instructions of my government, who do not wish me to publicly advertise any views or newspapers."

Evangelist G. M. Sharpe who will speak at the Big Tabernacle TO-NIGHT, on Hunter Street at 8 o'clock. Hear Him!

FOURTEEN SOLDIERS REPORTED DEAD

Special to The Examiner:

Galveston, Texas, Aug. 24.—With bread and other supplies reaching Galveston from the neighboring cities, the water again turned into the mains from a reservoir on the mainland, resumption of telegraphic service, and a promise that train service soon would be resumed, the feeling here tonight was decidedly optimistic. It is agreed generally that the storm was more severe and of longer duration than that of 1900.

The death list was increased today by reports from along the coast, and the missing list decreased considerably. The latest reports put the number of known dead at 176, of whom 14 were in Galveston, and the missing at 156.

The death list probably will be increased by a dozen, or more when the ruins of the Virginia Point Hotel are cleared. Twenty persons believed to have been caught in the collapse are still reported to be missing.

Nine bodies were picked up yesterday on a dike near Texas City, and the crew of the tender Rosam, which found them, said that 20 more lay on the dike.

Fourteen United States soldiers are reported to have been lost at Texas City.

Gun Crew Fired One Hundred Rounds in Twelve Minutes Writes Gunner A. Dorris

Execution Was Terrific—Air Around German Trenches Was Filled With Sand-bags, Pieces of Clothing and Machine Guns—Losses Among the Peterboro' Men—Interesting Letter From Peterboro' Boy.

"We are kept pretty busy," writes Gunner A. Dorris of the Peterborough detachment, 4th Battery, 1st Brigade, 1st Canadian Contingent, in a letter to his brother, Mr. Albert Dorris, 291 1-2 Lewis street. Continuing, Gunner Dorris says: "I am going to ask you to stop sending me the daily papers regularly. I am not getting one half of what you are sending. I love to see the home papers, but I hate to know that some light-fingered sap head is pinching them, before they even get to the Battery. I read in the Daily Examiner of July 14th about the two guns we put in the first line of trenches. Well, Bert, we sure took some chance that time. The Examiner also mentioned our two lieutenants, Craig and Kelly. The former was in charge of the gun I was on. When we opened fire on the enemy's trenches our gun crew consisted of five gunners, a sergeant, and Lieut. Craig. The same number on the other gun, with Lieut. Kelly and Sergt. McDonzal. We fired one hundred rounds in twelve minutes. Believe me we were going some. The Huns were only seventy-five yards from the two guns when we opened fire. You can guess from this what really happened. The air around the German trenches was filled with sand bags, pieces of clothing and machine guns. We opened a gap for our infantry so that they were able to take three trenches with a loss of only — men. The infantry had a fine view of the execution accomplished by our guns.

GUNNER A. DORRIS

Died of Wounds.

Out of the twelve men comprising the gun crews, seven were from Peterborough. They consisted of five gunners, Corp. M. T. King, who subsequently died of wounds received in the engagement referred to, and Sergt. McDonzal. These two non-commissioned officers were pals of "Dicky" Boone's chums. It was some battle. We were obliged to crawl over dead bodies in order to get back to our other two guns. That is something we do not like, but it has to be done, and we are the boys who can do it. The Germans started to bombard our position a few minutes after we started to fire the one hundred rounds. They kept it up for about six or seven hours. I thought I was back at the big battle of Ypres. The shell fire was so dangerous as to render it impossible to reach our other two guns at the rear of the two forward guns except by means of the communication trenches. The dead were strewn along these trenches. We were proceeding down one trench in single file. I was in the lead and Archie McBride who is from Peterborough, was killed behind me. It was very dark and I stepped on a body. I turned around to Archie and said here is one more ——. I stooped over and asked him if he was badly wounded. I got no answer so I took off his cap and found that his head had been blown completely off. Some one had placed the cap over the wound.

Feeling Fine.

After coming through this safely I think we will last out awhile yet. A few days later I was asked to go up and put two crosses at the heads of the graves of our brave gunners. We got up there without much trouble and sunk them firmly in the ground. On our return we came under heavy shell fire. We both got back safe once more. As for myself I feel just as strong and fit for active service as I ever did. If anything I feel better. Both officers and men of our battery have been particularly free from "bad nerves," which is usually the result of too much active service. I have learned since that Lieut. Craig has been awarded the Military Cross for his splendid work in connection with the above. His home is in Cobourg. He was in charge of us when we left Cobourg one year ago."

MRS. BARCLAY IS SPARED JAIL TERM

Examiner Special:

NEW YORK, Aug. 24.—The fortune of Mrs. Maud Bryant, which was once estimated to be worth more than $2,500,000, is now entirely gone, and it was necessary for her husband, Wright Barclay, to come to her rescue with the payment of a fine of $250 to keep her out of jail for contempt of court. That was the statement made by Norman W. Kernwood, Mrs. Barclay's attorney. Mr. Kernwood said that from a life of luxury and ease Mrs. Barclay is now reduced to poverty, and with all her fortune gone, is dependent upon her husband for support. He tersely denied reports which intimated that Mr. Barclay had anything to do with the management of his wife's financial affairs or that he was in any way responsible for the financial difficulties in which she is now placed.

Another judgment for $45,500 has been obtained against Mrs. Barclay by the Corn Exchange Bank, it said.

Mr. Barclay's personal debts amount to less than $1,500," he said. "Her own obligations in connection with the estate which she inherited are more than $200,000. One item of this indebtedness alone amounts to $100,000, which she owes to her aunt, Mrs. Sarah A. Brevoort."

At the time of the death of her first husband, Augustus Browning Prentice, the affairs of the estate were placed in the hands of an old employee of Augustus Prentice, her husband's father, Mr. Kernwood said.

The estate continued under the same management until it was finally thrown into the courts and a receiver named," he continued. "The persons who took charge of it did not understand the management of an estate of such size and the property became involved in the courts. Many unprofitable and unbusinesslike transactions were entered into and parcel after parcel of the property was swept away from Mrs. Barclay. Money was borrowed at tremendous rates of interest, bearing from fifteen to twenty per cent. a year were considered low rates.

"A few weeks ago Mrs. Barclay came to me and asked me to go on her behalf in an effort to retain a few of her properties. At that time however, certain creditors demanded cash settlements or large reductions on the amount of mortgages which they held. It was impossible for her to meet the demands, as it was impossible to borrow any money except upon revised, conservative estimates of valuation.

The Tottenville National Bank then instituted bankruptcy proceedings and Mrs. Barclay was declared a bankrupt. Miss Bertha Kenbaugh was named as receiver. In the meantime Mr. Barclay had gone as far as it was possible for him to go in settling his wife's debts.

WOMAN SPY MUST DIE

Special to The Examiner:

Sentence of death for espionage has been pronounced upon Sinaida Bayer, a Russian woman who has been living in the little town of Reichenberg, since May, 1914. Her two sisters, Elizabeth Bayer and Marie Polakow, accused of spying, have been released for lack of evidence.

The three women moved to Reichenberg in May, and astonished those whom they met by declaring that war was impending between Russia and Austria. They maintained themselves apparently by sewing and seamstress work. After their arrest, however, there was found a quantity of postal money order stubs which indicated they had received funds from other sources.

With the beginning of war the captured Russians were imprisoned in a camp at Rosenthal, not far from Reichenberg, and the sisters aroused suspicion by secret communications with the captive soldiers. One of them from unknown motives notified the Austrian officers, and the woman's arrest followed immediately.

Their trial, which has just been completed in Theresienstadt resulted in the conviction of Sinaida Bayer and her condemnation to death by hanging.

Charged With Attempted Suicide

Young Woman Seeks to End Her Life—Was Despondent

Special to The Examiner:

ROCHESTER, Aug. 24.—"Don't you think that this world is worth living in after all?" asked Judge Gillette, when Miss May Seamon, 28 years old, who was charged with attempted suicide, was arraigned in the police court.

The young woman murmured that she did and said that she would not make another attempt to end her life. She was discharged from the Homoepathic Hospital, where she had been taken for treatment after swallowing carbolic acid. She was said to have become despondent after a quarrel with a friend and was drinking the acid when another roomer dashed the bottle to the floor.

The charge of attempted suicide which had been placed against her at the time of her arrest by Patrolman Strogen, was dismissed.

SERBIA HAS YIELDED REGARDING ALBANIA

Special to The Examiner:

MILAN, Italy, Aug. 24.—One of the main difficulties in the way of a solution of the Balkan problem favourable to the Entente allies has been settled, according to an interview with Premier Pachitch of Serbia in the Corriere Della Serra. The Premier is quoted as saying that Serbia has given way to Italy regarding Albania.

Premier Pachitch, according to the newspaper, went over several phases of the present situation, as well as declaring that Austria had tried several times since the beginning of the war to conclude a separate peace with Serbia, but had met with a refusal from the Serbian Government.

The inaction of the Serbian army the Premier said, was due to sanitary conditions, necessity for reorganization, and the accumulation of war supplies. When the moment comes, he declared, the Serbian army will fight steadfastly and in accord with the armies of Serbia's allies throughout the principal Balkan peoples.

Serbia has been endeavouring ever since the beginning of the war to reach an agreement with Bulgaria, and is trying to do so now, the Premier said, on a basis conserving the vital interests of both countries. So far as concerns Albania, the Premier is quoted as declaring, Serbia bows to the decision of Europe and wishes a friendly solution of the Adriatic question with Italy, acknowledging the predominant position of Italy in that field.

An agreement has just been reached, the Premier added, for Serbia to send to Italy Austrian prisoners of Italian nationality in exchange for prisoners of Slavic nationality taken from Austria by Italy.

GRAPHIC DESCRIPTION OF THE STORM THAT SWEPT OVER SOUTH

Mr. W. G. Cochrane Writes From Houston and Tells of Last Week's Hurricane---Beach at Galveston Was Swept Clean

The following letter, received by a member of the Examiner staff from Mr. W. G. Cochrane, the Peterborough boy who recently was transferred to Houston, Texas, will be of great interest:

"You have undoubtedly received accounts over the wires of the terrible hurricane that we have just passed through down here, but I thought that the experiences of an old Peterborough boy would interest you. This is the first experience of a hurricane that I have ever had, and I sincerely hope that it will be the last.

"I had spent Sunday at the Hotel Galvez in Galveston from where I sent you and Jack to Peterborough per motor-car Sunday night. I hope that they got there safely. After communication stopped I, in company with Mr. Sapp, our Texas State manager, I had been along the beach Sunday evening, and about 9 o'clock in for a swim at Murdoch's bath house, but the sea was running too high, and they would not rent bathing suits. The beach was crowded, however, and at night it is a regular Atlantic city in miniature, at least it was until Monday night. Now it is a heap of debris.

Sunday night I had my first sleep since coming down here without rain playing on me, and woke up Monday morning early and went for a walk along the sea wall before breakfast. The wind had increased and the sea was running very high, but had not struck the sea wall up to that time and the big bath houses seemed to be able to stand anything that might occur. After breakfast Mr. Sapp and I went down town to call on our wholesale customers, and were surprised to find that most of them had closed their places of business, and that in others the families were all down in the offices.

The weather bureau had sent out warnings that a West India hurricane was approaching the mainland, and would probably strike in the vicinity of Galveston shortly after noon. With the memory of the terrible catastrophe of 1900, when 10,000 people lost their lives, the people of Galveston were scared, and were seeking places of safety. It being impossible to see any of the trade under favorable circumstances I decided to take the first interurban car back to Houston and was successful in getting one at 12 o'clock. There were three cars to our train, and every inch of space was filled, and there were thousands who could not get on. Galveston, being on an island, it is necessary to cross a concrete causeway about a mile long to reach the mainland, and as the storm had commenced by the time we left the interurban depot, and was blowing about fifty miles an hour and raining hard we were quite relieved when we got safely across. I think we were the second last, if not the last, to leave the city, as Mr. Sapp intended leaving on the 1 o'clock car, but up to the present he has not reached Houston.

Monday afternoon and evening here was very stormy, increasing as the night advanced, but the people in the apartment where I am living sat around the halls and played cards under two gas jets, as our electric lights were gone by this time. I went to bed about eleven o'clock and before doing so moved my bed back from the windows as the wind strain on them at that time I could feel to be very heavy. I slept until about 3 o'clock, when I was awakened by the sound of falling glass in the street below me. I found every one up in the house, and out of the wind was shrieking. Many of the windows in our apartment had already gone, and the people had fled for shelter to the halls. For the next three hours we stood around there while windows crashed all around us, chimneys fell into the street and telegraph and telephone poles snapped on all sides. From that until daybreak the wind blew a hurricane and we did not know at what minute the roof would leave the building. Monday began to break although the wind was still blowing hard and the rain was still coming down in sheets we were able to see something of the destruction around us. The streets were covered with debris, glass, slate, bricks from chimneys and parts of roofs. Signs were down all along the street and wreckage was everywhere. About six o'clock some of us decided to get out and secure some coffee for the brave women and children in the house who had never made a whimper through the awful night. On our way to the nearest cafe which was open, we saw some weird sights. At one corner there were two automobiles piled up on the pavement and completely smashed. At other places parts of roofs had been blown clean through plate glass windows. On the next street there is a very fine furniture store with big plate glass windows. Every window was gone, and the furniture, rugs, etc., were blown all over the street. It is a custom all through the South to build coverings over the pavements in front of the stores and there was scarcely one of these left. They were in the streets and there was not a window whole on either side of the street for blocks.

Every one agreed that it was the worst hurricane the city had ever experienced but all thoughts were for Galveston with its low streets and many felt heading against it, but no word could be secured from that point. The wires had gone late Monday night. Automobiles started out to reach the city which is only fifty miles away, but every one of them had to turn back. All day Tuesday the wildest rumours were all at about the situation there, but no intelligence could be received. It was not until late yesterday (Wednesday afternoon) that we learned that the sea wall had protected the city, and that there had been practically no loss of life, although the beach had been swept almost bare, the big bath houses gone completely, and the beach front with the exception of the Hotel Galvez, a thing of the past.

Yesterday afternoon one of my friends in this town took me for a run in his automobile through the residential districts where I saw houses lifted from their foundations and toppled on their sides, immense trees uprooted, and destruction everywhere. The most remarkable thing about it is that apparently in this city of over 200,000, with all the destruction not one life was lost. The same applies almost to Galveston, but at some of the shore points near here, particularly at Texas City, quite a number were killed through a building collapsing. The property loss however, has been enormous, and it will take months to clear away the debris and get things back to normal. I am sending you a copy of this morning's Post which is a very reliable paper, and which gives an account of how they got on the night at Galveston. Down in there, however, was not so bad as it was here as the barometer went to 28.25 in Houston, the third lowest in history anywhere in the world, so far as records go, while in Galveston the lowest was 28.66.

They say these storms only come every fifteen years and I hope they are right as I do not want to see another, but outside of such happenings and the terrible heat this is a wonderful country and I like it immensely. I wish there were some Peterborough boys down here, however glad that the papers here occasionally printed some Canadian news.

THE BELGIAN LAUNCH ON STONEY LAKE

(By A Camper)

"Are you willing to help the Belgian babies? If so, buy from the Belgian Launch on Friday, Aug. 30. It will call at your wharf." So ran the wording of a notice posted up last week in various conspicuous parts of Stoney Lake.

The Belgian Baby Fund is a movement which was begun in Toronto some months ago with the object of collecting money to buy condensed milk for starving Belgian children. Some Toronto ladies who have cottage in Stoney Lake thought it a good idea to have a sale of fancy articles at the lake during the summer, and to donate the proceeds to this Fund, and from this idea was evolved "The Belgian Launch."

From the beginning of July a club of some seven or eight little girls met weekly, and worked industriously, and, as a result of their efforts, a large variety of fancy articles of all descriptions was produced. These articles included a number of pretty raffia baskets of assorted shapes and sizes, some thirty or more knitting-needle holders, and knitting bags, many beautiful hand-painted blotters, scratch-pads and paper-dolls, birch-bark boxes of maiden hair ferns and numerous pretty articles in bead-work crochet, embroidery and cretonne, and baby-jackets, mob-caps, cushion-covers, needle-books and pin-cushions galore.

On Friday the Belgian launch set forth on its travels, gaily decorated in the Belgian colours, and with a dear little Belgian girl in costume as a figurehead, who carried a money-box for "coppers".

All day the launch scoured the lake calling at every "likely looking" cottage and hotel, and everywhere meeting with a most kindly and generous reception. The "Belgian Baby" in the bow attracted much attention, and more than one customer was heard to whisper "Is it really a Belgian child?" The little figurehead's money box rapidly became heavy, as larger coins than "coppers" were dropped into it, and the girls on board found their trays of pretty wares quickly becoming empty. They were almost "sold out" by 9 p.m., when darkness compelled a reluctant but triumphant return to headquarters, bearing the goodly sum of over $55, which will be handed over to the Fund. Let us hope it will be the means of saving the life of many a Belgian baby.

The young ladies who took part in the scheme were the Misses Grier, Mackenzie, Stewart and Stuart, and the launch was the supply boat owned by Messrs. Eric and Crawford Grier, and kindly loaned by them for the occasion.

NEW CLASSES FOR CONTINUATION SCHOOL

His Lordship Bishop O'Brien addressed the congregations at the two masses at St. Peter's Cathedral Sunday, and in referring to the annual school opening made the important announcement that the next scholastic term would witness the addition of two new classes to St. Peter's continuation school, viz., Normal Entrance and Junior Matriculation classes. This means that students attending the continuation class can proceed to matriculation, which is equivalent to entrance to any university, or can take their normal entrance examination, which entitles them to enter the Normal School.

His Lordship also referred to the excellent work done by the sisters of St. Joseph, in whose charge the school is placed. Last year was the first time St. Peter's continuation class students wrote on departmental examinations and twenty-five were successful in passing their junior normal which is truly an excellent record for any school and particularly so for a class which was writing on its first departmental examinations. Two new class rooms are also being added to the continuation class and accommodation will be made for 150 students.

CLOSING EXERCISES OF SUPERVISED PLAYGROUND

On Thursday afternoon, Aug. 26th, the closing exercises of the playgrounds will take place. The first effort in this direction has amply justified the faith which the Local Council of Women had in the movement. In spite of the excessive rain this summer the average attendance has been excellent, being 90 in the morning and 130 in the afternoon.

Further notice of the programme for Thursday will be given in the press. Automobiles will meet the children at different points to convey them to the grounds and it is hoped that as many of the mothers as is possible will be present.

The general public is also invited to be present to view the beginning of what is hoped will be a system of supervised play in Peterborough.

Breach of Promise Suit for $75,000

Special to The Examiner:

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 24 Charging that Robert S. Gaskill failed to keep a promise to marry her when she "grew up," 17 year-old Katheryn Abrams began suit for $75,000, in Atlantic City. Gaskill is 58 years old. He is a retired lawyer and lives in Mount Holly, N.J.

Gaskill first began courting her when she was 14 years old, according to Miss Abrams' affidavits, filed by her counsel, former District Attorney Clarence Goldenburg of Atlantic City. Gaskill's wife was living when the wooing began, the girl says, and for that reason the meetings between her and the lawyer were clandestine.

When Mrs. Gaskill died two years ago, the girl says, Gaskill promised to marry her when the "grew up." When the alleged promise was made the girl was 15 years old and was living at Red Lion, a suburb of Mount Holly.

THRILLING TALES OF ATTEMPTS TO ESCAPE

Examiner Special:

Twenty-seven Belgian, French and English officers still elect to remain prisoners on the Island of Urk, in the Zuyder Zee, rather than promise that they will not try to escape from Holland and return to their colours to fight. If they were willing to give their promise not to try to escape they would be allowed to roam anywhere in Holland, but the 27 on the Island of Urk prefer to remain prisoners openly avowing their intention to escape if possible. This makes the situation something of a game between the prisoners and their Dutch guards.

The Island of Urk is itself a sort of geographical joke, for it is little more than a small sandbank that was left high and dry when the sea drowned the central part of The Netherlands and formed the Zuyder Zee. Some 2,200 people, however, now live on this little stretch of land which the average pedestrian may cross in ten minutes. The islanders are extremely clannish and stick to the dress of 200 years ago. They amuse themselves by fishing for herring and anchovies and in building dykes against the terrors of the North sea in winter. The presence of the interned French, Belgian and English officers is regarded as a sort of sporting affair even among the Dutch guards. The commander describes the situation by saying: "We are excellent friends with our prisoners. We greatly respect the men who try to escape and return to their country to go on with the fight. Only it is our duty to keep them there."

Next to Commander Nyssen of the Belgian army, who was pulled accidentally across the Dutch frontier by his own men after he was rendered unconscious by seven bullet wounds, the most popular prisoner is an Irish major of the British flying corps, who actually made his escape from the island by swimming for some three hours and who would have succeeded in his flight but for the small mishap which landed his boat in a village which was under martial law.

Since this attempt, however, the island is more strongly guarded than before. The foreign officers are not allowed to speak to the people from the village. All foreign and Dutch yachts are carefully watched. A torpedo boat stationed in the little harbour is kept ready to pursue all future swimmers, and guards have been placed on the tower of the church to survey the whole island.

WOMAN DIED FROM INJURIES

Examiner Special:

ROCHESTER, Aug. 24.—Mrs. Hattie Hussey, aged 37, the second victim of the double shooting at 237 South Avenue last Monday morning, died early this morning at the Hahnemann Hospital. Coroner Thomas A. Killip, who was notified, ordered the body to be taken to the morgue.

The woman died from injuries received when shot early on Monday morning, by John Nodecker, aged 50, who later killed himself. For a time there were hopes of her recovery but late yesterday afternoon her condition became worse. She continued to sink and died at 1.20 o'clock this morning.

The woman was asleep early Monday morning in the same room with her six year old son Frank, Nodecker, insanely jealous, forced his way into the place and announced that he had come to kill her. The woman jumped from her bed, and the little son who was aroused from his slumber, pleaded with the infuriated man to spare his mother's life.

Disregarding the pleas of the child Nodecker fired several shots at her, and she dropped to the floor seriously injured. Then he sent a bullet crashing into his brain and dropped lifeless beside her.

BOY IS FOUND AFTER LONG SEARCH

Special to The Examiner:

FORT WORTH, Texas, Aug. 24.—A four year search through the United States and Canada for her eight-year-old son was ended here by Mrs. Julia Dell of Quebec, Canada, who identified the boy held by the authorities here since the arrest of Charles F. Cortell on March 5, as her son.

Cortell had been arrested on a charge of assault. He had been travelling around the country with the boy. Both told conflicting stories and were ordered held. Cortell, officials said, probably will be charged with abduction.

The boy recognized his mother immediately, although he was only four years old when he disappeared from home.

WERE REMANDED FOR SENTENCE

The case of two local men charged with breaking into Duffus' garage and stealing a quantity of gasoline, valued at twenty-five cents was heard this morning in the County Court before His Honour Judge Hoyles. Crown Attorney Hatton appeared for the Crown and Mr. G. N. Gordon for accused. Evidence as to the apprehension of the two men was given by Police Constables Wigg and Reed. No defence was offered. In summing up the evidence Mr. Gordon said that the circumstances of the case failed to reveal any intent to steal on the part of the accused. He asked that the charge be dismissed.

His Honour Judge Hoyles found the two men guilty and remanded them until Thursday at 10 o'clock for sentence. Bail was refused.

Healthy and properly managed fowls need no medicines and no stimulants. Doses of salt will correct, to some extent, errors of feeding. A very little common salt—say a teaspoonful to fifty—is beneficial; much is poison.

HORSE'S BITE PROVED FATAL

Examiner Special:

HAMILTON, Ont., Aug. 24.—Claude Back, a wealthy Ancaster farmer, died at the hospital as the result of being accidentally bitten by a horse a week ago. Back was hitching his horse up when it suddenly turned and snapped at a fly catching his finger instead. Blood poisoning developed.

That the artillery branch of the service appeals to native-born Canadians is evidenced by the fact that thirteen out of the last sixteen recruits for the 33rd Battery here were born in Canada. Of the artillery recruits accepted here so far 27 have been Canadian born, 17 born in the United Kingdom and 3 in Italy.

Another draft for the 33rd Battery may leave for Barriefield to-morrow. A draft of ten is desired and while over that number has been accepted since the last draft, a number are still on the hospital list and will not report until next week. Eight men are ready to go to-morrow, and it two more are accepted to-day, it is likely that the men will be sent to Barriefield. The draft will go down in charge of Lieut. Beresford Hamilton, who in all probability will be attached to the 33rd Battery, C.E.F.

The Peterborough boys who are taking the course at the Royal School of Artillery, are making good progress. One of the number, Acting Corporal John Herron, has been transferred to the 34th Battery, Canadian Field Artillery (C.E.F.) now at Barriefield, where he is to act as signalling instructor.

The other members hope to receive appointments to the 33rd or 34th Batteries in about a months time. All five Knapman, Dixon, Cavanah, Herron and Anderson are in the best of health, and join in saying, "Another life is the only one for us."

Dried chicory roots, says a report issued in Magdeburg, make an excellent substitute for oats for horses.

WEDDING BELLS

OBER—BARNES.

A most interesting and beautiful wedding took place at Stoney Lake on Monday evening, at 5 o'clock, when Miss Alma Lois Barnes, the only daughter of Dr. Barnes of Cleveland, O., became the bride of Mr. Dean S. Ober of the same city. The Rev. J. R. Webb, Pastor of Murray Street Baptist Church, Peterborough, was the officiating minister. Only the relatives of the bride and groom were present.

The ceremony took place in the rustic living room of Buckeye Lodge, the summer home of the bride's father, where the decorations were in keeping with the season and surroundings.

After a dainty supper had been served Mr. and Mrs. Ober left by motor boat for points on Kawartha Lakes. After spending a few days in this district they will leave by motor car for their future home in Cleveland. The deservedly popular bride carries with her the best wishes of a host of Canadian friends who summer at Stoney Lake.

Death Resulted From Accident

William Bullen Passed Away in St. Michael's Hospital Last Evening

Numerous Peterborough friends and acquaintances will be sorry to learn of the death of Mr. William Bullen, who passed away last night at St. Michael's Hospital, Toronto. One week ago deceased when struck by a street car suffered concussion of the brain. He was unconscious to the end. The accident occurred on Queen street, a short distance from Yonge street, after the late Mr. Bullen had alighted from a west-bound car. He evidently failed to notice the east-bound car which struck him as he attempted to cross the track behind the car he had left.

Deceased, who was thirty-three years old, was the second son of William Bullen, and was educated in this city. He held a position in the office staff of the T. F. Matthews packing plant and went to Toronto about fifteen years ago, where he took up the insurance and real estate business in which he was very successful.

Surviving are his widow and two children, Clara and Stuart, his father, who is now at Kingston, one brother Robert Bullen of Campbellford, and five sisters, Mrs. Geo. Valway, Agincourt, Mrs. H. J. McCannan, Mrs. C. E. Curtis, Miss Pearl Bullen of this city, and Miss Eva Bullen, nurse-in-training at Belleville General Hospital.

The funeral will be held at Toronto on Wednesday afternoon.

Operations at the Dardanelles Soon to Successfully End

BRITISH SUBMARINE SINKS FOUR TURKISH VESSELS CARRYING TROOPS

It Is Expected a Few Weeks Will See End of the Dardanelles' Operations Impossible For Turks to Hold Out

If Italy Lands Troops in Asia Minor Campaign Will Be Shortened---Two Turkish Divisions Sent to Gallipoli Suffer Heavy Losses.

HOSPITALS ARE OVERCROWDED WITH WOUNDED

Special Morning Cable:

LONDON, Aug. 24.—Optimistic reports are heard concerning Dardanelles operations. It is expected a few weeks will see the close of the operations. Turks admit the impossibility of holding out much longer, especially if Italy lands troops in Asia Minor.

HOSPITALS CROWDED WITH WOUNDED.

ATHENS, Aug. 24.—Hospitals in Constantinople are so crowded with wounded from recent severe fighting at the Dardanelles that ships lying in the harbour are being used to care for war victims.

Two divisions of Turkish troops, sent to Gallipoli scarcely a fortnight ago, occupied the exposed position during recent heavy attacks of the Allies and suffered heavy losses.

BERLIN DISCOUNTS RUSSIAN VICTORY.

BERLIN, Aug. 25.—Russian claims that the German Dreadnought Moltke, two cruisers and eight torpedo boats were sunk in the battle in the Gulf of Riga were declared to be without foundation, in an official statement issued by the Admiralty to-day.

The Admiralty stated that "German warships" reported by Russians to have been sunk, probably were some old vessels sunk by the Germans themselves to barricade the entrance to the gulf and bottle up the Russian squadron. Some of these vessels had previously been captured from the Russians.

"Neither a large ship or any German cruiser was sunk or damaged," said the Admiralty statement. "We silenced land batteries near Pernau."

SENDS NOTE OF SYMPATHY.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24.—Germany has sent a note of sympathy for the loss of American lives on the Arabic, saying it was not her intention to kill Americans.

CHECKS GERMAN OFFENSIVE.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—Strong Russian resistance checked the German offensive in the Baltic Provinces, though they have made further progress toward Brest-Litovsk.

RECONSTRUCTION OF BALKAN LEAGUE.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—A Rome despatch says the Balkan League is to be reconstructed with provision for putting a combined army of a million men in the field.

ASKS JAPAN FOR TROOPS.

TOKIO, Aug. 24.—It is unofficially reported here that Russia has asked for Japanese troops to aid her as well as for an increased output of munitions.

7,000 Troops Were Lost When Transports Sank

In Their Attempt to Make a Landing in the Gulf of Riga—One Person Killed and Six Wounded by Bombardment of Zeebrugge

Special Cable to The Examiner.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 24—Seven thousand troops were lost when transports on which they attempted to make a landing in the Gulf of Riga were sunk by Russian artillery.

GENEVA, Aug. 24.—Despatches last night state Italian troops now occupy the outskirts of Tolmino. On the Doberdo plateau the Austrians were driven back nearly two miles.

BERLIN, Aug. 24.—One person was killed and six wounded by a bombardment of Zeebrugge by the English fleet yesterday. Seventy shells were dropped on the base.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—Americans' affidavits cabled to Washington all agree that the Arabic was torpedoed without warning and that she didn't try to ram the submarine.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24.—German Ambassador Bernstorg yesterday afternoon issued practically a disavowal of the submarine commander's action in sinking the Arabic.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—The celebration of Russia's great naval victory was held in front of the Russian Embassy this afternoon, which was responded to by Count Benckendorfi.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—At Buckingham Palace yesterday King George conferred the degree of K C B on General Sam Hughes.

The Russian Destroyer Novik Proved Too Much For the Foe's Ships

Novik, an Oil-Burner, With Speed of 36 Knots and 4.1-inch Guns Did Great Damage to Mosquito Fleet of Enemy

Special Cable to The Examiner.

LONDON, Aug. 25.—Petrograd has at last semi-officially divulged the names of two of the Russian warships which took part in the Gulf of Riga operations. It was the Russian Pre-Dreadnought Slava, which the Germans were after, a vessel of 13,516 tons, laid down in 1902 and completed in 1905. Three sister ships were sunk in the battle of the Sea of Japan on May 27, 1905. A fourth was captured the next day and is now the Japanese Iwami. The Slava has a speed of 18 knots, a complement of 700, 9-inch belt armour and four 12-inch guns. While, therefore, it is an old battle ship, it is a powerful unit in a stationary fight. It is, in fact, one of Russia's bigger ships, and Petrograd says that its big guns had prevented the enemy's earlier operations.

When, however, the Germans sent two of their best torpedo boats into the gulf to find the Slava, they found, instead, the Russian destroyer Novik, which proved too much for them. The Novik is the pride of Russia's mosquito fleet. It displaces 1,262 tons, has 40,000 horse-power, has a speed of 36 knots, and carries four 4.1-inch guns as well as four machine guns. Apart from the 36 new boats of the same type in the 1912-14 programme, it is Russia's newest destroyer. It is propelled by turbine and oil fuel only. This 335 foot ship "has the speed" on most German destroyers or torpedo boats, and did great execution. One of Germany's best destroyers, S-15, did 36.5 knots on trial, but its biggest guns are 3.5-inch.

WEATHER WAS FOGGY.

Reuters carries a semi-official Petrograd statement which gives new details of the fight, which apparently began as an unequal combat between the old Russian battleship Slava and German Dreadnoughts.

"The importance of this fight," the statement says, "consisted in preventing the Germans for a certain time from forcing our position. Calm, foggy conditions favoured the enemy's operations enabling him to escape our observation and proceed more quietly with the work of mine destroying. The operations, nevertheless, cost the Germans some vessels and one cruiser, which blew up on mines.

"The night of the 17th the enemy sent into the gulf two of his best torpedo boat destroyers to attack the Slava, which had prevented his operations at dawn. These torpedo boats were unable to find the Slava, but while proceeding in the region of their squadron encountered our torpedo boat destroyer Novik, which engaged them.

"After twenty minutes of fierce fighting the leading enemy torpedo boat had her funnel demolished and suffered severe damage, which compelled her to take to flight. The other torpedo boat, which went to the assistance of her consort also gave up the fight and soon afterwards the more seriously damaged vessel apparently sank. It is reported that in addition to the German losses between the 16th and 22nd already announced in official communications another German auxiliary cruiser was sunk."

Thousands of Armenians Made Homeless and Destitute By War

Examiner Special

Among the greatest sufferers by the European war have been the Armenians. Their condition is even worse than that of the Belgians. Massacres by the Kurds and the Turks have again broken out, accompanied with atrocities. A multitude of Armenians who homes had been ruined and burned have fled across the frontiers from Turkey and Persia into Russia. There are about 100,000 of these refugees, most of them women and children. Never in my life have I seen such suffering," writes Tolstoy's daughter Alexandra, who is serving with the Red Cross near the frontier. "Some of the refugees in her hospital have had their hands and feet cut off. All were emaciated and starving. They are not only destitute but broken hearted many having seen their husbands and children slaughtered before their eyes. According to a later despatch from Tiflis, under date of August 10, 225,000 Armenians have abandoned their country with the retreating Russian armies, and are taking refuge in Trans-Caucasia.

In Turkey, where every able bodied man has been forced into the army, the conditions of the women and children is even worse, the ravages of famine and pestilence being added to those of Kurdish savagery. In one of the towns not a grown person was found, only five hundred orphans. The Americans at Van were surrounded in repressing the attacks of the Kurds and Turks until the arrival of the Russian army. Thus they saved themselves and upward of 50,000 helpless men and women with children, who had fled there from the surrounding villages. But this heroic band caused intense irritation to the Turks and Kurds, and were the cause of many more thousands of Armenians in the districts of Bitlis, Mush and Diarbekir.

Speaking of the Christian population of these regions, a recent American Board of Foreign Missions under the date of August 12th, says:

"The suffering among them is extreme and desperation is the order of the day. Immediate and overwhelming.

Most heart-rending of all is the case of the inhabitants of many villages in Armenia and Van Mission who have been exiled, whole districts being practically depopulated. British Sub. Sinks Four Turkish Vessels

Special Morning Cable

ATHENS, Aug 24 — Two allied cruisers penetrated the Dardanelles yesterday and bombarded Kastanea batteries with considerable effect. Despatches received here to-day reported that a British submarine sank four sloops carrying troops from Lapsaki to Gallipoli.

Heavy fighting has been resumed at both Krithia and in the Ari Burnu region. Australians along Suvla Bay captured a Turkish trench yesterday in a violent engagement.

The Result of a Caprice

By LOUISE B CUMMINGS

"Auntie, why were you never married? I have heard that you were once very pretty and were a great belle."

"My dear," replied the old lady, "why I was not married is a pitiful story to me. It has been constantly with me ever since I was a girl of twenty years old, but I have never talked about it. There is a lesson in it for young girls like you, and on that account I will tell it to you.

Then the old lady told me the following story.

You know that I was born and reared in the south on one of those plantations that represented opulence and luxury there before the war destroyed the institution which was its foundation. I came of age shortly before the struggle opened. I suppose it is true that I was a belle. Would that I had not been such, for the attention I received turned my head and caused what embittered my life.

Among my visitors were Alfred Beale and Edgar Tendler. Tendler was my favorite indeed. I was very much in love with him, but I wished to be striven for and when they encouraged Alfred Beale, one day I was sitting on the gallery of the plantation house with Edgar. My back as well as his was toward the door opening into the great hall while my face was toward a large mirror resting on the mantel over the fireplace. I caught a glimpse of the reflection of Alfred Beale in the hall.

He saw both Edgar and me sitting together. He scowled. I looked at him a moment, and then, not that anything serious might occur between the rivals, but that I had lost my lover. In the middle of the night my father came into my room and asked me for an explanation of what had happened, for he had heard of it. Instead of telling him the truth, I left him with the impression that Edgar had transcended his rights and Alfred had resented his act. I asked father what had come of it, and he replied that I would learn the result in the morning; then he left me.

This was the first intimation I had of anything serious between the two men. Suddenly it flashed upon me that they would fight. I trembled. I lay turning the matter over in my brain, which was like a boiling caldron. With the first light of dawn I arose, dressed myself, stole down the great staircase and out on to the veranda. Looking out from behind a vine, I saw Edgar and two other young men riding by the plantation. Going to the barn, I saddled my horse, mounted and followed them.

I cannot dwell on the rest. It is too painful. I was some time in finding where they had gone. When I reached them they had fought a duel with pistols, and Alfred Beale was lying on the ground while a surgeon was bending over him. I hurried to him to see if he were dead and was assured that his wound would not be fatal. I turned to Edgar. He gave me a look that has haunted me ever since. I saw in it that I had lost him forever.

You have heard my story. May it be a lesson to you that love is not a game for passing the time that young persons regard it. Love is a serious matter and should be treated seriously. Better the Fijian method of murder than the deeds committed [illegible] left to [illegible] orphans.

BAD OPERATION AVOIDED

By Timely Use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Mrs. Sowers' Own Statement.

Hodgdon, Maine.—"I feel it a duty I owe to all suffering women to tell what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for me. One year ago I found myself a terrible sufferer. I had pains in both sides and such a soreness I could scarcely straighten up at times. My back ached, I had no appetite and was so nervous I could not sleep, then I would be so tired mornings that I could scarcely get around. It seemed almost impossible to move or do a bit of work and I thought I never would be any better until I submitted to an operation. I commenced taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and soon felt like a new woman. I had no pains, slept well, had good appetite and could do almost all my own work for a family of four. I shall always feel that I owe my good health to your medicine."—Mrs. HAYWARD SOWERS, Hodgdon, Maine.

If you are ill do not drag along until an operation is necessary, but at once take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

Chief Justice Isaacs used to relate an experience which befell him during a visit to a country house in Ireland. His friend, the host, sent a car to the railway station to bring him to the place. He had not gone far when the horse became very restive and finally upset the car into a ditch. The judge asked the driver how long the animal had been in harness.

"Half an hour, sur."

"I mean, how long since he was first put in harness?"

"Shure, I've tould you half an hour, sur," answered the driver; "an' the masther said if he carried ye safe he'd buy him."

Wild Animals in Borneo.

A peculiar feature of Borneo is that it is practically an immense game preserve. The white inhabitants are government officials, planters, and business men and have neither time nor inclination to do any hunting. The result is that the game with which the country abounds is rarely disturbed. Elephants and rhinoceros are so plentiful that they are a nuisance to rubber and cocoanut estates by destroying young trees.

A Clash of Wits.

He—I love you.

She—But I haven't a cent in the world.

He—Excuse me, you didn't allow me to finish. I love you not.

She—So? I only wanted to try you. I have a fortune of $50,000.

He—Yes, but you interrupted me again. I love you not for your money's sake.

She—Well, I'm glad for that, as it's only a joke about the $50,000.

When You Wash Your Hair Don't Use Soap

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is pure packed cocoanut oil (not oily) as it is pure and entirely vegetable. It is very cheap, and lasts a couple of months. It is all to a lather. You can get this at any drug store and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses the hair thoroughly and rinses easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly and leaves it fresh, lustrous, bright, fluffy, wavy and [illegible] Besides it removes and keeps out every particle of dirt and dandruff.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

My Fairy Godmother

She Gave Me Three Riddles.

By F. A. MITCHEL

Having tried various ways of spending the month I put aside each year for an outing, and tired of them all, I was casting about for some new method when I saw an advertisement of a cabin situated on an island on the coast of Maine. The price was so reasonable that it attracted my attention. I entered into correspondence with the owner and engaged it.

My reason for doing so was that I met so many people at home that I desired to go where I would see no one. All day long I was hounded by persons eager to get a word with me to sell me something, and in the evening I was engaged in various social matters. A cabin hidden in a wood with a view of the ocean appealed to me. To lie at night listening to the breakers on the beach was a pleasing fancy.

I found the location what I had dreamed it. The cabin was well enough, but the furnishings were execrable. A cheap bedstead, a rickety bureau, a table on which to eat, a cook stove and a lot of cheap dishes completed the furnishings. There was no other abode near me, but scattered about were summer cottages, some of which were fairly pretentious. I saw no reason why I should be troubled by the inmates of any of them so long as I let them alone, which I proposed to do.

I had spent a week with only myself for company when one day, after a long tramp, on returning to my cabin I stood on the threshold astonished at a transformation of the interior. Disorder had been accumulating ever since my arrival; the bed had never been made, the dishes had not been washed. There were enough of the latter to last one person a week without being used more than once, and I had about finished the lot. I found on my return the bed made, the dishes washed, the cooking utensils scoured and hanging spick and span on the shelves.

I felt myself to be the hero of a fairy story and almost expected to see a little old woman drop down the chimney and stand upon the hearth.

Several days passed, during which disorder was again coming up about me, when, after an absence, I returned to find all set to rights as before. Still not finding any clew, I wrote on a piece of cardboard a message and pinned it up against the wall for my next absence.

Fairy Godmother—Thank you very much for your attention. I need only one thing. Will you give it to me? If so, leave word when next you come and I will make it known.

I went away again very soon, and when I returned beneath what I had written were penciled in letters apparently in the hand of an old person the following:

Your single wish is granted; name it.

Before going away again I wrote.

Some one to love me.

The answer to this was:

Love is not singular, it is plural.

I found on the rude mantel of my cabin a [illegible] thread, tangled and pinned to it the words:

Unravel this and you shall have your wish.

This fairy business was not gratifying my curiosity. I spent no time trying to unravel the thread, but spent considerable thought in laying a plan to find out who was my fairy godmother. I did not doubt that it was some girl from one of the cottages—possibly several girls who were deriving a lot of amusement in playing fairy. The only plan I could think of was to go away early in the day and hide near by. This I did. There was a dense thicket a short distance from my cabin, and one morning, having breakfasted at 5 o'clock, taking a book, pipe and tobacco and a lunch, I went into the thicket prepared to wait and watch.

About 11 o'clock in the morning I heard a child's voice calling, "He's gone!" I peeped through an opening and saw a girl about ten years old near the cabin beckoning to some one I could not see. Presently I saw a girl of perhaps twenty concealed from the hut by a tree, but visible to me, evidently fearful of advancing. But the child ran into the cabin and out again, beckoned eagerly, and the young woman timidly left her hiding place and went into the cabin.

Now I did not propose to give away the advantage I held by cornering my fairy godmother. I waited till she had left the cabin, then stole cautiously after her, my object being to locate her home. I followed her and her companion for two miles and saw her go into a cottage situated on a bluff overlooking the ocean. Then I returned to my habitation to see what was her last message.

I had left the tangled skein on the table and near it a sheet of writing paper on which I had sprinkled drops of water and written "Tears" and below:

Fairy Godmother—I am wearing myself out trying to unravel the skein. Give me something easier.

A reply to this had been written on the "tear" bespattered paper:

Idle tears. Square the circle and you shall have your wish.

It was evident that the young lady had no intention of giving me a sweetheart. Anyway I knew enough not to tackle an insoluble problem. I chuckled, for I had her secret and she did not have mine. Lighting a pipe in order to sharpen my inventive faculties, I set to work to think out my next move. I did not spend much time on deciding upon one.

The next evening just before dark I was passing the cottage where dwelt my fairy godmother. The little girl who had aided her in her visits to my cabin was playing in the yard. Seating myself by the gate, I called to the child. She came, and I asked her if she could get me some arnica. She ran to the house and returned with an elderly lady, who asked if I had been injured.

"Only a sprained ankle from slipping off a smooth stone," I said. "A little arnica will fix it. Indeed, I don't know that anything is needed." I arose, with pretended difficulty, took one step and sank down again.

"I will call help," said the lady. "You must be carried to the house."

"No, no," I protested. "I'm sure I can walk that far if you will kindly allow me to put a hand on your arm."

The lady consented. With her assistance I got to the house and was placed in an easy chair on the porch. The fairy godmother came out, but I pretended not to notice her. She started on seeing me, and I saw color come and go in her face. I made a grimace in pretense of suffering, and her expression of uneasiness at my presence gave way to one of sympathy. I carefully concealed any recognition of her, and she was soon ministering to me with the others.

"I fear," I said, "that if you have a vehicle on the premises I shall have to ask some one to drive me to my cabin. It is a couple of miles from here on the eastern end of the island."

Now, I was quite sure there was no vehicle on the premises, for there was neither barn nor garage. The elder lady informed me that there was no means of conveyance at hand, and since it was growing dark I would be welcome to remain till one could be found. I pretended to demur to this, but was overruled. My "sprained" ankle was propped up on a foot rest with pillows. I remembered to wince occasionally, fearful that my benefactors might suspect the part I was playing.

Soon after I had got settled my fairy godmother brought me out a dainty supper which she placed on a stand beside me. I felt quite confident that she knew me for the person whose cabin she had visited in my absence, but I was equally sure that she believed me to be ignorant that she was the person she had favored. In order to convince her of this I told her about my cabin and how I was spending an outing there alone. She made no comment, seemingly preferring to chat on other subjects.

I spent a pleasant evening, not mentioning that I had received kindness from an unknown person, nor did my fairy godmother give any hint that she had even ever seen or heard of me before. No conveyance was forthcoming, and I was urged to abandon any idea of going to my cabin that morning. When it was suggested I might ride over with a farmer who supplied the family with milk each morning. After trying to step with the injured ankle and demonstrating that I could not possibly use it without great agony, I yielded to persuasion and consented to remain the night.

By this time a stout cane had been provided for me, and I insisted on hobbling to my room without other assistance. In the morning I came downstairs, still keeping up the hobbling, and about 10 o'clock the farmer came with the milk. I expressed my heartfelt thanks to my benefactors and hired him to drive me to my cabin. My fairy godmother was solicitous lest I would need attention and be without it, living alone as I did, but I assured her that I would be back soon to thank her and the others again for the kindness that had been bestowed upon me. Then the farmer lifted me into his wagon and I was driven away, followed by smiling goodbys from all the family.

The next day, since I did not expect another visit from my fairy godmother and not wishing to spend the day lounging about my cabin, I went out for some deep sea fishing. As usual I left everything in disorder. On my return shortly before dark I met with a surprise. My household had been put to rights and the paper on which I corresponded with my fairy godmother bore a message:

Since you have done neither of the tasks given you by your fairy godmother you cannot have any one to love you. You shall have one more opportunity. Tell how a sprained ankle can be made well within twelve hours.

I was dumfounded. Never had I so prided myself on playing a part as feigning myself off as a sufferer. Talk about men being deceivers of women! I doubt if any man ever did any such thing. The girl had seen through my ruse and had played me a far better game than I had played her, or, rather, I had tried to play her.

Well, the fairy godmother business was ended. There was nothing for me to do but go to her abode and confess myself beaten. This I did the next morning. I longed for an offering to take with me, but in that wilderness no such thing was to be had. I was received with a look of amusement mingled with triumph. My first words were, "How did you discover my game?" The reply was: "Don't ask a woman how she discovers things. She either knows them by intuition or not at all."

Notwithstanding that I did not solve any of the riddles, I got some one to love and to love me.

The Chinaman's Will—A Puzzle.

A Chinaman, dying, left eleven sheep and three sons, and making a will, left one-half of his estate to his eldest boy, one fourth to the next, and one-sixth to the third. They wished to divide without killing a sheep, but could not see how to do it, so they sent for a wise man. Sending to his own fold for a sheep, he put it in with the eleven. "Now take your half six," said he to the eldest, and he did so. To the second he said, "Take your fourth three." Then to the younger, "Take your sixth and be gone two." And they all did so, when the wise man drove his own sheep home.

Was the division according to the will?

Following Principles.

"Did you see Biddles disappear as soon as he saw his wife coming with out even waiting to see what she wanted?"

"He wasn't taking any chances on that. You see, he belongs to a 'safety first' society."

THIS SCHOOL GIRL HAD BAD FAINTING SPELLS

Was Weak and Run Down. But Dr. Chase's Nerve Food Made Complete Cure

The most critical time in a girl's life comes during the school age, when she is impelled by rivalry to put forth her best efforts in studying for examinations. At the time she should have healthful outdoor exercise and abundance of fresh air, to keep the blood pure and rich, she is confined to her studies. It is any wonder that she becomes run down in health and often from headache, indigestion, lack of appetite and pallid cheeks, fainting?

The case cited in this letter is a good illustration and you can read for the splendid results of using Dr Chase's Nerve Food to help through this critical period.

While attending school my daughter became weak and very much run down. She was frequently troubled with bad headaches, pains, and nothing we tried seemed to do her any good. We were advised to try Dr Chase's Nerve Food, and did so with most satisfactory results. I am pleased to tell you that after using five boxes of the Nerve Food she was completely cured, and has no return of the faint-ing spells."

This statement is certified to by Mr. Hamilton Houston, Justice of the Peace.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is one of the few remedies of the kind to become [illegible] extraordinary blood-forming [illegible]. By creating an abundance of rich, red blood it [illegible] the action of the heart, revitalizes the exhausted nerves and builds up the system in every way.

Something New.

Many advertisers are constantly trying to think up "Something New" or "Different" and the results are startling to be sure, but certainly not convincing nor conducive to increase in the business of the advertiser.

The craze for originality is a mistake. People do not care for stunts or mental gymnastics. They do want to know the facts in regard to your business and whether you can offer better prices or better quality than your competitors.

Tell the facts in a straightforward, unassuming manner. You will gain the confidence of your patrons, and you will find that advertising pays abundantly.

A Modern Kitchen

Lock Haven (Pa.) Dispatch-Express, Oct. 2nd

AN idea that I saw lately, and which I considered a good one, may be of interest to some of your readers who are planning to make their kitchen as convenient as possible and with little expense. I pass along the idea for what it is worth.

In modern homes nowadays, a cupboard is built between the dining room and kitchen, with doors opening into both rooms. Such a convenience may be installed on a smaller scale by having a kitchen table built against the wall, with drawers below. On the dining room side one can have a shelf sideboard with drawer below, supported by iron brackets. The sideboard shelf and kitchen table should be on the same level. A broad opening is cut through the partition just over the table, and either a draw curtain or a sliding door put in the opening. The food and dishes can come into the dining room through this opening, also the table cleared in the same manner.

A new invention which has interested me considerably, and which some

Gish Dewar's Wager

How He Made a Wish Come True.

By CLARISSA MACKIE

A party of American sightseers was dawdling about in Cairo. There were a Mrs. Carleton, her son, Richard, and Miss Maud Raymond. They had ascended the Nile and seen the wonders thereof, and now they were looking for trinkets to take home with them to America. They had drifted into a bazaar where anything could be bought from an amulet to an idol.

Gish Dewar sold trinkets in the bazaar.

All day long he sat in the shadow of his striped canopy, looking sad and mysterious. His dark eyes never questioned the passing crowds, nor did he importune the tourists to buy as did his fellow merchants, who talked about him.

"Who is this Gish Dewar?" asked Ali Benamid, the shoe dealer.

"A stranger who has pushed himself forward, a lazy one who does not haggle. He sets a price upon his wares, and one may buy or not." Every day he loses customers."

"The rich Americans pause to buy. See Gish Dewar is almost asleep!"

It was true that Gish Dewar's turbaned head was drooping somnolently, even while three Americans paused before his stall.

"The old beggar's asleep, Maud," laughed the man carelessly. "Let us go on."

"But, Dick," protested the pretty girl. "I do want one of these curious filagree bracelets and one of these long chains of blue green Egyptian scarabei. Aren't they lovely, Mrs. Carleton?" turning to the white haired woman who accompanied them.

"Yes, my dear, but this little brooch like a coiled snake appeals to me. Oh, Dick," to her son who was obviously bored, "do awake the man!"

Dick Carleton stifled a yawn and prodded Gish Dewar in the ribs with his walking stick.

The turbaned head flew up and a pair of liquid dark eyes blazed at him in hot anger.

But Gish Dewar's voice was silkily smooth.

"Excuse, effendi," he murmured; "you would buy?"

"Yes, this bracelet, now?" Maud Raymond held the filagree trinket in her fingers.

The eyes of Gish Dewar gazed not at the bracelet. He was staring at the girl's little hands, white and ringless.

"How much?" insisted the girl with a note of impatience in her voice.

"A hundred piasters," muttered the seller of curios.

Miss Raymond took out her purse and paid for the bracelet, and, having priced the scarabei chain and finding it too costly, they were about to move on when Gish Dewar brought out a small copper box and opened it.

"Here, effendi," he said, "are amulets to wear."

Dick Carleton looked them over. One of onyx, set with a large pearl, attracted him.

"I like this one," he said. "It will make a unique watch fob."

Gish Dewar became urgent.

"It protects the wearer against dangers by sea and it protects one from false friends!"

There was a sneer in his tone that sent the blood to Dick's pale face.

"You talk too much, my man," he said coldly.

"Perhaps my lord is sensitive. I am a poor man. I meant no harm." The charm guards one against danger and from false friends! See, my lord I must speak truthfully."

Gish Dewar's brown hands went out in a flashing gesture that startled Maud Raymond, so frank it was. She peered down at the face of the curio dealer, but it was in deep shadow. There was a glimpse of dark eyes, an aquiline nose a pointed beard. She felt a vague disappointment as she turned away.

There was something in gesture and voice which had reminded her of Elmer Winn, but Winn was in China had been for five years, and she uttered a sad little laugh at her own folly. How could a seller of Egyptian be Elmer Winn?

Dick was snapping angrily at the curio dealer.

"Keep your rubbish!" he said excitedly, flinging the amulet on the carpet before Gish Dewar. "I dare say it was made in New York any way!"

"Dick, do be careful!" cautioned his mother. "You never know what these foreigners will do!"

Maud stood aloof regarding Dick with contemptuous eyes. How like him, to haggle with a humble merchant in an Egyptian bazaar! By nature Dick was small and mean and tyrannical.

"Oh, my lord is mistaken!" returned Gish Dewar, with deadly courtesy in his tones; "my lord is mistaken. The amulet was not made in the place he calls New York. It came from the tomb of Prince Ammenara, a nephew of Rameses II. of a time long past when my lord's ancestors were poor peasants working in the fields!"

Dick was stuttering with rage. He felt that Maud was secretly amused at the truthful words of the Cairene merchant.

"You can keep the money," he said Dick rudely, turning away.

Gish Dewar gathered the 500 piastres into his strong hands and shook them musically.

"I will wager my lord 500 piastres that I will return this money to him at the moment of his greatest humiliation, for he has been a false friend."

Dick laughed harshly and followed his companions. His good looking face wore a scowl. His thoughts were unpleasant enough.

"What did the fellow mean?" he asked himself. "What the deuce did he mean by talking about 'false friends?'"

Mrs. Carleton was apologizing for her son's bad temper.

"I am afraid it is the tropical sun," she said, striving to reassure the girl whom Dick wanted to marry. Maud was her goddaughter and Mrs. Carleton had counted upon this European trip to bring about the desired engagement.

They went along the bazaar, and while Dick and his mother picked out a silky rug, Maud hurried back to Gish Dewar. He was sitting there in the motionless, meditative attitude.

He glanced up sharply at sound of her light step and then drew back into the shadow.

In the sunlight her face shone with its wonderful tints of cream and pink, gray eyes, black lashed and cool, and shimmering golden hair.

She was wasting a wonderful smile upon the poor merchant.

"I will buy the amulet," she said softly, taking money from her purse. "Hurry, please!"

Gish Dewar opened the copper box, took out the onyx amulet and laid it in her hand, but he waved away the proffered money.

"Effendi has paid for it," he said in a muffled tone.

"But I cannot take it unless you let me pay for it. The gentleman is not a relative; he is merely a friend," she said haughtily.

So Gish Dewar humbly took the money and locked it in his copper box.

"Wear it next your heart. It will bring back one who loves you," he said.

Maud slipped the amulet into her purse.

"Will it bring back one I love?" she whispered, blushing.

"From across the world!" he said, and she fled, blushing hotly.

As if the crafty promises of an Egyptian fortune teller could restore Elmer Winn to her!

She had been engaged to him when he set sail for China several years ago, and she had never received a letter from him. She learned that he was there and prospering.

If he had chosen this way to break their engagement Maud would meet him halfway, so she sent out to him her engagement ring without one word of explanation.

After many months came back to her the registry receipt that had accompanied the ring. Because it bore his strong signature Maud kept it among her treasures.

Ever since then Dick Carleton had ardently wooed her.

* * * * * * *

Six months afterward Dick Carleton sat in the smoking room of his club. One by one his companions yawned and went home to dress for dinner.

Dick was left alone with his gloomy thoughts.

That afternoon he had proposed to Maud Raymond and had been firmly refused.

"I don't love you, Dick, and I never shall," she had said.

So Dick had excellent reason to be melancholy, and there were other unpleasant memories that would not be banished.

He ordered another glass of whisky and soda and sipped it moodily.

Out of the silence of the room a voice spoke like the crack of a whip.

"Ah, Carleton, I was looking for you!"

Dick half rose from his chair and confronted Elmer Winn's handsome bronzed face. Winn's hands were braced on the table, and his broad shoulders leaned across the polished mahogany.

"False friend!" he said, sitting down in Carleton's vacant chair. "All's fair in love," he muttered sullenly.

"False friend," repeated Winn. "You wrote to me that you were already married to Maud. I was so enraged that I hated all of you, even my country, and I would not read a newspaper from home. I believed your lie, and when a few weeks later I received my ring from her I knew you had spoken truly.

"I left China. I have money. I have wandered the world over, amusing myself by various methods in many lands.

"Once in a bazaar in Cairo I saw you and her, and her hands were bare of rings. I knew she was not married to you—that you lied!"

Carleton was cringing in his chair.

"I loved her!" he whispered hoarsely.

"So did I," reminded the other man; then, with a sudden change of voice, he added:

"The wager, effendi!"

"What do you mean, Winn? Why do you speak like the curio seller in the bazaar at Cairo?" gasped Dick.

"Because I am he!" thundered the other. "I became Gish Dewar, the curio dealer, because it amused me to form part of that colorful life. I was lonely. But now"—his voice softened—"it is different. I sold the onyx amulet to a lady, and I promised her that if she would wear it next her heart it would bring back one she loves and one who loves her." He turned away.

"Where are you going now?" demanded Dick.

"I am going to make her wish come true," said the man who had been Gish Dewar, and behind him on the table he left a copper box containing 500 piastres.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

A NEGLIGEE IN EMPIRE STYLE.

By Anabel Worthington.

7208

Two things are needed in a negligée first comfort and next grace. It is necessary for the outlines to be soft and suggestive of ease, and it is also necessary for them to be really comfortable, without pull or drag at any point. The Empire style combines both these qualities, with its high waistline and long, flowing skirt. In the model chosen for illustration the little waist has a frill at its lower edge which produces much the same effect as a bolero, the last word in the styles of to-day. To give real comfort to the arm the sleeve is inserted in a slightly widened armhole and can be continued to the wrist in soft puff effect or cut off at the elbow. The shorter sleeve is generally preferable except in winter. At the neck is a wide and handsome collar, and the skirt, which is perfectly straight top and bottom, is attached to the blouse under the edge of the frill.

There is practically no end to the dainty materials which can be brought into use for a gown like this. First comes challie, which is soft and not too warm; then crêpe de Chine, cotton crêpe, wash silk, various mercerized cottons, dotted swiss and organdie. The main consideration in selecting a material is the use for which the gown is intended, the stronger fabrics suggesting themselves for anything approaching real use, and the more dainty and perishable weaves for simple lounging.

The negligée pattern, No. 7208, is cut in sizes 34 to 44 inches bust measure. Medium size requires 5 yards of 36 inch material.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents or 2 for 25c.

NO INFANTRY FIGHTING ON WESTERN FRONT

Special Cable to The Examiner

PARIS, Aug. 25.—(French Official Communique.)— A French aviator bombarded the railway station at Lorrach, Baden, 28 miles south-west of Frieburg, yesterday, official despatches reported this afternoon. No mention was made of the damage done.

Furious grenade fighting has taken place around Souchez and Neville. There have been no infantry clashes at any point on the battle front.

North of Arras a fierce artillery duel continued throughout the night. In the region of Roye and Lassigny, artillery combats continue without cessation.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 25.—President Wilson to-day signed a proclamation declaring the neutrality of this country in relation to the belligerent States of Italy and Turkey.

CARDIFF, Eng., Aug. 25.—1,000 miners went on strike at Hafod to-day, claiming that the terms of the agreement under which they recently returned to work, have not been carried out. The strike threatens to spread.

BERLIN, Aug. 25.—General Mackensen has broken through the advanced positions of the Brest-Litovsk fortress at Dohbynka.

PARIS Aug. 25.—A French aviator bombarded and sank a Turkish transport at anchor in the Dardanelles, north of Nagara roads, it was officially announced this afternoon.

The War Office also reported the capture by the British of 800 yards of Turkish trenches in the northern zone of operations at Gallipoli, one of the most important single gains at the Dardanelles.

The British gains were made in the Suvla Bay region, where large British reinforcements were landed recently. At the same time the French, at the southern tip of the Gallipoli Peninsula captured the Turkish observation post by a daring assault.

The French fleet on August 20 successfully shelled Acba Shiliman on the European side of the Dardanelles, the War Office reported.

PANIC IN CONSTANTINOPLE.

LONDON, Eng., Aug. 25.—The bombardment of the outskirts of Constantinople by a Russian aerpolane squadron, resulting in the death or injury of 41 persons, is announced in a despatch from Athens. An attack was made on Monday on the Asiatic suburbs of Constantinople. A number of bombs were dropped, throwing the people into a panic. Thirty Turks, eight Greeks and three Armenians were killed or wounded.

NEW YORK CITY, Aug. 25.—The steamer Nieuw Amsterdam arrived to-day from Rotterdam. It reports being held up in the Downs several hours while their mine sweepers cleared the channel of German mines. They added that the steamer preceding them struck a mine and sank.

Passengers said two mines picked up by a sweeper were exploded a short distance from the Nieuw Amsterdam, and the concussion shook the ship.

English Press on the C. P. R. Annual Report

Examiner Special

MONTREAL, Q., Aug. 24. According to reports cabled to Montreal the London England new-papers in giving their usual analysis of the annual report of the Canadian Pacific Railway, speak in a tone which is sympathetic and optimistic.

The Financial News says: "The handsomely increased margin shown by the special income account amply justified the directors in maintaining the customary rate of dividend for the present."

"The Financiers' Bulletin says: "Not only were the results obtained from the railway highly creditable in their circumstances, but the lands yielded remarkably good returns considering the prevailing depression. That company should have achieved such favourable results in the face of the difficulties is a matter for congratulation and proves unmistakably that unsold lands are an asset of great potential value. The record of miscellaneous income on the whole is highly satisfactory."

The Financial Times says: "The statement regarding the dividend strengthens the idea that the directors would not have maintained the dividend unless there were good prospects of maintainance through the current year."

Funeral of the Late Fr. Sweeney This Morning

The funeral of the late Rev. Father Lr. Sweeney took place this morning at 9 o'clock, from his late residence, 373 Burnham Street, to the Church of the Immaculate Conception, where a solemn requiem mass was sung by Rev. Father McCall, assisted by Rev. Father Brethertion of Hastings, as deacon, and Rev. Father Fitzpatrick of Emmsmore, as subdeacon. Rev. Father McCarthy was Master of ceremonies. Other clergy present in the sanctuary were Rev. Peter McGuire, Downeyville; Rev. Michael McGuire, Douro; Rev. C. J. Phelan, St. Peter's Cathedral; Rev. J. V. McCauley of the Sacred Heart Church; Rev. Ferguson, Lindsay, and Rev. Leonard of the Cathedral. Many friends and acquaintances attended in the Church, and also followed in the cortege to the cemetery.

PETERBOROUGH'S BATTALION

It is up to the young men of Peterborough County to fill up the ranks of the Peterborough Battalion, Canadian Expeditionary Force, as soon as possible. The battalion is to be trained and housed here so that the men will be in their home town until they are drafted to go overseas. This should prove an especially attractive battalion for local young men, and a rush to recruit is expected.

LOCAL RECRUITS ENJOYED ROUTE MARCH YESTERDAY

Men Had a Big Day at Lakefield and Covered the Long March in Splendid Style, Returning in Good Condition

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

The local infantry recruits, in charge of Armourer Sergt. Hart, had a splendid outing yesterday when the detachment, ninety strong, including the 59th Band, marched to Lakefield. It was the last march of the men as a body as the band and thirty-three of the recruits left this morning for Barriefield.

The detachment left the armouries at 7.45 and reached Lakefield shortly after nine o'clock marching directly to the lake front. Here football and baseball were played while advantage was taken of the opportunity to cover the village with recruiting posters, calling attention to the need for men. The people of Lakefield gave the boys a splendid reception and the women's Comfort League dispensed ice cream, lemonade and other delicacies that were thoroughly appreciated after the ten mile tramp. The 59th Band played a number of selections that were thoroughly enjoyed.

Early in the afternoon the return march was commenced, and Sergt. G. Chambers, anxious to see that the boys got full measure in walking, took a round about route from Nassau down, adding a couple of miles to the distance covered. However, the men stood the tramp in fine style, not a man falling out, and they marched into the armouries after their twenty-two mile hike with a swing that showed little signs of fatigue. The spectators at the armouries gave them a round of applause as they entered the hall.

The boys are grateful to the people of Lakefield for their hospitable treatment and to the local merchants who donated articles that added greatly to the enjoyment and comfort of the outing. Thanks are extended to Messrs. McDonnell, Lake Street; Routley, Lake street; Bolger, Charlotte street; Spratt, George street; the United Cigar Store; L. Yeates, Bruce Patterson, A. W. Clysdale and Gurney Bros., for gifts of cigars, and to A. Longo for one basket of tomatoes, N. Minnecola for two dozen oranges, D. M. Minnecola, for a basket of tomatoes, Joseph Longo, oranges, pears and bananas; J. Smrare, basket of plums; D. Decarlesons, basket of plums; and Mr. W. Hamilton, King George Hotel, for a cash donation.

A transport wagon accompanied the troops carrying dinner for the men.

The following officers of the 57th Regt. have received certificates from the recent Provisional School of Infantry: Lieut. C. R. Widdifield, Lindsay School, a lieutenant's certificate; Lieut. Harold F. Hall, Barriefield Camp school, a captain's certificate, and Lieut. J. A. Harstone, Barriefield Camp School, a lieutenant's certificate.

Sergt. George Grange accompanied the detachment to Barriefield camp.

MORE MEN FOR BARRIEFIELD

Overseas Band and Thirty-three Recruits Given a Send-off on Their Departure for the Training Camp at Kingston

CROWD AT STATION

Peterborough said farewell to fifty-three more of her sons this morning, when the band recruited here for the 59th Battalion and the local infantry recruits left on the 8.40 G.T.R. train for Barriefield camp. The usual scenes that have grown familiar to Peterborough people by this time were in evidence and the boys were given a hearty send-off. The Mayor, Lt.-Col. Walker and Major Eastwood, A.M.C. of the 57th Regiment, and officers of the Speakers' Patriotic League marched to the station with the recruits, while the parade was headed by a band composed of the massed bands of the 59th Battalion, 57th Battalion and Salvation Army.

The men fell in at 7.30 o'clock at the armouries, and after roll had been called, Mayor Buller addressed them on behalf of the city, after which gifts were presented to them by the 57th Chapter Daughters of the Empire.

At the station a large crowd had assembled and the few minutes left before the train left were spent in leave-taking. As the train pulled out the band played "O Canada" and the soldiers in the cars waved their straw hats vigorously in answer to the cheering of the crowd.

The detachment was in charge of Lieut. G. K. Ruckham and Armourer Sergt. Fred Hart.

Following is a list of the men who left this morning, including the bandsmen:

MORE TROUBLE THREATENED

Danger of Another Strike of the South Wales Coal Miners Which Would Cripple Production of War Munitions

WHAT THE MEN CLAIM

Special Cable to The Examiner.

CARDIFF, Aug. 25. For the second time within a few weeks Great Britain is threatened with a strike of 200,000 South Wales Coal miners, in a walkout that would cripple the production of war munitions, and tie up a large portion of British shipping.

One thousand miners in the Hafod district quit work to-day, as a protest against the arbitration award made by President Walter Runciman of the Government Board of Trade. The miners made the charge that the agreement they entered into through the Minister of Munitions, Lloyd George, has not been kept, and that the Government has attempted to play into the hands of the mine owners. The Executive Committee of the Miners' Federation has refused to accept the award, and has appointed a committee to interview Lloyd-George, whose intercession ended the strike several weeks ago. The men firmly believe that Lloyd-George will see to it that the original agreement is respected by the operators and the Government. The distrust Runciman, whose failure to settle a recent strike was followed by a personal appeal from Lloyd-George.

MEETING OF THE COMMISSIONERS

At a meeting of the Public Utilities Commission which was held yesterday afternoon, it was decided to pay The Henry Hope and Sons $672.10 for the transformers at their factory or that amount less such sum as the Manager may decide should be deducted for depreciation.

A letter was read from Wm. Kennedy, Jr., saying that he had instructed the contractor for the pump to put in a Cocrane heater and to change the location of the chimney if there was nothing to prevent it.

Mr. R. J. Forrest wrote the Commissioners offering his services as building inspector on the new sub-station. The matter was referred to the Manager of the Commission.

A communication was received from Thomas Robertson, asking that the water rate on 265 Bethune Street be cancelled as the water was not used. The matter was referred to the Waterworks Engineer for a report.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

What's Doing in Civic Circles

The Board of Works of the City Council will meet this evening at 8 o'clock. A fairly large budget will provide ample scope for the legislative abilities of the Aldermen.

Utilities Commission.

The Peterborough Utilities Commission met yesterday afternoon. A number of matters concerning the work of the Commission were dealt with.

Mayoralty Reception.

His Worship Mayor Buller arranged to meet Mr. Private who will visit the city this evening in connection with the Overseas Tobacco Fund. A reception will be held in the Council chamber.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES

Hamilton's campaign for machine guns, coupled with the expected $200,000 expected, and the 200 machine guns promised the Government less than a month ago, guaranteed.

Died of Heart Trouble.

Alderman Meaford Webb, of Barrie, died of heart trouble, in his 44th year after a year's decline.

Patriotic Campaign.

It is expected that $30,000 will be raised as a result of Halton County's patriotic campaign which is being held this week.

FIRST PARADE OF LOCAL BATTALION

MR. PRIVATE WILL SPEAK

Mr. Arthur Private, representing the Overseas Club, will be in Peterborough to-night and will address a meeting in the City Council Chambers at 8 o'clock in connection with the Overseas Tobacco Fund. Mr. Private will go into the details of the scheme and there should be a large audience on hand to hear him. The need of tobacco for the men at the front is easily apparent, and Mr. Private's address will be full of interest. His Worship Mayor Buller will preside.

THE OFFICIAL CLOSING OF THE LOCAL PLAYGROUND

Interesting Programme Arranged For To-morrow Afternoon---A Resume of the Work Accomplished During the Past Two Months

A GREAT SUCCESS

To-morrow is to be the big official closing at the Central school playground. The Mayor, Canon Davidson, Mr. Gillespie, M.P.P., R. B. Rogers and Col. Miller have kindly consented to give addresses during the course of the afternoon's festivity. Large crowds of children are expected and the supervisors are ready with a band of volunteer assistants to handle any number and keep them busy in a host of games.

This official closing is the first annual and formal introduction of playground work in Peterborough. Supervised play received its start here this summer and any who have made inquiries know the interest it has aroused. Children have profited by it and with more space and better equipment than ever before. They have learned not only new games but how best to play old ones. Parents who hitherto have been loathe to allow their youngsters near the river have readily granted this when they knew there was supervision. The programme of the playground set aside the hours of 11 a.m. and 3 p.m. for swimming and scores have become more efficient water dogs from the constant and systematic practice. Weekly hikes to the season organized hikes for boys and picnics for girls have been arranged to take dozens of kiddies for outings to some cooler spot than the grounds. The evening session for older people has steadily increased in popularity since the opening. The bigger boys and girls during these opportunity for recreation have joined in old time games and amused themselves until dark. All these welcome and pleasant facilities will close for the season on Tuesday, Aug. 31st with the formal closing to-morrow from 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. Some pleasant picnics by inclined citizens have had their automobiles to carry children from the East City corner of Mark and Hunter streets to the playground while the Street Railway Company will give free transportation from all parts of the city to those children and mothers desirous of participating in the fun.

Two Vancouver Doctors Here on the Way to the Front

Dr. Herbert Rogers of Vancouver, B.C., son of the late C. H. C. Rogers, formerly of Peterborough, the city of his birth, is visiting here. He has enlisted with the Army Medical Corps and will take charge of a hospital in France.

Dr. Bertram Boucher, son of Vancouver, B.C., and son of the late Dr. Boucher of Peterborough, is here en route to the front.

LIST OF THE RECRUITS

There was this morning a nucleus of 56 men for the Peterborough Battalion, Canadian Expeditionary Force, and drill was carried on as usual at the armouries with Sergeant Sam Callaghan in charge. The Peterborough organization will be the 80th Battalion of the Overseas Forces, and will be equipped, housed and trained here for overseas service.

Yesterday on the return of the detachment from Lakefield the infantry recruits were given an opportunity to decide whether they preferred to go to Barriefield to join the 59th Battalion or to remain here as part of the new battalion. Lt.-Col. Walker in addressing the men said that it was for them to decide which corps they preferred. All were for overseas service and it was a matter of selecting the corps they wished to join. He explained that Lt.-Col. Miller would speak on behalf of the Peterborough battalion and Lieut. Ruckham for the 59th.

The speakers briefly laid before the recruits the details of the situation and then the men were asked to decide. Thirty-eight recruits in addition to the band signified their intention of going to Barriefield, but five of these changed over to the Peterborough battalion last night, leaving thirty-three and the band to go to Kingston.

56 on the Roll.

There were 56 men on the roll and 52 on parade for drill this morning. Lt.-Col. Walker pointed out to the men their responsibility. They had elected to remain as a nucleus for the Peterborough battalion, and it was now up to each one of them to do his best to see that the ranks were filled. Their conduct had been such as to cause the most favorable comment in the city and it was their duty to see that the good reputation was maintained and that every man who came into the ranks should live up to the standard that had been set. Further details in regard to the organization he stated would be supplied at a later day.

The men were drilled this morning by Sergt. Callaghan, and this afternoon an auto will take out of yesterday's long march were given a half holiday.

Although the overseas band left this morning the Peterborough battalion will not be long without music. Negotiations are already under way for the formation of another band. A number of members of the 57th and Salvation Army bands have already signified their intention of joining, and little trouble is anticipated in securing a good band.

Will Be Looked After.

"The boys who elected to remain will not be left," remarked an officer of the Peterborough branch of the Speakers' Patriotic League this morning. "It is our intention to see that the interest and welfare of these men are looked after from now until they return to Peterborough after the war is over and longer if necessary."

Following is a list of the members of the 80th Peterborough Battalion:

Ernest Bonnett, 567 George Street, aged 25, married, born in Ware, 3 years in 57th Regiment, 3 years in German Army.

Frank Chesson, Peterborough, aged [illegible], born in England.

James Foster, 250 Concession street, aged 32, married, born in England, 4 years in 57th Regiment, also 3 years in the Leicestershire Infantry.

Cecil W. Kay, 326 Rubidge street, aged 23 years, single, born in England, 2 years in Hertfordshire Regt., 1 year in the Scots Greys, Dragoons.

Wm. Lockhart, 70 Victoria street, aged 42, married, born in England, 6 years in Royal West Surreys, 5 years in 57th Regiment.

[illegible] Lake street, aged 25, single, born in Canada.

[illegible] W. [illegible] 498 Cedar street, born in England.

Harold G. Freeman, 496 Cambridge street, aged 20, single, born in England, 2 years in the 57th.

Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

WEDNESDAY, AUG. 25, 1915

SALAAM TO SIR SAM.

The Examiner congratulates Sir Samuel Hughes, Minister of Militia, upon the handsome recognition of his services, made by the King. A title may not have the working value of a Ross rifle, but it is not to be despised as a mark of favour, earned by an energetic public man; and should in the present case stimulate the recipient to, if possible, more energetic, and no less well directed energy in the discharge of his official duties.

While cordially congratulating Sir Samuel Hughes, it may not be amiss to remind him that he belongs to Canada, and that in the present state of affairs, his presence as Minister of Militia is needed in Canada. We are trying to recruit a battalion in Peterborough, and there are things that require the help of the "boss."

HATS OFF TO HARVEY.

Harvey township has done nobly in making a grant of $300 to the regimental fund of the 59th Battalion. It sounds as big as $3000 when contrasted with the gift of $250 for the same purposes granted by the City Council of Peterborough. Harvey is not one of the wealthiest townships in the county, and its gift of so generous a sum is a proof that its representatives in their action have expressed the patriotic spirit of their constituents. Harvey has established a claim upon the respect of every part of the county and of the country, and the Government which represents the country at large, should, it occasion presents, remember that Harvey has claims upon its consideration.

"KEEPING HIS PROMISE."

Conservative papers print a cartoon, under the title "Keeping His Promise." It represents Sir Robert Borden "hammering out the crooks in the army contractor," and refers to the Davidson Commission now probing the various scandals in connection with early purchases of war supplies. Sir Robert Borden may be keeping his promise to investigate; but he must accept some share of responsibility for the necessity of making such a promise. He is responsible for retaining the patronage list system, which is more or less directly responsible for the wrongs he is keeping his promise to investigate. Sir Robert is not personally to blame for the grip the iniquitous patronage list has upon the country. He, however, can learn wisdom from events. This war has been an eye-opener in many ways. It has revealed defects, that have at least the saving merit, that they emphsize the necessity of improvement. If Sir Robert will take his courage in both hands and abolish the patronage list—he will add to his record one of the most important and wholesome achievements of his regime. There is no doubt that the patronage list, and the opportunities for collusion and crookedness it provides, with the atmosphere it creates; with the principle of the spoils system it helps exploit, is the parent of a great deal of wrong-doing that shames the public life of Canada. We are fighting a war to give predominance to straightforward, honest principles of individual and national, and international action, and administration of private and public trusts. Sir Robert is not personally to blame for the heritage of the patronage list, as an expression of a wrong system, but he has a chance of ending it. Office imposes responsibilities; but it gives no rights—especially does it not give rights to one section of the people to undue advantages from its relations to the dominant party, such as cannot legitimately come from public administration that rescognizes its responsibility towards the people as a whole—fairness to all, favours to none.

ANOTHER MUCH - NEEDED SOLDIERS' FUND.

Gratitude is one of the noblest sentiments of the human heart. It is in our present case a complement of our patriotism. We are urging soldiers to enlist in the fight for freedom and humanity, and humanity counseis that we provide for the disablement that may result from active participation by our soldiers in battle. Here is a chance for a new direction of the activities of our home-stayers, who cannot fight. The Dominion Government has very properly recognized the need of providing a Disablement Fund. It has appointed a Military Hospital Commission, with a cabinet minister a member of it; thus officially recognizing the organization.

Hospitals and convalescent homes, and means of providing assistance for permanently disabled soldiers will be needed. This war is on our part a war of sacrifice; our soldiers put all they have on the altar of sacrifice — their physical energy, their health, and in some cases their lives. We, who cannot enter the fighting lines, must also make our share of sacrifice. In our case, however, we only sacrifice our means; only need to sacrifice some of our personal comforts, not to speak of luxuries; and there are many of us who do not need to do even this to be of substantial help. Senator Loughheed, Acting Minister of Militia, has officially announced that the contributions of machine guns and funds for them have provided all of these weapons, that can be profitably used. Of course the presentation of a machine gun is a little more spectacular; seems to be a more direct and forcible contribution to actual fighting. But that is not all. Incidental to fighting are all sorts of requirements. We must look to a patriotic fund to care for the immediate needs of the dependents of the bread-winners who are under the colours; we must provide Red Cross funds to care for the wounded and sick; and we must finlly provide for wounded and disabled soldiers who may be sent home sorely in need of help.

The Disablement Fund provides an opening for our liberality; and seeing that machine guns are, for the present provided for, the fund for disabled soldiers and the treatment of others in hospitals and convalescent homes, is a patriotic necessity.

THE ROSS RIFLE.

We are all jealous of the reputation of Canada, and feel like resenting any imputation upon the quality of anything we contribute to the fighting now going on. We hear nothing but words of praise for the bravery, resource, and all-round high fighting qualities of the soldiers we send. Our boots have been criticised, but it is hoped we have got over that; our contributions of soldiers' comforts, our hospital supplies have filled the bill. But we sometimes hear that the qualities of our Ross rifle have been disparaged; we are told that it has not stood the test of active service; that it has been condemned, and the Lee Enfield of the Britsih army substituted. This is a blow to our pride—a reflection upon the judgment of our Minister of Militia, Sir Sam Hughes. It is a pleasure to first use the energetic Sam's new title of dignity in connection with his patriotic championship of the Ross Rifle. When his fellow Conservatives, for political purposes, were loud in condemnation of the Ross rifle on account largely of its associations with the government of their political opponents, Sir Sam stood up like a man, single handed against all detractors in defence of the Ross rifle. And his championship is justified by actual test, which has shown that the Ross rifle, as compared with the Lee-Enfield, is far quicker, and simpler in action, carries further, is more easily cleaned." The Lee-Enfield was not substituted for the Koss on account of lack of merit of the latter, but simply for reasons of military expediency. The reasons for the substitution are contained in the following extract from a letter of a soldier at the front. Roy Weller, to his father, in St. Catharines, Mr. J. L. Weller, superintendent Welland Canal and, by the way, a brother of the late Judge Weller of this city. He writes:

"Much prominence has been given in British papers about the Ross rifle being taken away from us and the Lee-Enfield substituted. In case you do not know why, I will tell you. In Canada the Ross rifle was put under the hardest of tests and stood up fine. Now all British service rifles are supposed to be .303 calibre, but in order to get the high velocity required, the Ross is made about .302. Canadian ammunition is also made 1-1000 of an inch smaller than the British, and in the Ross rifle works magnificently; in fact, it is betetr made than British ammunition. Now, of course, when we take over a section of the line, we also take over the reserve supply of ammunition, which is not always Canadian made, and with British cartridges the Ross rifle, after very many rounds of rapid fire, will sometimes jam, so in spite of the fact that our old rifle was far quicker and simpler action, carried farther, and was more easily cleaned, we had to give it up, much against our will."

AMERICANS KNOW CANADA.

This country is so near Canada, and so thoroughly informed concerning the extent, resources and progress of its neighbour across the northern boundary, that it has no doubts about the future of Canadian finances. Thousands of Americans have visited the principal cities of the Dominion since the war began, and they are well aware of the conditions existing there. Such facts explain the great rush to buy notes of the Canadian Government offered in the New York market. Americans know Canada. They do not have to rely upon second-hand information about that country.—Cleveland Leader.

SOUR GRAPES.

The Wall Street Journal is authority for the statement that—

For several years before the war started Bethlehem was shipping from 60 per cent. to 70 per cent. of the ordnance output to Germany.

Thus, when Germany could buy ordnance and take it home, it was all right for the United States to sell it to her. It is quite in keeping with German logic to set up now that it is wrong to do the same thing for the allies. All the world knows that if she could carry them away, Germany would to-day be a heavy buyer of war munitions in the United States. It is Austro German wounded pride at inability to take the goods away, not any wrong on the part of the United States, that prompted the Austrian protest.—Winnipeg Telegram.

A RECORD WITHOUT PARALLEL.

In view of the activity of the German and Austrian submarines in the present war the comparative immunity from loss has been the more remarkable when the enormous proportions of the traffic are considered. A report to the British Parliament made by the First Lord of the Admiralty stated that in the first six months there had been moved by sea, including Belgian and French troops, more than one million men without any accident or loss of life. Another six months passed since this statement was made, before the loss of a transport occurred, a record truly without parallel in the history of warfare, and a tribute to the efficiency of the Allied sea power.—New York Herald.

"THE OLD LOW GAME."

Something looking very suspiciously like the old low game of denouncing Laurier for being an imperialist under way. At the same time some papers professing patriotism in this Province of Ontario kept the party game going, by insinuating lack of loyalty against him.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier may not always have held up the torch of Liberalism in Canada as he might have done. He held office for fifteen years and allowed the protectionist tariff against British trade to remain. But at least there is no leading statesman in the public life of Canada to-day more loyal than Sir Wilfrid Laurier to the British tradition of freedom. The ignoble political game of crushing him between the millstones of nationalism in Quebec and jingoism in Ontario would not be tolerated for long by the Canadian people understood it. There should be an end of it. Hon. P. E. Blondin might do something to end it by making a recruiting tour through the provinces.—Ottawa Citizen (Ind. Conservative.)

ANZAC.

[illegible] Peninsula [illegible] New Zealand [illegible] ANZAC [illegible] Corps [illegible] Better [illegible] the British Empire. The men from the antipodes have dug themselves into an entrenchment quite without parallel in the whole story of military achievement, according to this authority. "The steep brown slopes of chasms," he writes, "tumbling six hundred feet down to the surf have been honey-combed into an incredible human warren." Guns have been raised to astounding positions, and now slaughter from spurs of apparent impossibility.

In connection with the name coined from the Australasian expeditionary force, a captured Turk is reported to have pointed out a curious coincidence. The name Anzac he says is actually a Turkish word meaning "only just." Looking to the conditions under which the landing was effected on this precarious bluff, the applicability of the word is thought to be somewhat striking. One other point deserves notice and that is the unanimous tribute paid alike by British and Australasian forces to the clean fighting of the Turkish foe. "His courage and humanity have gained for him a respect which the Germans might well covet." If this is so what the Germans have lost the "unspeakable" Turk has gained.—Toronto World

GERMANY'S SHAMELESS MENDACITY.

The indictment against Germany lies in a corrupt and seditious propaganda directed against the peace and welfare of the United States and supported by hypocrisy and falsehood. In view of the German purchases of military supplies, as proved by the World, the German campaign for an embargo on munitions of war is probably the most impudent and shameless piece of mendacity of which a great nation was ever officially guilty. The American people do not care whether Germany buys arms here or not. The market is open and Germany has the same rights as any other belligerent so far as this Government is concerned. But the American people care a great deal whether a pretended friendly Government is meddling with the domestic affairs of the United States, whether it is conspiring against the President, whether it is disseminating public opinion, buying strikes and industrial turmoil, inciting sedition against the Government and organizing treason.—New York World

SAYS SCHWAB OWNS PAPER.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—According to the News From Vienna, Charles M. Schwab is the real purchaser of Le Journal of Paris, which was recently sold, and he is the chief of a syndicate of American steel men and armament manufacturers who are anxious to have an organ in Europe for trade purposes after the war.

Man would contend that two and two did not make four if his interest were affected by this position.—Hodge Selfishness is that detestable vice which it is one will forgive in others, and be conscious without in himself.—Henry Ward Beecher

The Futile Gift of Prophecy Applied to War's-End Forecasts

Examiner Special.

Mr. E. P. Ryan of Ottawa is a good man. We believe he is the only Canadian who has yet dared to make a prophecy as to when the war will end. Writing an interesting review of the situation in the Ottawa Journal he remarks:

I look to Germany to make one more supreme effort to capture Calais. I expect to see her beaten in the attempt at a cost to both sides which will stagger humanity and furnish the pacifists with their strongest arguments for disarmament. I expect to see the Balkans declare war against the Teutonic allies within weeks if not days, the Dardanelles forced and Turkey crushed before November 1st, and the United States in the war on the side of Britain and her allies before next New Year's Day, and that the Russians reorganized and resupplied will be again knocking at the door of Galacia. Already the cry for peace is being raised in Germany. The people were promised a short and victorious war. If things go as I expect they will, within the next six months, the big Kaiser and the little Kaiser, those rulers by "divine right," upon whom rests the bloodguilt of the most devasting war known to the history of the human race, will be compelled to hear the cry of their people and stop further needless bloodshed and slaughter. I look to see the war ended by March 31, 1916. That is my guess.

Arguing from recent premises this all looks as reasonable as a forecast can look. But Fate has a hand of taking a hand in matters of war as well as in matters of love, and Fate by a single stroke, may change the whole aspect of the war and make the most reasonable prophecy look like a piece of superfluous folly. Things may even now be brewing that will bring the war to a sudden end. On the other hand it may drag on for years. The rulers at any rate are showing that they are counting on a long war, and are making their preparations accordingly. This is a fight to a finish, as far as the allies are concerned, and no premature peace such as being suggested from Germany from time to time, will for a moment be considered. The Germans have never counted on the war being a long one. Their trust has been in swift overwhelming rushes that would absolutely crush their opponents. Their "overwhelming" rushes resulted in overwhelming nobody but the civil population of Belgium. At the outset of the war they prphesied that Paris would be, they prophesied that Paris would be six weeks, and London by last October. The schedule was readjusted from time to time. Finally, Herr von Jagow, the German secretary for foreign affairs, made the following prophecy as a New Years message to the world:

We do not need to worry. Things are progressing excellently for Germany. Let me make the following forecast: By the end of February we will have smashed up the Russians. The end of March will see the finish of the French army. In April we will finally start reckoning with Great Britain, which I expect will be finished by the middle of May. All Germany's enemies will be beaten by June at any rate.

That is the last official prophecy that came out of Germany, to the best of our belief. How ludicrous it appears now! And how ludicrous appear all the promises with which Germany has buoyed up the hope of her soldiers and her people! They are not given to prophessying in Germany now. Even the statement credited to the kaiser that the war will be over in October, is promptly denied officially. Perhaps they like Mr. Ryan, have visions of an early ending of the war in another way.—Montreal Telegraph-Herald

"Nothing Succeeds Like Circulation"

It is the circulation of The Examiner that gets it so many "Want" and "For Sale" advertisements — a circulation that gives the advertiser every confidence of producing quick results.

When you write a "Want", tell all the important facts. If you are advertising for help, tell just what is to be expected of the applicants. As a matter of fairness, those who seek employment should know all the principal facts regarding a position.

"For Sale" advertising in The Examiner will show the facility with which you can turn "used things" that are no longer needed, into money quickly.

Two Members of Small Command Survived Dash Through Barricade

A series of thrilling adventures was related by an officer of Lancers who returned to London from the front and was awaiting to rejoin his regiment.

I was, with my squadron, cut off from my regiment at the battle of the Aisne, he said. I had succeeded in extricating my men from a very difficult position, when we were espied by a large body of Uhlans, who immediately pursued us. We were, of course, quite outnumbered.

My command was too small to warrant my endangering the lives of my men in an engagement which could only have but one ending, so we endeavored to escape. We were, at the time, near a small village, through which our road led. We were galloping madly down the road when a sudden bend revealed to us a large barricade manned by Germans. We had no alternative but to ride straight at the obstacle, which we accordingly did.

All our horses were shot. But I and another man had the good fortune to fall right over the barricade. My companion proved to be a prize fighter, and, having lost his weapons, he lay about him with his fists. Together we managed to break through, and, dashing down a side street, at length contrived to hide in a wood. Although pursued by the Germans we were not discovered, and the next day luckily for us, they left the neighborhood.

We were now in the enemy's country and were only able to travel by night, having to remain in hiding during the day. We were greatly helped by the peasants, who gave us food and (French peasants' dress to wear. On one occasion the Germans entered a village where we were hiding, and we were only saved by being hid under a bed until they departed. They had heard there were some soldiers in hiding in that village, and we had a very close shave, as they searched the very house in which we were.

At length, after [illegible] nights weary marching, hiding by day and journeying by night, we covered the 120 odd miles which separates Soissons from Boulonge. Here we were able to take ship for England, where, in due course, we reported ourselves at headquarters.

HEADACHE?

Thousands of persons who have never known a day's sickness in any other form are subject to frequent attacks of Headache that almost drive them mad.

Whatever the nature may be and the cause, the immediate condition that produces the pain is a congestion or filling up of the blood vessels of the brain with blood, thus causing a pressure on the brain cells and nerve filaments.

In treating all forms of Headache the first thing to do is to relieve the congestion of the blood vessels of the brain. Abbey's Effervescent Salt in laxative doses does this promptly.

Sold everywhere at 25c. and 60c.

Full blooded people who are subject to frequent attacks of Headache can be entirely relieved by taking laxative doses of the Salt every morning. Headaches from Indigestion and Biliousness are also entirely banished by continuing the use of the Salt until the normal action of the liver and stomach is restored. 6

Sold by E. L. Payne and McDermid & Jury.

Canadians Enliven Life at Folkestone

Special to The Examiner:

[illegible] watering places must be dull when compared with their gaiety in normal times, but Folkestone and other popular resorts around Shorncliffe where the several Canadian divisions are stationed, are enjoying remarkable vitality. Instead of being wrapt in gloom they are blooming. When asked the secret of this town's exhilarating life a naval officer replied: "Tis the Maple Leaf that does it."

Perhaps it is only natural that the band of the Folkestone Parade includes in its programme the airs, "The Maple Leaf For Ever" and "O Canada." The Town Crier of Folkestone Writes a Poem

The following poem entitled "Sons of Canada," was composed by the Town Crier of Folkestone, England, near which the 21st Battalion C.E.F., is stationed, and was sent to the Examiner by Quartermaster Sergeant Sam Thomas of Peterborough, who is with the 21st.

Sons of Canada.

O Canada, O Canada, your sons are loyal and brave,
They've answered the Motherland's call, her colours for to save,
Your sons are bone and muscle with hearts of steel and grit,
And when they meet the Germans, the Huns won't them forget,
So send us ammunition with plenty of explosive shells
And soon we'll show the Germans the shortest cut to — not Funbridge Wells

O Canada, O Canada, the Land of the Maple Leaf,
Your sons have fought most gallantly and come to our relief
They rushed the German trenches, and pursued the fleeing Hun,
You'd have split your sides with laughter if you'd have seen the fun
The Germans ran like madmen to seek some safe repose,
But when they felt the bayonet thrust they soon turned up their toes.

O Canada, O Canada, brave are the sons you've got,
Who come from Lake Ontario, Winnipeg and every other spot,
We're steadily marching onward, the victory we shall win,
And soon old England's flag will be flying in Berlin
Then great rejoicing there will be throughout the entire world,
And every nation will point with pride to England's flag unfurled.

POLICE HUNT FOR SLAYER OF WELL KNOWN MANUFACTURER

Examiner Special:

New York, August 25—One hundred detectives searched Harlem for some trace of the man who slew John Hildebrandt, the rich retired cigar manufacturer, in his home, No. 1446 Fifth Avenue, on Saturday night.

The police are satisfied it was a one-man job; that the murderer was short of stature, and not the physical equal of Hildebrandt; that robbery was the motive; that he was a crude worker—the depraved, drug-dulled gangster type, and that either he was under the influence of cocaine when he committed the murder or he became panic-stricken when Hildebrandt began to get the better of him, and fled.

The Hildebrandt flat was the fourth the man entered. In one—the home of Abraham Hirsch, on the fifth floor of No. 5 West One Hundred and Seventeenth street—he got a few trinkets and a few articles of clothing. He gained entrance to the Hirsch flat in the same manner that he got into Hildebrandt's, by breaking the window on the fire-escape, turning the catch and hoisting the sash.

CLUMSY METHOD USED

He robbed the Hirsch flat about 8 o'clock or soon thereafter. He next entered by the same clumsy method the flat occupied by Herman Rosen, directly beneath Hirsch's. But in Rosen's he got nothing. Both families were away.

Then, everything indicates that he climbed the fire escape to the roof. From the floor of No. 5 West One Hundred and Seventeenth street, it was a simple thing to walk over to the Hildebrandt house. The murdered man owned the house in which he lived.

All the houses in the block are five stories high. They form a hollow square. Only a four foot light shaft separates the corner house. The man could swing across the space easily. The police believe that he chose the Hildebrandt house by mere chance. The Hildebrandts occupied the top-most flat. The one adjoining them is tenantless. The shade was pulled down. The burglar broke the glass, and turned the hasp. He raised the shade and saw the place was empty.

The Hildebrandt window was only a step away. The old man was seated in the front of the house looking out on Fifth Avenue. It was Harlem's night out. The detectives say that nine-tenths of Harlem is on the streets between 7 and 11 on Saturday night—shopping, marketing and pleasure-seeking.

MADE WAY TO BEDROOM

The lone worker broke the window, unbuckled the latch and then stepped inside. He did not hesitate at the old-fashioned desk near the window—all not though it looked promising of old papers and maybe hoarded money. He made his way directly to the tiny bedroom next to the room in which Hildebrandt was sitting.

For some strange reason he began to rifle a most unpretentious dresser. Hildebrandt heard him and ran toward. He was fifty-three years of age but as vigorous as a man of forty. He weighed 180 pounds and was about 5 feet 8 inches tall. His son, John, a student in Columbia, and a graduate of Fordham, declared yesterday that his father was his superior physically.

Coroner Riordan declares everything indicated that a terrible struggle ensued. The dark red splashes show the two men fought all over the bedroom, and into the front room. Coroner Riordan said yesterday that the murderer must have been covered with blood and that Hildebrandt's hands showed that he had given a good account of himself. The presumed stab wounds on Hildebrandt's head, the Coroner said, may have been made by a black jack or with brass knuckles.

SHOT STRUCK UPWARD

But preliminary investigation of the gun wound that caused Hildebrandt's death indicated that either the robber was on his knees or was under Hildebrandt, because the shot struck upward.

The murderer got only $30 and a very cheap watch, valued at no more than $2, from Hildebrandt. He made his escape in all probability, by way of the fire escape and over the roofs.

The murderer's left shoe had a nail or a sharp bit of iron on the sole. The rungs of the fire escape and the gravel roofs bear witness to this. The floor in several places is scratched similarly. He was a very short man because he had to climb over the low parapets between the houses. He could not step over.

My father had no enemies, declared John Hildebrandt, Jr., yesterday. I believe robbery was the motive. I do not believe there is anything to the theory that he was murdered by a vengeful push cart peddler. He had nothing to do with them. In as a member of the Harlem Merchants and Taxpayers Association, was prosecuting them. He never carried a large sum of money.

FINGER PRINTS TAKEN

From the broken windows the police took all the available finger prints. Inspector Cray declares that they were blurred and useless. Inspectors Cray and Faurot are inclined to the belief the murder was the work of a cocaine fiend. Today the cocaine squad, for the first time will become a homicide corps, and will seek evidence along the lines suggested by Cray and Faurot.

Arts and Crafts Column

In this column, conducted by Mr. Hughson Johnstone, painter and decorator, 510 College street, will be answered on Wednesdays questions of the kind given below, for the benefit of those who, in this period of stringency and enforced and suggested economy, might like doing their own work. Questions relating to painting, sign writing, paperhanging, furniture polishing and decorating may be sent to the Examiner, and will receive attention in due course.

W.R.P., Peterborough—What can I do with the top of a small oak table on which I had some flower pots standing and the round marks have stained right into the wood? It is a good table and all the lower part is in good condition. Should I have it grained to match the bottom?

Ans.—No. I do not think you should grain it if you can possibly restore it to its natural state, especially if it is a "good table." You might try this method. Clean off all the remaining old polish with a solution of strong washing soda water or some varnish remover. After you have cleaned it off thoroughly, cut a block of wood about 4 inches square and with fairly coarse sand paper under the block rub the top until smooth using circular motions. Then apply a wash of oxalic acid about 2 oz. to pint of water, allowing it to stand on the stains until dry. Now sand paper the top again with comparatively fine paper. This time and all subsequent times with the grain of the wood. If the stains are stubborn be then likewise, and repeat the oxalic operation. When the stains are about gone go over the whole top to make the colour uniform. After which, oil, fill or stain, whichever is necessary to finish similar to the other part of table.

Havelock—Please tell me in The Examiner how much paper and border I have to buy for my room. It is 12 feet by 12 feet.

Ans.—You do not give the height of your room, so I will suppose it to be 10 feet high, and allowing for one door and one window your room will take 15 rolls wall 7 rolls ceiling, 20 rolls border.

Amateur—Ans.—Will you please tell me what is the very best way to stain my bookcase and floor. I put it upon all myself.

Ans.—In your case I will merely follow directions. You will have a professionally finished floor. Be sure that your floor is well shaped and sand-papered perfectly smooth. Next, remove all the dust, first by brushing, then with a slightly damp cloth. Now, take equal parts of raw linseed oil and turpentine, and go over the floor with it. Then with a bunch of cotton waste or some old cloth take the roughly wipe off the surplus oil. Allow this to harden say 18 hours. Then apply a coat of liquid granite, spreading it well on, rather lay it on thin and even. This is important. Allow this to stand two days after which give it a good rubbing with a soft bag that has been washed. Now, remove all the dust and it is possible that the floor may be ready for use. If not, repeat the process between 60 and 70 degrees F. with very little dust. Two coats of varnish may be required, but I think the first will be quite sufficient. Allow each coat 48 hours for drying. Be sure and put on the varnish as quickly as possible, and if you can get a person to help you, one can put on the varnish while the other is brushing out the bubbles. Be careful to rub all air bubbles carefully, a piece of paper is a good guide. When you have finished, examine the floor closely and remove any dust. This will give you an excellent result, and with ordinary care and attention will last for years. If you will have a floor hard to beat.

Merchant, Peterborough—I have a sign the ground of which is a sort of black sand, the letters gold. I have [illegible] and the sand keeps coming off. Where do I purchase this sand, and how is it put on?

Ans.—The sand is known as smalt, and I would not advise you to attempt to smalt your sign. But if you get some drop black, ground in Japan, and make a thin paint with this and turpentine, with say, about a table spoon full of good varnish to a pint of your paint. And with a soft brush go rapidly over the old smalt, when it will look almost like new. Once you start do not stop it till you finish, as it dries very fast, and if the edge you are working from dries faster than you apply it a shiny mark will show.

Bob Coburg, Ont.—Will you be kind enough to tell me how to put gold letters on glass?

Ans.—The above will be answered next Wednesday, space will not permit this issue.

German Opinion of Americans

One factor is the general humbug and hypocrisy of American public opinion. Religion, virtue, abstemiousness, candor and honor are the stock phrases with which Americans are stuffed on every possible and impossible occasion, and the supposed violence done to the neutrality of Belgium was grist to the mills of these hypocrites. In any case, people in Germany need not bother themselves in the least about what the Americans think or say, as long as the German arms win. That is all that matters, for the American is a thorough opportunist, and never has any sympathy with the side that is beaten.—Hamburger Fremdenblatt.

A Peevish German Editor

It is of course not to be expected that the wonderful resourcefulness of our "cousins" is exhausted by the latest addition of the Fiji Islanders to the Belgian war theatre.

The backwoods of the world still harbor thousands of savages and semi-savages, man-monkeys and ...pish men, who are no doubt only too willing to stand by their British brothers in the common struggle for right and civilization.—Magdeburg Zeitung.

Barnardo Boys Soldiers

Dr. Barnardo's Homes have directly or indirectly contributed 731 young men to the King's forces. Of these, 490 are in the Canadian Contingent, 167 enlisted at home, 66 have passed through the Watts' Naval Training School, and 17 are buglers in the new army, a proud record.

Germans in Arms Plant End Lives

Special to The Examiner

HASTINGS-ON-HUDSON, Aug. 25. Within the last week two watchmen, both Germans, of the National Conduit and Cable Company, which is manufacturing munitions of war for the Allies, have committed suicide.

They are Christopher Berner, fifty-five years old, of Rome, N.Y., and Gustav Roth, fifty, of Hastings.

Berner ended his life at 1 o'clock this morning. It had been noticed that he was melancholy since he began his work as watchman of the big plant following the death of Groth, Monday.

Berner's death was witnessed by the captain of a barge, who saw the man running toward the dock waving his lantern. Thinking the signal was intended for the barge, the captain watched the approaching figure. When Berner arrived at the edge of the dock the barge captain shouted a warning.

Berner took another step, plunged into the water and, to the amazement of the witness, did not rise. The lantern, released as Berner struck the water, floated for a moment, like a death light, then sank.

When Berner's body was recovered it was found that he had filled the pockets of his clothing with stones.

Gustav Groth, whom Berner succeeded as watchman, was found dead at the plant last Monday morning. He had shot himself through the head.

Whether the two German watchmen grew depressed at the sight of the quantities of shell casings manufactured for the Allies by the company, or whether they had been the subject of derision on the part of other Germans living here is not known.

The National Conduit and Cable Company has in course of construction five immense factories where there will be made small arms ammunition for the Allies.

Voice of The People

Editor of The Examiner

What looks like a sham bit neglect of duty on the part of some one was revealed when visiting the Harbour Master's office at the Crescent street wharf at an early hour yesterday morning. The filthy condition of the lavatories was a surprise to those who saw them, and a reflection on the otherwise sanitary equipment installed in these public offices. The neglected condition of the rooms, floors, wash basins and lavatories, was so great that no one would dare to use them except at the risk of their health. In both the women's and men's apartments was dirt to excess, and it was quite evident that the premises had not been cleaned all summer. The windows were all closed down tightly, no fresh air was admitted, the floors were littered with dirty papers and dust, and the vessels foul and unsightly.

Whose business is it to look after these offices. Surely to have no place of the kind for a public convenience that allows them to become a menace to the health of the public. How is that this pest hole has escaped the attention of Sanitary Inspector Spence. Some one ought to get a move on at once.

War Tax Stamp Has Not Caused People to Write Fewer Letters

While Ottawa reports an increase in revenue there is in that city a decrease of about thirty per cent in the volume of mail as a result of the war tax on postage.

An official stated that the increased revenue in Peterborough would show that the number of letters is not on the decrease, but if anything on the increase here, this being due chiefly to the war, a result of the correspondence to soldiers.

"GOD'S ATTITUDE TOWARDS SIN" WAS HIS SUBJECT

The usual big audience which has marked the attendance at the big Tabernacle meetings for more than five weeks was present last night to hear Evangelist Sharpe.

Although it was thought Sunday night that the Stringer Sisters would have to return home they have been able to arrange to remain throughout the meetings which are expected to close next Sunday night. They rendered one of their most touching selections last night, entitled, "Jesus Wants to Pardon You," besides singing several other favourites, delighting the big audience.

After Rev. Mr. Peever had led in prayer, Mr. Sharpe spoke on "God's Attitude Toward Sin." In referring to the origin of sin in the fall of Adam he said, "The devil has been deceiving men and women with the lie which he told Adam and Eve from their day down to the present time. Did God wink at their sin? No sir! And God isn't winking at sin in Peterborough. You husbands can blame it on your wives, and you wives can blame it on your husband, but that won't screen it from God's punishment. You don't love God if you're not a Christian. Did God wink at Cain's sins? No sir! And He won't wink at you either if you hinder souls from coming to God. You can't wink at sin with the God of the Bible. You can do anything you want to with the man-made God of to-day, but you can't fool the God of the Bible. Addressing Christians the preacher said there was another sin that God didn't wink at, and that was the sin of grumbling.

"You sit at the dinner table after attending the Sunday morning service and you grumble at the preacher. He didn't talk just to suit you, he talked too long, etc., etc. Do you know that is a sin—a sin to grumble? The God of the Bible lives in Peterborough and if you've been doing the grumbling act confess your sin to Him.

"A man once came to his preacher and said that he had at last found his talent, and that was to criticize. Well, said the preacher, I would advise you to take that talent out like the man of the Bible and bury it, and be sure you bury it face downward, so if it ever comes to life it will dig down instead of up." I say to you tonight if you want to sin get out of the church and do your sinning. The thing that is sapping the life out of the church is the people who are living a sinful life in the church. If you're bound to sin, take your name off the church roll or better still, confess your sin and get right with God. I was condemned in the papers the other night for preaching against card- the dance and the theatre. Well there was a preacher in this tent that night who had preached for 45 years, who came to me at the close of the service and said, I never saw a man or woman who followed these things who ever amounted to a straw in spiritual life. God would have you either cold or hot, but lukewarm you are neither. He says He will spue you out of His mouth. You can get down and put on an alabaster face and be a Christian. Who is at ease in Zion? That man who hasn't spoken to a soul about Jesus Christ for a year although he has met thousands of people personally. That mother who has never taken her little darling on her knee and told them about Jesus Christ is at ease in Zion. Oh, my God, mothers awaken. Take the little children on your knee and tell them about Jesus before they learn about the devil.

The sin I urge upon Jesus Christ that's the black sin, that's the scarlet sin, that's the sin that touches the heart of God. Some day you will have to meet the Father of the Christ you have rejected and God pity you when that time comes. You are going to meet the God of the Bible some day and that God will take cognizance of His laws on you and God help you if you meet Him with sin on you. Jesus Christ will take that sin of years and wash it white in His blood. Then go into the fountain and be washed clean and Jesus will [illegible] Service tonight at eight o'clock.

"Joke is on Me" His Suicide Note

Special to The Examiner.

NEWARK, N.J., Aug. 25.—A young man, who is believed to be William Thomas Wood, of Boston, Mass., committed suicide in the Essex Hotel here. His body was found on the floor of his room with a bullet wound in his right temple and a revolver in his hand. He was last seen alive about noon by one of the chambermaids and was lying on the bed partly dressed, and apparently sleeping.

On a bureau in the room was a sealed note addressed to Miss Miriam Wood, National City Bank, Bonding Department, No. 55 Wall street, New York. It was taken by County Physician William H. McKenzie, who will give it to Miss Woods if she can be found. Another note addressed to the coroner reads:

"Sorry to trouble you, but the joke seems to be on me. You will find my suit case at No. 7111 Broad Street."

There was also found a silver watch on the case of which was inscribed "J. H. A.," and two class pins of the Marshall Springs School and Short-Jeff. There was $56.51 in the pockets of his clothing.

He had registered at the hotel on Saturday night under the name given above. Nothing was found to show why he had killed himself. His linen and underwear were marked William T. Wood.

ST. MICHAEL'S NEW HEAD

Rev. Father H. Carr, C.S.B., B.A., has been appointed president of St. Michael's College, to succeed Rev. Robert McBrady, who has held that office for the last three years. The official announcement was made by the Very Rev. N. Roche, Provincial of the Basilian Fathers.

Father Carr is an honour graduate of Toronto University and a member of the University Senate. For the last eight years he has been engaged at St. Michael's in the department of classics and philosophy. He is well known in educational circles as a man of great ability and untiring zeal.

BUSINESS TRANSACTED AT MEETING OF NORWOOD COUNCIL

Hydro-Electric Commission Notify Council That Mr. H. A. Fife Has Been Appointed Electrical Inspector For This District—Norwood News

Special to The Examiner:

The regular meeting of the Village Council was held on Wednesday evening. Those present were Reeve B. W. Squire and Councillors Hendren, Morrison and Portway.

The following accounts were presented and on motion of Councillor Morrison, seconded by Council Hendren, ordered to be paid: W. Campbell, 39 hrs. cutting weeds, $5.85; F. Riddon, 7 hrs. cutting weeds, $1.05; L. Poffer, salary, $20, work $1.50, taking J. Woodcock to House of Refuge, $2.00, $23.50; W. Ivey, 24 hrs. cutting crush, $2.10; Wm. Portway for safety razor for Capt. Neilson, $5.00.

A communication was read from the Hydro-Electric Power Commission notifying the Council that Mr. H. A. Fife had been appointed electrical inspector for the district.

A resolution re telephones was received from the Stamford Board of Trade.

Moved by Councillor Morrison, seconded by Councillor Portway, that this council pass and forward a similar resolution.

The resolution from Stamford was as follows:

That we, the Board of Trade of the Township of Stamford, are of the unanimous opinion that the telephone system of Ontario should be owned and operated by the Ontario government, as they are in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, in order that the citizens may get cheaper rates and better service, and further that we advise that the said telephone systems be bought at their physical valuation, or that the Ontario government establish a system of its own and furnish service to the citizens at cost, and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Premier of the Province.

Moved by Councillor Morrison, seconded by Councillor Portway, that Mr. P. M. Grover be granted $15.00 to build a cement walk on Victoria street in front of his property.—Carried.

Mr. H. A. Fife, Hydro Electric Inspector, addressed the Council.

Girls Attacked In a Club

Special to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, Aug. 25.—A chair crashing through a window on the first floor of No. 781 Eighth Avenue, the home of the Caribou Club, a chauffeurs' social organization, yesterday attracted passersby and Patrolman De Guero, who was on post half a block away. As they glanced upward, a girl with dishevelled hair and clothing leaned out and screamed for help while someone inside tried to drag her back.

De Guero blew his police whistle as he ran toward the building followed by half a dozen men.

Breaking in the door, they hurried upstairs to find the young woman crouching hysterically in the corner of the clubroom. In the rear could be heard the moans of another and the shuffling of feet on the stairway leading to the roof.

De Guero followed the footsteps while his companions hurried to the rear windows. On the roof the policeman captured Edward Simmons, No. 430 Twentysixth Street, and Patrick Donohue, No. 350 West Forty-seventh Street, chauffeurs.

Lying on the ground in the rear of the building was found a young woman who said she was Martha Held, nineteen years old, of No. 2492 Cambrelling Avenue, the Bronx. She declared she had leaped from the first floor window to escape an attack by Simmons, Donohue and several other men. She escaped serious injury. The other young woman, who said she was Florence Bell, twenty years old, of No. 300 East One Hundred and Forty-second Street, corroborated her statements.

They declared they accompanied two men to the club, having been assured there was a dance going on. They had been there only a short time when they were attacked.

On the upper floor of the Eighth Avenue address is Washington Hall, where the political organization of former State Senator George Washington Plunkitt meets. Plunkitt announced there was no connection between the Caribou Club and his organization, in proof of which he exhibited the rooms of the Caribou Club, which had been completely wrecked, he stated, by some of his followers after they learned of the attack on the young women.

HOW YOU MAY REDUCE YOUR WEIGHT

Overstoutness is a very unwelcome condition especially in the present day, when slender figures are so fashionable, and every reader of this paper has noticed the tendency of some people to put on an excessive amount of fat.

If you happen to be one of those whose weight is more than it should be, don't try to starve yourself, eat all you want, but go to your druggist and get oil of orilene in capsule form and take one with each meal.

Oil of orilene increases the oxygen carrying power of the blood and dissolves the fatty tissue, in many cases at nearly the rate of one lb. per day. Be sure to get oil of orilene in capsule form. It is sold only in original sealed packages. Any good druggist has it, or a large size box will be sent on receipt of [illegible] Address [illegible] 140, Montreal, Can.

CAPT. ROGERS KILLED AT DARDANELLES CAME FROM MILITARY FAMILY

Gallant Officer Had a Host of Friends in Peterborough--His Ancestors Assisted in the Defence of Quebec and He Was One of a Long Line of Soldiers.

The following cable was received by Mr. Edward R. Rogers, 102 Wellington Avenue, Toronto, from the Militia Secretary of the Militia Office in London, England:

"Deeply regret to have to inform you that Lieut. V. S. C. Rogers, 6th Pioneers, attached to 9th East Yorkshire Regiment, officially reported from Dardanelles killed in action between 7th and 11th August. Mr. Secretary Chamberlain desires to express most sympathy with you in the loss of the gallant officer."

Lieut. Captain Rogers was born in the City of Calgary, in the Province of Alberta in November, 1888, and resided in that city for ten years, attending the public schools there. He moved with his family to Toronto Junction in the year 1898 and passed the public school examination for entrance into the High School, and was a member of the Cadet Corps which was in vogue at that time.

In the fall of 1903 he went to Trinity College School, Port Hope, and remained there until 1907, being the Captain of the Cadet Corps at that school and winning the rifle for being the best shot. Dr. Ruby, who was then Head Master at the school, states that Vaux Rogers was one of the best and finest boys that ever attended the school.

In the summer of 1907 Captain Rogers passed the entrance examinations to the Royal Military College at Kingston, and went to that place in the fall of 1907, remaining there until Dec. 1909, his residence at the college was very prominent in all sports, in connection with that institution winning many prizes, and he was the first to be awarded the Chamberlain Cup, which was ever made and also won the heavyweight championship of the college. He stood 6 ft. 4 1-2 inches in height, and was familiarly called "Scotty" by his many chums and friends.

At the end of his term at the College he was awarded a Lieutenancy in the Royal Engineers, and was gazetted on account of the field work and experience that he would receive in his work as a soldier. He was notified during the early fall to report at the War Office in England, and proceeded there in October of 1910. After purchasing his outfit in London, England he was attached to the Royal Sussex Regiment in India, and proceeded there about the middle of November and his boat arrived in the Harbour at India on the same night that his family moved into their new residence which they have recently. He remained in India until July, 1914 when he was granted one year's furlough sooner than he had expected. He left India and proceeded to Australia, where he was visiting when war was proclaimed. He immediately got into communication with his official office in London, England, and sailed for New Zealand, and from there to Vancouver, and arrived in Toronto on October 1st last year.

During his residence at Bangalore, Mysore, India, he was greatly interested and took part in many of the sports connected with his Regiment, as it was awarded in very keen competition the cup for being the best Dismounted British Officer at Arms in the Army in India. He received many congratulations locally, for his brilliant achievements in the numerous events in which he had competed.

After arriving at home in October last he felt that the call to duty was his first consideration and his parents had no wish to keep him any longer than was necessary, as a very brief visit. After a week's stay he left Toronto on October 31st and arrived in England shortly after the middle of the month. He was finally attached to the East Yorkshire Regiment and did excellent work in the training of officers and men in trench warfare. So well was this work done that he was congratulated by his Commander and appointed a Captain before he left the Old Country at the Regiment to which he was attached were made Pioneers for their good work. He sailed with this Regiment from England about the end of June, and landed in the Dardanelles on the 15th of July. The country was described by those who were in it as one of the most rugged and forbidding countries in the world. He evidently went immediately into action and, after less than a month's very hard work, he fell while leading his men.

No further communication has yet been received from the War Office in England.

Captain Rogers came from a long line of soldiers who had fought for the defence of Canada through centuries past. When he attended the Tercentenary at Quebec as a Cadet from the Royal Military College he was one of the very few of the officers attending that event whose ancestors had taken part in the defence of that ancient city, and the old powder horn which was made to replace the one which was shot away from the side of his forefather, still remains a relic of ancient time.

Captain Rogers was also a great-grandnephew of Col. Robert Rogers, who came to Canada as a Military Ruler after the conquest of Wolfe, in 1759. That hero was the cause of the name of Rogers' Slide at Lake Champlain, and the place still retains the name on account of the incident which occurred. Rogers was chased by the Indians and came to a steep precipice and finding that he could not proceed further, he walked backward in his tracks until he came to a spot where he could get away. The Indians followed his track to the top of the precipice and, suddenly seeing him speeding across the ice below, they imagined that he had been assisted by the Great Spirit to get down the precipice and they feared to pursue him on that account.

The grandfather of Captain Rogers, in 1837, recruited a Company from the Peterborough district, and marched to Toronto and took part there to Navy Falls. He was the last man on board the Caroline when she was released and sent over the Falls by the British and Canadian soldiers. Again in 1866, he with his son and other relations, responded to the call of the Rebellion, in the North West, at that time.

Captain Rogers' father was Colonel of the 57th Battalion at Peterborough for some twenty-five years, and two cousins were Colonels of the Battalion at Cobourg and the Cavalry Regiment at Peterborough. At the present time he has a cousin on the staff of Sir John French, in France, another cousin as Colonel of one of the Battalions in the trenches at the front, another cousin who is Brave were on the Battleship sunk and now a prisoner of war at Brussels, Germany, another cousin in command of the military force at Simla, India, and still another in the Transportation Force at Shorncliffe, in England.

Captain Rogers was of a loveable nature and chose himself the profession that he liked best. He was a handsome, brave and fearless officer, and while many regrets have been expressed at his loss, it is felt that he died in a manner that he would have chosen himself for his country and the protection of the Empire. "For how could man die better than facing fearful odds for the ashes of his fathers and the country of his gods."

CLOVER TO FIGHT THE SLOW THISTLE

Will Smother Out Weed, According to One Man—Minister Will Lead Campaign

Special to The Examiner.

Prompt measures to check the weed nuisance in Manitoba, particularly the menace of the sow thistle, have been taken by Hon. Valentine Winkler, the new minister of agriculture in the Norris cabinet.

Mr. Winkler has put the extent of the Manitoba Agricultural College to work on the problem and the first step of Principal Reed has been to send out Professor Harrison in charge of field husbandry work. He will make an investigation of the natural conditions and report.

The sow thistle nuisance is probably across the year than it ever has been on account of the heat amount of moisture during the early summer months. The minister of agriculture states that he receives a many as half a dozen letters a day complaining of these conditions, many of them giving advice as to how the thistle may be eradicated. This morning he received a letter from D. W. Swank, 434 Newman street, Winnipeg, which he said was one of the few sensible ones he had received on the matter of weed extermination. The writer professes remarks with some comments that under the political circumstances of the time the matter of weed growth in Manitoba is not

Mrs. D. Magee and family were the guests of the former's sister, Mrs. H. Horner of Lindsay over the week-end.

ERRORS OF HISTORY

Coriolanus never allowed his mother to intercede for Rome.

Blondel, the harper, did not discover the prison in which Richard I. was confined.

Alfred never allowed the cakes to burn, nor ventured into the Danish camp disguised as a minstrel.

Fair Rosamond was not poisoned by Queen Eleanor, but died in the odor of sanctity in the convent of Godstow.

The Duke of Wellington never uttered the famous words, "Up guards and at them."

Charles Kingsley gave up his chair of modern history at Oxford because he said he considered history "largely a lie."

Chemists have proved that vinegar will not dissolve pearls nor clean rocks, in spite of the fabled exploit of Cleopatra and Hannibal.

Charles IX. did not fire upon the Huguenot with an arquebus from the window of the Louvre during the massacre of St. Bartholomew.

The siege of Troy is largely a myth even according to Homer's own account. Helen must have been sixty years old when Paris fell in love with her.

HONEY FOR SOLDIERS.

BRANTFORD, Aug. 24.—A half ton of honey will be sent to Canadian soldiers who are serving at the front, by the Brant County Beekeepers' Association which met here. Seven hundred pounds were promised, and it is expected that the remainder will be easily raised.

100,000,000 Bushels More.

Chicago—A Chicago authority commenting on the future wheat market, points out that Canada has nearly 100,000,000 bushels more wheat this year than it had in 1914. Against United States exporters it is a sharp competitor, especially as its crop must be moved as early as possible.

Norway Regulates Imports.

New York.—The Norwegian government has established what is known as a "Government Food Commission" to regulate the import of goods, something after the manner of the Overseas Trust Co. in Holland. It is designed to meet the objections of England, and to prevent food stuffs being imported through a neutral country for Germany. Cable advices from Norway received here by bankers and others in regard to the shipment of grain, flour, etc., are now signed "Government Food Commission."

Lack Real Corn Weather.

Chicago—Crop advices from Northern Pacific territory shows that conditions with the harvesting of rye and barley about concluded in some localities. Real corn weather has been almost entirely lacking throughout the state.

New York Press Comment.

Sun—The stock market has reached a point where accumulative buying is making itself felt.

Wall Street Journal—Tennessee Copper advances on reports of very large profits form its new sulphuric acid contracts. In conservative quarters the statement is made that the stock is in a bull period.

Financial America—The absorptive power of the stock market has proved a surprise to the professional element on the floor and to many of the leading market interests.

Demand For War on Germany Is Voiced in New York Churches

Examiner Special:

NEW YORK, Aug. 25.—Sermons in many of the New York city churches Sunday dealt largely with the crisis in the relations between the United States and Germany, and many of the clergymen in their sermons strongly pleaded themselves for war. All of them said that the situation which confronts President Wilson is a most serious one and prayers for his guidance were given.

Bishop Gailor of Tennessee, who is convocator of the University of the South, was one of the clergy most urgent in demanding that action be taken against Germany.

"Put me down on the side of Mr. Theodore Roosevelt," he declared in an interview after his sermon at Grace church, Broadway Tenth street. "His sentiments concerning the European war are my sentiments. Our whole attitude as a nation since Europe began to fight has been altogether too negative. We have been so much concerned about our neutral position that we have gone clean over to the German side against the Allies.

"Morally we are just as much bound by the Hague agreement as was England, and when England went to the rescue of Belgium we listened to sentimental people and ate dirt. We were not true to what are supposed to be American ideas. We sent to Germany several groveling notes, which the Germans laughed at. They did not take them with sufficient seriousness to reply to them."

Bishop Gailor attributed our action in connection with German submarine outrages to politics.

"I suppose I ought not to criticize President Wilson," he said. "He does the best he can. He wants to be re-elected. It is the bane of our system of elections every four years. I will not put this up against him any more than against other Presidents.

"The United States ought not to shirk, but do its share, and do it now."

The administration in Washington has been "so busy maintaining its neutrality that it has not for a single moment felt during the last year that it was sure of the difference between right and wrong," was what the Rev. Dr. S. D. McConnell, one-time rector of Holy Trinity church, Brooklyn, and now a deputy to the Episcopal General convention, who officiated at St. Bartholomew's church.

"We appear in the eyes of the world as utterly indifferent to our obligations," he declared. "We ask merely to be allowed to remain in a condition called peace and that our selfishness be not interfered with.

"The time for talking has ceased. The time for action has arrived. It is the business of our government to find out what that action is to be and not [illegible] by an outraged people.

The Rev. Dr. Charles R. Brown, head of the Yale School of Religion, who preached at St. Nicholas Reformed church, prayed for the President.

"The less said in public until after the President has decided the better," said after his sermon.

At the Church of the Messiah the Rev. Dr. G. Cro-well Cressy declared "if international law says they ought to have been warning for the Arabic only the line of action is open to us. That line is to follow the spirit of our notes to Berlin."

The Rev. Dr. V. B. Mollecke, of St. Peter's Lutheran church, and himself a German, blamed President Wilson, for [illegible] but that he may find it necessary to retreat. "The outlook is grim," he said. "President Wilson has put the American government in such a position that it cannot withdraw."

Bishop Charles S. Burch said: "We must not have a diplomatic rupture with Germany. He favored military preparedness on our part. "I want peace with honor," he declared. "I don't have any other kind for myself or for others."

The Rev. D. W. R. Young, of Toronto, who preached at the Madison Avenue Methodist church, said Canadians hope the United States will not enter the war.

"We believe that you can help us more by furnishing us with munitions of war," he said.

"The time is coming when no nation will have a right to stand on its rights," declared the Rev. Dr. Daniel Hoffman Martin at the morning service in the West Park Presbyterian church, Amsterdam avenue and Eighty-sixth street. "This war was brought about by Austria standing on her rights.

"Thank God our President is, first of all, a Christian man, and I pray to God that he will not rush into action because of the sinking of the Arabic, but first think slowly, carefully and deliberately. It is the Christians right to waive his rights. Because two Americans were killed to avenge them would start a war that would result in the killing of thousands of the cream of our manhood. It is easy to get into war, but terribly hard to get out of it."

Dr. Martin said he hoped a law would be passed requiring public men who have been inciting the people to war to serve in the first battle line.

"They are willing to have other fight, but have no desire to fight themselves," he said. "From the present conflict I hope people will realize their community of interests and form a world state to take the place of the world warpath which has been part of a failure."

The advance of women is generally one whom man has left behind.

A truly polite man always listens with interest to the story he has heard a dozen times.

A woman sniffs every time she thinks of her daughter-in-law's mother. It's a roaring habit.

A country recruit, when asked if he was married, exclaimed: "Marry! Do you think I'm daft?"

"He offers me a platonic affection." "Well take it. A platonic affection often leads to the real thing."

"What are you in for now, wife?" "Mrs. Smith just called me an old cat." "Why, you're not so old."

That a little boy who is fond of pictures, got mixed up in his devotions the other night, and prayed: "Give us this day our daily Sketch."

Let us take care how we speak of those who have fallen on life's field. Help them up, not heap scorn upon them. We did not see the conflict; we do not know the scars.

Solemn Sunday School Teacher—"Now, Jimmy, can you tell me the kind of little boys and little girls who go to heaven?" Jimmy (cheek bulging out with toffee)—"Dead ones."

The men are on earth chiefly to attract the women, but they don't know it. The women are on earth chiefly to attract the men, and they know it though some pretend otherwise.

"Tommy," said the Sunday school teacher, who had been giving a lesson on the baptismal covenant, "can you tell me the two things necessary to baptism?" "Yes ma'am," said Tommy, "water and a baby."

YOU don't get better beer because you pay twice as much for imported lager as for O'Keefe's.

The difference is the duty.

O'Keefe's Pilsener Lager is brewed right here in Canada—and there's no duty to pay on it. Insist on having "The Light Beer in the Light Bottle."

Serious Accident Near Hastings

Small Boy Was Struck By an Automobile—Hastings Items of Interest

Special to The Examiner.

HASTINGS, Aug. 25.—[illegible] a motor [illegible] driven by Mr. Hatherley, [illegible] was struck by Mr. Hatherley's car and very badly injured. No blame is attached to the driver, as the little fellow, who was standing to one side, ran directly right in front of the car and was struck in the head. He was carried to his parents and later sent to Peterborough hospital for treatment, where everything is being done to alleviate his sufferings. Late reports state that he is resting easily, but that his injuries are very serious.

Yield is Good.

Some of the farmers who have threshed inform us that the yield is quite good, running about 45 bushels per acre.

The rain Saturday will delay the harvest, and we have heard that some crops in the lower lying districts are so terribly water soaked that it is doubtful if they will be worth harvesting at all.

The steamer "Sidney Laxe" passed through here on Wednesday last on her first trip of excursionists to Healey Falls and stopped on the return at Trent Bridge, where a reception was being held.

The steamer "Rainbow" also passed down a picnic under the auspices of St. George's church. Those who attended report a very large crowd and a beautiful display of early decorated boats. The outing was a very enjoyable one.

Lawn Social.

Quite a crowd attended the lawn social at Mr. Arthur Fleming's on Friday night under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid of the Methodist church. The band was in attendance and lent a considerable charm to the occasion. The booth was stocked with home-made candy, ice cream, etc., while liberal refreshments were served during the course of the evening. The committees in charge of the arrangements are to be congratulated on the success which attended their efforts.

Several of our people drove to Ennismore Sunday school on Sunday (15th), it being the occasion of the distribution of certificates to the members of the model school, under the superintendence of Mrs. A. Metcalfe. Rev. G. Andrews of Pontypool, was present and gave a nice address, while some of the children were prepared to add to the programme by song, etc. The occasion was a very delightful one and was much enjoyed by the latter company present.

Dr. Otto Howson and party of Kalamazoo, Mich., motored to Hastings on Friday and called on friends.

Wheat is reported from some sections during the past week.

Personals.

Miss Ida Tate of Peterborough, is visiting a few days with her sister, Mrs. T. Hopper.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Warner are on a visit to several points east of town, where they will visit friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Stevenson and family were accompanied by Misses Mae and Evelyn Beaves, motored to Campbellford on Wednesday and visited with friends.

Miss Verna Howson of Western Canada is a visitor to Friday.

Mr. V. Coverdale's store has been treated to another coat of paint, which greatly improves its appearance.

Mrs. Lee and children of Belleville, who have been visiting her home here, returned last week to their home. They were accompanied by Mrs. Lee's sister and brother, Miss Mary and Mr. David Walsh.

Messrs. White and Scriver have purchased the good will of the butcher business formerly carried on by Mr. T. Walsh.

Mr. Warner Sly is the guest of his son, Mr. F. Warner.

Mr. J. McCarthy has returned from his annual vacation.

Belmont Man Was Remanded

Declined to Plead or Elect—Case Will Come Up Next Wednesday

Cyphas Munroe of Belmont township, appeared before County Police Magistrate Langley this morning on a charge of wilfully setting fire to property belonging to D. Munroe, lot 2, concession 3, in the township of Belmont. The accused, who was represented in court by Mr. G. N. Gordon, declined to plead or elect. Counsel for the defence was willing to admit that the Crown was in possession of sufficient evidence to warrant the prisoner's committal to the jury court for trial. The offence was said to have been committed on August 14th. The accused is twenty-six years of age and married. The case was remanded until next Wednesday.

Hamilton Manufacturer Offers His Entire Output to Government

Special to The Examiner

HAMILTON, Ont., Aug. 25 – D. A. Thomas, British government representative, who is touring Canada and the United States looking into the munitions situation, paid a high tribute to Canadian manufacturers, in the course of an interview here. He said: "Just today one of the most prominent and reliable manufacturers in Hamilton offered to equip his plant, if desired, and give the Government the entire shell output at actual cost. When we meet manufacturers like this, willing to sacrifice everything for the Motherland, we get some idea of the depth of Canadian loyalty."

OBITUARY

ROBERT FISHER.

One of the best known residents of South Monaghan passed away on Saturday last, in the death of Mr. Robt. Fisher, for many years prominently connected with municipal matters in that township. The late Robert Fisher was born in South Monaghan fifty-nine years ago, on the farm, Lot 15, Concession 1, where all his life was lived. He was universally liked and respected, and the hold he held upon those who knew him is evidenced by the fact that he was never defeated at the polls. For seventeen years he was connected with municipal affairs, six years as Councillor, seven years as Reeve, and four years as County Commissioner, representing No. 6 Division in the united counties of Northumberland and Durham, receiving the largest vote for the office. In 1898 he was Warden of the United Counties, the only South Monaghan man who has attained that honour.

In religion, Mr. Fisher was a Methodist, and in politics, a Conservative.

He is survived by his wife, two daughters, Mrs. Geo. Gordon, Sturgeon Falls, and Mrs. T. J. Dawson, South Monaghan. Two brothers, James, of Millbrook and Walter, and two sisters, Mrs. Levi Byers of Burlington, and Mrs. H. Parker, also survive.

The funeral, which took place yesterday, was one of the largest ever held in South Monaghan.

BIRTH.

LYNCH – On Friday, August 20th, to Mr. and Mrs. R. Lynch, 29 Victoria Avenue, a daughter, Madeline Helena.

DIED.

QUINLAN – On Monday, Aug. 23rd, 1915, at his late residence, 620 Dynond street, Cornelius Quinlan.

Funeral will take place Thursday, August 26th at 9 o'clock, to the Church of the Immaculate Conception. Interment in St. Peter's cemetery.

ROGERS – Alan Stanley Clark Rogers, Captain of C Company in the 6th Battalion, East Yorkshire Pioneers, late Lieutenant in the 63rd King George's Own Pioneers, Bangalore, India, an ex-member of the Queen's Own Rifles, Toronto, a past pupil of Trinity College School, Port Hope, and a graduate of the Royal Military College at Kingston, only son of Edwin R. Rogers, Inspector of Prisons and Public Charities, Parliament Buildings, Toronto, born at Calcutta, March 2nd, 1883, died at Calcutta, May 30th, 1915. (By cable) by his friends. 2d-46

COLLINS—McDONNELL

A very quiet wedding was solemnized at the Sacred Heart Church this morning by Rev. Father Hayden when Miss Bertha McDonnell was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Mr. Wm. Collins. The bride was assisted by Miss Mary Gangon, while Mr. Louis McDonnell acted as best man.

The bride was given away by her uncle Mr. J. McDonnell of Cobourg. The presents were numerous and cost ly including a beautiful set of bridal rose china from the Sacred Heart choir, of which the groom was a member. Mr. Armstrong presided at the organ and the members sang during the mass. Mr. Edward Bartley, baritone soloist, sang the Ave Maria during the offertory. Mr. and Mrs. Collins will reside on Perry street, city.

MICKLER—GARVEY.

The very pretty wedding of Miss Kathryn Garvey, daughter of Mr. Patrick J. Garvey of Peterborough to Mr. George J. Mickler, son of Mr. Jacob Mickler of Preston Ont., was solemnized at the Church of the Sacred Heart, this morning, at 8 o'clock.

The nuptial mass was celebrated by Rev. J. V. McAuley.

The bride looked very charming and girlish in her wedding dress of ivory charmeuse with court train, edged with seed pearls, and her tulle veil caught with pearls. The bride was given away by her father, and on entering the Church, Lohengrin's wedding march was nicely rendered by Miss Ella Murphy, who also sang "O Perfect Love" during the offertory. After the Mass, while the register was being signed by the young couple, Miss Teressa O'Donnell, cousin of the bride, sang Millard's "Ave Marie." The bride's sister, Miss Genevieve Garvey, made a dainty bridesmaid, in pink and white taffeta.

Mr. William J. O'Brien of Peterborough, was groomsman. After the ceremony the wedding party repaired to the home of the bride's father, where an enjoyable breakfast was partaken of. The bride's travelling suit was corbeau blue, with hat to match, and white fox furs. The honeymoon will be spent on the Great Lakes, and on a visit to some of the larger American cities. On their return Mr. and Mrs. Mickler will take up their residence in the Tyndall Garden Apartments, Tyndall Avenue, Parkdale.

The groom is an honour graduate of the School of Practical Science, and is well known in Peterborough as his connection with the Hydro-Electric has brought him into contact with many Peterborough citizens.

KINGSTON MEN DREW LOTS

Loser (or Winner) Will Now Serve Empire at Front

Special to The Examiner.

KINGSTON, Aug. 25 – By drawing lots, two Kingston business men decided which of the two would serve his country at the front. Both could not go, so they decided to abide by this decision.

A. Nicol of the firm of Nicol & Botsford, hardware merchants, left this morning for Montreal where he will enlist in one of the overseas units as a private. Mr. Botsford will stay at home and run the business. He was very eager to get to the front.

Mr. Nicol was offered a commission but preferred to take his place in the ranks and work himself up.

Advertising may make a poor article sell for a while, but the most persistent advertising would not induce you to make a second purchase of a thing that turned out to be fraudulent, and the profit on the first sale would never pay for the advertising.

Do you not think the advertisers know this? They fully realize that the very first essential of success is to have something worthy, something that people want and will keep on buying.

If you see a thing advertised regularly week after week, year after year, it is safe to conclude that it possesses actual merit and is well worth its cost.

New Landing at Suvla Bay Most Important Move Yet In Gallipoli Campaign

Turks Evil Plight---Hemmed In and Cut Off---Must Depend on Water Communications for Food--Suvla Landing a Surprise.

Special Cable to The Examiner

LONDON, Aug. 26.—Hope for important news from the Dardanelles runs high. The new landing at Suvla Bay to the north of the Australians and directly opposite the Narrows has so far been given only brief recognition in the official despatches, but there is no reason to doubt that it is much the most important move yet made in the four months' campaign on Gallipoli. Unofficial press despatches from Mudros have placed high significance on the importance of the achievement, declaring that the new force advanced six miles, about half way across the peninsula towards the Narrows, and by so doing occupy a main line of communications with the Turks on Gallipoli and cover with gun fire the only other path. If this is true the Turks' positions, not only on Achi Baba but on the Pasha Dagh, are threatened from the rear, and for the future will be largely dependent on their own resources of food and munitions. This situation has not yet been described officially, but the official statements are confined generally to results and not to conditions. Even if the Gallipoli forces are cut off it may take weeks to reduce them. There are thought to be not less than 100,000 Turks on the peninsula.

SUVLA LANDING A SURPRISE.

The Suvla Landing was a surprise. The Turks knew that large new forces were concentrating in the Mediterranean, but they did not know where they were going to strike. On one day a month ago there were in the harbour at Mudros at the same time the Aquitania, the Mauretania, and the Empress of Britain, all loaded with troops. These ships had made three trips to Mudros within six weeks.

At that time there were in Mudros more than 100,000 troops, of which 60,000 were French. There was a large force in Egypt and several brigades stationed on the islands of Imbros and Tenedos. Somewhere in the Aegean Sea there were nearly thirty transports loaded with French and English troops. These transports awaited only the order to discharge in all nearly 70,000 men. The Turks thought they were headed for Asiatic Turkey, but the move came at Suvla.

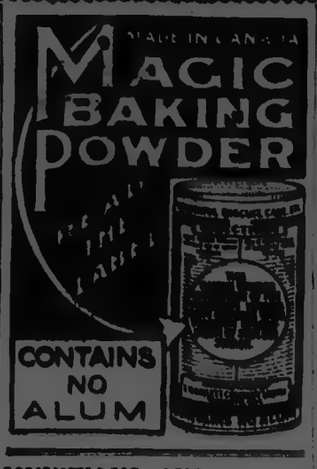
NORTH SEA TRAWLERS ARRIVE.

The concentration of men was accompanied by the arrival of a large new fleet of North Sea fishing trawlers. These boats have proved an invaluable aid in these operations. At Mudros everywhere are also to be seen huge piles of ammunition.

It would be unwise to under-estimate the resisting power of the Turks. The Turkish army is one of the strongest in the world. It includes at least 1,000,000 men — the Germans say 1,250,000. And Germans claim there has been misunderstanding as to the amount of munitions in Turkey. Constantinople has powder factories and quantities of materials for the production of explosives, according to these authorities.

But the allies are prepared for the task. They are prepared even if the Balkans do not come in. In King Constantine the Kaiser has a devoted ally, but all his efforts are likely to come to nought. The Greek Parliament should have met on August 1, but on the plea of poor health the King got it postponed until now. It was a case of anything to delay Venizelos' return to power. Had the allies been depending on speedier action in Greece they would have been disappointed.

But Venizelos is now in the saddle. He is holding his peace as to his intentions, but he is a well-known friend of the entente. In Greece he is called "The Sphinx." One statement has been made that in the recent election he pledged himself to yield no inch of territory to Bulgaria. The fact is that during the campaign he did not make a single speech and announced no platform.



MUNITIONS AND "MORE" FOR RUSSIA SAYS JAP MINISTER

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, Aug. 26.—"My first care will be to draw still closer the bonds uniting Japan and the powers of the Triple Entente," said Baron Kikujiro Ishii, the former Japanese ambassador to France, who recently became Minister of Foreign Affairs in the Okuma Cabinet, to a representative of the Petit Journal.

"Is not the fate of Japan," asked Baron Ishii, "entirely bound up with that of her allies? Nay, I go further—after the war the relations of Japan and the Triple Entente must remain not a whit less close, not only in the interest of each, but still more in that of the world's peace."

To an inquiry as to what aid Japan intended to give Russia, the baron said: "Since the beginning of the war Japan has been sending arms and munitions to Russia. In the presence of the grave difficulties through which Russia is now going, it is an imperative duty for us to consider what more can be done in order to give her the maximum of help."

Warsaw Shows Few Signs of Recent Capture

Special to The Examiner.

WARSAW, via London, Aug. 26.—Warsaw shows few signs of its recent capture after a siege. The life of the city goes on much the same as it did under Russian rule in times of peace. The ruins of blown in bridges hanging drunkenly athwart the Vistula and the presence of comparatively few German soldiers in the streets are the principal surface indications of the gigantic military campaign which resulted in the capture of the Polish capital.

Polish and Jewish citizens have received the invaders without the slightest evidence of hostility. The German garrison in the city consists of only three regiments.

These troops have little to do except to provide sentries for the various military and civilian headquarters to keep in order the crowds seeking permits of all kinds, ranging from passes permitting them to leave the city to licenses for the sale of cheap cigarettes. Soldiers also regulate traffic on the pontoon- bridges across the Vistula.

Military patrols are not called upon to maintain order within the city. This work has been in the hands of civilians who are being relieved by a German police force under Chief of Police Von Glasenapp

Travelling Baths On Big Motors for Use of Troops

Examiner Special:

LONDON, Aug. 26.—War has shown a number of uses for the motor vehicle little dreamed of in times of peace. The latest development in connection with mechanical transport is a motor bathroom built for the St. John Ambulance Association.

Large canvases to form two tent bathrooms are rolled up under shelves on each side of the body and tent poles and other accessories are carried on the roof. The size of these bathrooms is about 8 x 10 feet, and there are six baths in each.

In the car are two circulating boilers which supply hot water at about two gallons a minute to taps from which the water is taken to the baths by means of a hose pipe. The boilers are heated by paraffin vapor supplied under pressure, and the paraffin is stored in a fifty-gallon tank, which can be refilled by means of a hand-pump and hose.

Inside the car are store cupboards and shelves, with a large fumigating cupboard capable of holding twenty suits of clothes. The latter are cleaned and disinfected by vapour rising from a tank containing water and chemicals.

The motor bathrooms can be carried on any twenty- to thirty horse-power chassis, and not a very long wheel base is required. Both the floor and the roof of the caravan body are covered with sheet iron, while that portion near the boilers is lined with fire-resisting material.

The process of disinfecting the clothes takes about an hour and a half and can be carried on irrespective of simultaneous with the use of the baths. How useful an [illegible] to the troops at the front this travelling bathroom will be can easily be realized.

One Thousand Coal Miners Resume Work

Special to The Examiner

CARDIFF, Eng., Aug. 26 — One thousand coal miners who went on strike at Hafod pit yesterday resumed work to-day, and coal operators declared the danger of another general strike has been avoided.

Officials of the Federation of Miners held a secret meeting last night. It is understood they advised Hafod men, who quit in protest against the Government's arbitration findings, to resume work pending the outcome of the conference at London.

Weather Conditions Will Enable Russians To Strengthen Their Lines

Munition Factories Are Now Working Full Time and Russia May Soon Resume the Offensive---Russian Submarine Sinks German Cruiser.

Special Cable to The Examiner

LONDON, Aug. 26.—Recent operations at the Dardanelles connected Allied lines for twelve miles. Additional troops have been landed. Losses on both sides are very heavy. It is expected operations will be concluded before bad weather sets in.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—The Balkan crisis took a favourable turn according to reports which state Serbia's note will concede the main points the Allies asked on behalf of Bulgaria.

BERLIN, Aug. 26.—If a German submarine commander exceeded instructions in sinking the Arabic, Germany will give full satisfaction to the United States.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—Weather conditions are now favourable to the Russians. Rain and mist will enable Russians to strengthen their lines. With munition factories now working full time Russia may soon resume the offensive.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—A Paris despatch says a Russian submarine on Monday sank the German cruiser Augsburg in the Baltic north of Danzig.

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 26.—The Danish steamer Vidall sailed for Hull yesterday with the bodies of 11 British sailors killed by an attack on the British submarine E-13 by a German warship.

STOCKHOLM, Aug. 26.—Sweden has again protested to Germany for shelling the Swedish steamer Gotland, which was taken into Cuxhaven by the Germans.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 26.—Chairman Simmons after seeing President Wilson yesterday said the situation with Germany over the Arabic affair looked better.

Germany shows signs of discouraging a break with the United States.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—Zeppelins reported from the Netherlands heading for England this morning. A raid on England may be anticipated.

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 26.—A German sub-fleet now comprises 58 submarines. Germany's Baltic fleet consists of 28 warships. Six thousand marines from Kiel were sent to reinforce the Pioneer service of the army.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—Sir William Treloar yesterday stated Britain is paying two hundred million dollars a year in separation allowances.

ROME, Aug. 26.—Nearly 11,000 Armenian Christians were killed by Turks and Kurds in a massacre at Trebizond says the Italian consul here to day.

RAILWAY TRAFFIC IS INTERRUPTED

Special Cable to The Examiner

ROME, Aug. 26.—Railway traffic between Switzerland and Austria has been interrupted while large bodies of Austro German troops are being massed near Innsbrick.

Important Step Towards Securing Aid of Balkans

Special Morning Cable

LONDON, Aug. 26.—Serbia has taken an important step toward securing the aid of other Balkan countries in an attack on Constantinople.

A note from the Serbian government does not contain an unqualified agreement that Serbia will cede Macedonia to Bulgaria. But it does placate Italy, thus paving the way for the second step in the Balkan negotiations by which the Allies hope to gain Bulgaria's aid. At the same time Serbia indicates to the Allies that she is not adverse to making concessions to Bulgaria if she receives some assurance in return.

BELGIAN WOMAN'S HEROISM

Methods of German "Kultur" of Which the Empress is Chief Instigator

A Belgian newspaper published at Maestricht, Holland, by a group of fugitive newspapermen from Liege describes as follows the recent execution of women and eight men at Liege on charges of trying to reveal the movement of German troops to the allies: "Our compatriots refused to have their eyes bandaged before being led out to execution. The woman, Mme. Louise Freguy, of whom it is only known that she tried to take some letters into Holland, was in a state of superb patriotic excitement. Her stinging remarks were like a lash for the executioners. Shot only in the legs after the first volley she sank to the ground crying, "Vive Liege! Vive la Belgique!" and a non-commissioned officer despatched her with his revolver in order to silence her. Among the victims was a manufacturer, Justin Lenders. His wife, suspecting what was going to happen, offered on the eve of the execution, a sum of money for the release of her husband. Her offer was accepted, and she was told to bring the few thousand francs at noon next day. When Mme. Lenders arrived with the money, her heart beating high with hope, husband's body was already cold. The newspaper contradicts the statement that the Kaiser caused a proclamation to be posted up on the walls of Liege expressing his disapproval of what had occurred, and ordering that all death sentences be referred to him before being carried out."

Russian Army Cosmopolitan

The Varsovians have seen samples of every portion of the vast Russian empire pass through their city since the war began. It has afforded their children an excellent object lesson in ethnography, for the army of Russia in Europe and Asia comprises a very respectable collection of varieties. The Kirghis of the Siberian regiments are especial favorites. Their warlike enthusiasm is such that on the day of their entry into Warsaw they had to be escorted by Cossacks. They were convinced that Warsaw was Berlin and were burning to attack the city right away. "Give us a chance to run the Prussians through," they cried with such insistence that they were packed off to the front at the earliest possible moment. Since then they have had plenty of opportunities to transfix Prussians.

The iron cross of the German army is not a casting, but is struck with steel dies in heavy coining presses. After being stamped out the crosses are taken to the silversmith's where the soldering is done, a fine silver border added, and the finishing completed.

There are in Britain over six million men between the ages of eighteen and forty-five.

In the South African War four peers and six heirs to peerages lost their lives.

KITCHENER SEEKS MEN

Praises Hun Efficiency, Cracks Joke, But Speaks Warningly

Speaking at the Guild Hall and asking for more recruits Earl Kitchener first of all paid a tribute to the "gallant Canadians who are now fighting alongside their British and French comrades in Flanders and are there presenting a solid and impenetrable front against the enemy."

"More men," was the tenor of the field-marshal's address. "In one of my earliest statements made after the beginning of the war I said I should require 'more men and still more men until the enemy is crushed,'" continued the speaker. "I must go on repeating that statement with even greater insistence. It is true that we were in an improving position months ago, but the position is at best serious."

Strangely thrilling it was to hear the supreme head of the Empire's forces, with his intimate knowledge of the resources of both sides, calmly remarking on German efficiency. He spoke of her forty years' preparation and of the result—"a military organization as complex in character as it is perfect in machinery."

Perfect For War

"Never before has any nation been so elaborately organized for imposing her will upon the other nations of the world; and her vast resources of military strength are wielded by an autocracy which is peculiarly adapted for the conduct of war."

When the speaker, referring to the new National Register, said it might bring forward certain ones whom "shyness" had kept from volunteering, laughter resounded. "Kitch" for all his sternness seemed to enjoy a joke, and he laughed heartily later on at numerous sallies of his fellow-speakers. He seemed far from the taciturn soldier some picture him.

Why the Censor

Presently the field-marshal explained his reticence about letting out news. Newspapers had suggested that mention of the deeds and whereabouts of certain corps would promote interest in recruiting. But no, it wouldn't do to divulge such information. It might aid the enemy. People would say, "Oh, well, the Germans know anyway" Perhaps they did; we couldn't help that, but perhaps they didn't, and in any case there was no good in our going and telling them. As a result of reticence one German prisoner had announced his entire mystification—not to say incredulity concerning the existence of Kitchener's army.

The "slacker" and "shirker" were both mentioned, but called forth no splenetic utterances. Kitchener thought the "slackers'" numbers had been exaggerated.

Five Civilian V.C.'s

Of the five civilian recipients of the Victoria Cross, two gained it in exceptional circumstances. One of them, "Lucknow" Kavanagh, as he was afterwards called, was given his for penetrating the lines of the mutineers disguised as a native at a time when Lucknow was closely invested and besieged. Another, Fraser McDonnell, an Indian magistrate, who practised carpentry as a hobby in his spare time, was similarly decorated because he rigged a new rudder to a disabled boat while under fire.

SERGEANT-MAJOR IS ALONE AND SUPREME

Creator of Efficiency, Confidant of Colonels, Master of Drill is the Wonderfully-dignified Person

Somebody or other of distinction once said—and very truly—that the non-commissioned officers (sergeants and corporals) were the backbone of the British army. And it might be added "the warrant officers (regimental sergeant-majors) are the very marrow." On them, in a far greater degree than is generally recognized, rests the credit for creating and the responsibility for maintaining the high standard of efficiency which our army enjoys.

The sergeant-majors are, as their title implies, super-sergeants. They, as a rule, only arrive at their high rank after long, long years of 'prenticeship as privates and non-commissioned officers. And then only after showing above the average of their fellows. Briefly, if not very elegantly, "what they don't know about soldierin' ain't worth knowin'."

In each regiment of cavalry, in each brigade of artillery, in each battalion of infantry there is but one regimental sergeant-major—one and one only. He is alone in his glory, unrivalled, unchallenged, supreme. As a rule, too, he has a manner and method peculiarly his own for impressing the great and solemn fact on all and sundry whom it may concern. And "woe unto him"—if a subordinate—who happens to forget it! The outward symbol of the "all high" one's rank is a solitary little crown, superimposed on the right sleeve of his tunic or jacket, about midway between the elbow and the wrist.

All Defer to Him

About him, too, there is always a monarchial "keep off the grass" atmosphere; from his eye there continually radiates that cold, repellent, Kitchener-like glance that forbids presumption—that compels, alike from the cheekiest drummer boy, the least subservient Tommy, and the most irreverent young subaltern officer, the respect and awesome admiration which are his due.

Even senior officers, captains, and majors treat him with marked deference. He usually enjoys the unbounded confidence of the "C.O." So the sergeant-major is, indeed, a veritable "power behind the throne."

In "King's Regulations," the book of the ten thousand and ten commandments, it is written that, when addressed by any of their subordinate subjects the compliment of "Sir" must always be paid them. And he holds his appointment by Royal Warrant signed, on behalf of the Secretary of State for War, by the first military member of the Army Council.

Secret of Greatness

If one were asked point blank "What does a sergeant-major do?" he would receive the reply that he does not do much. The great secret of his worth lies in making others do—all that is expected from them. He is essentially a supervisor. His is the personality that spurs and inspires the smart soldier-like instinct in every N.C.O. and private in his regiment; his the ever vigilant eyes that jealously watch, on behalf of his "C.O." for the least sign of slackness in the sense of discipline, esprit de corps and duty that should animate every man who wears His Majesty's uniform.

His primary function is, however, the conversion of the rough material of the raw recruit into the finely finished and highly polished product—the trained soldier. Blessed with a knowledge of the drill and text books that even a general might envy, the regimental sergeant-major is a worthy president over the studies of the disciples of the arts of war. The domain of drill is pre-eminently his; over it he rules like a despot emperor.

Prussian Promises Broken

During the French war flattering promises were made to the "Brave and loyal Poles." But as soon as the war ended, new Germany adopted the mottoes: "We fear no one but God"; "one emperor, one empire, one God." These two mottoes were explained by later events to mean: "We Germans are now so powerful, that we are ready to fight the whole world. We want only one German emperor, one German language for everybody." In accordance with these mottoes, the famous, or infamous persecutory laws of 1872-3 were passed against Catholics in general and against the Poles in particular; later against the Socialists. All religions, except the German Lutheran, were persecuted. Then started a 40-year era of the most brutal persecution of Poles by the German government—throwing to the winds the "solemn promises" of the "Noble House of Hohenzollern."

TO THE PANAMA PACIFIC EXPOSITION VIA THE CANADIAN ROCKIES.

At the present time a great many are planning their annual tour. Considerable numbers visit the popular California resorts, while many prefer the unsurpassed resorts, palatial hotels and magnificent scenery of the Canadian Rockies. This year, why not combine the two by a visit to the Panama Pacific Exposition?

Numerous people in comfortable circumstances, well able to afford a trip, have the mistaken idea that a journey of this nature is most expensive. This is no so, thanks to the modern railway facilities, an extensive trip with interesting and instructive features can be made with speed and comfort at a comparatively small cost. Why not investigate?

Those contemplating a trip of any nature will receive full information from any C.P.R. Agent, or write M. G. Murphy, District Passenger Agent, Toronto.

The Vampire

In Romance She Is Beautiful, In Real Life Unattractive to All Except Her Victims.

By EILEEN BRENNAN

PILES

You will find relief in Zam-Buk! It eases the burning, stops pain, stops bleeding and heals. Perseverance, with Zam-Buk, means cure. Why not prove this? All Druggists and Stores

Zam Buk

There have been many versions of the woman who has a passion for enthralling men, from the ordinary flirt to the vampire. The ordinary flirt is supposed to have a conscience. The vampire lures men to their ruin and if they have families are as ready to wreck wife and children as the man himself.

The vampire is not a beauty with soft, languishing eyes. She has a stony face. She conquers rather by her will power than by fascination, though she calls to her assistance the senses whenever she finds it necessary. I have never seen but one woman in real life who deserved the name of vampire. While staying at a summer hotel I heard of a man among the guests who was enthralled by a woman and taken completely away from his family. I was told that I might see the couple any evening after dinner when the guests walked on the piazza, promenading with the others. I expected to see a radiant beauty in the woman, with seductive manners. I was astonished at looking upon the stoniest face I have ever seen and utterly devoid of beauty. The man was good looking, though there was no strength in his features. But the will may grow stronger or weaken like the muscles, which are developed by exercise or become flabby by disuse. I afterward learned the story of this man.

Edward Grant was prominent in college not only as an all round available man, but as a scholar. He was president of his class and graduated with honors. He became attached to Marjorie Fleetwood, the daughter of one of the professors of the university. They were married, and a boy baby was born to them.

The couple had been married fourteen years when Edward Grant was called from his home in the east to San Francisco on a matter of business. It was his first separation from his family except for a few days at a time, and he no more wished to go than his wife wished to have him go. He was debating with her whether, after all, he had not better give up the trip when their son, Harry, thirteen years old, came into the room where they were and heard his father tell his mother that he had promised his partner to make the journey.

"Papa," said Harry, "if you have promised don't you think you ought to go?"

This decided the father, who took his son into his arms and hugged and kissed him with pride. Then, after a last embrace of his wife, he tore himself away.

On the same train and having a chair in the same parlor car with Grant sat a woman about his own age traveling alone. She was reading a novel, while Grant was looking out through the window, seeing nothing of the passing view, for his vision was upon a mental picture of the wife and son from whom he had just parted, and he was wondering how he could endure that separation during the period fixed for his absence.

The woman in the next chair was constantly glancing aside from her book at the fine looking man who was so wrapped in his thoughts that he was unconscious of her presence. While she was by no means beautiful, she was dressed faultlessly, and there was that suspicion of perfume about her which is seductive in a woman who is an adept in the art of its use.

The lady dropped a glove. Grant did not see it. She leaned forward to pick it up, brushing against him. He turned and looked into a pair of eyes fixed upon his. From him the eyes fell to the glove. Grant bent and picked it up. The lady made a move to recover it again, and, their heads coming very near together, they turned their faces toward each other, and Grant saw that same pair of eyes fixed upon his and in close proximity. Then he reached for the glove and handed it to her. She thanked him and resumed her novel. Grant turned again to look out through the window.

But now those eyes, in which there was a lure, came between him and the vision of his wife and son. The faint odor that hung about the woman was wafted toward him whenever any one passed through the car. No word was spoken by either, but now and again their eyes met, and every time Grant felt more strongly the lure that was in those of the woman. Gradually a feeling came over him that sitting beside this woman hour after hour without a word passing between them was becoming irksome. Was it not a want of compliment to his fellow passenger that he should refrain from addressing her? Surely it would be immodest in her to speak to him without a word from him.

He made a trivial remark. The lady received it not unkindly, but replied briefly. The ice thus broken, they soon fell to conversing. The woman was a good listener, and Grant was a fluent talker. She listened, but did not absorb what he said. This he knew, for there was between them a subtle undercurrent that told him his companion was interested in him rather than in what he said. While he was speaking she kept her eyes fixed intently upon his, and in them was always that lure.

* * * * * * *

When Edward Grant returned from his journey he was a changed man. He could not return the embrace of his wife and son as when he had left them. That something was on his mind was plain to Mrs. Grant, but she could not tell what it was. On the evening of his return after dinner he lit a cigar, and the comfort of being at home seemed to have dispelled what had come between him and it when there was a ring at the telephone. He looked disquieted. Mrs. Grant arose to go to the instrument, but he motioned her to be seated and went himself.

When he returned to her he said that he was sorry not to be able to pass the first night of his return at home, but that a matter connected with the business upon which he had gone to the west called him out. His wife knew that he was deceiving her, but pretended to believe him. In a few minutes after leaving his home he was with the woman who had been his traveling companion.

It was not long before Mrs. Grant learned that her husband had fallen into the hands of a vampire. Spring was coming on, and rooms were engaged for the Grant family for July and August at the hotel where they usually spent the summer. Grant made no objection to going there, and his wife hoped that if she could get him where she could keep him continually under her surveillance she might break the spell that held him. Alas, when she reached the summer resort among the guests at the hotel where the Grant family stopped was a woman who, it soon became evident, was the cause of her husband's trouble.

It was there that I first heard of this case and saw Grant and the vampire promenading the piazza of the hotel after dinner. What became of him and the woman at other times I did not know, for I seldom saw either of them at any other hour than evening. Mrs. Grant I did not see at all. I was told that she kept her room, not caring to face those who were witnesses of the shame that had been put upon her. But I saw Harry Grant frequently with other boys of his age playing tennis and bathing. He was a fine, manly boy, and it seemed to me that he was what his father had been at his age.

When the end of the season came Mrs. Grant and Harry returned to the city together, while his father bowled along the turnpike in an automobile with the vampire. Every one sympathized with the wife, but no one was in a position to do anything for her. Every one despised the man. Yet not every one, for I had a different view concerning the matter. There are various influences that will undermine a man's will power, and once it is undermined it is very difficult for him to recover it. Nevertheless nothing is impossible.

The trouble in the Grant family went on till Harry Grant had passed fifteen years of age. He had understood the family trouble from the first and the cause of it. He was now nearly full grown, and the skeleton in the family closet and his love for his parents had made a man of him. He dissuaded his mother from applying for a divorce until he had made an effort to save his father from the vampire.

One day he had a talk with his father, who confided to his son that the only way he could throw off the thrall of the vampire was to escape from her long enough to regain his will power, but he was not able to make an attempt to escape. Soon after this Harry one day asked his father to take a ride with him in his car. Grant consented, and Harry took the wheel, with his father beside him. They had scarcely left the city when the car stopped and two strong men entered and took the back seat. Grant looked suspicious and asked what it meant. Then Harry told him that he was his prisoner and would remain so until by wits restored to his family. Realizing that the two men in the rear seat had been hired to overpower him in case he resisted, Grant saw the futility of trying to escape. Harry took him to a house he had prepared for him, where no one would be able to reach him, and kept him there.

At the end of a month Grant begged for his wife to come to him, and Harry persuaded her to do so. The family continued to live in their secret abode, no one dreading being discovered more than the husband and father. He was like a convalescent who has suffered from delirium, but who now every day feels his strength returning to him.

The vampire meanwhile found another victim. Nevertheless she made every effort to find Grant, rather from the devilry there was in her and a repugnance to having him spirited away from her than any desire to continue in possession of him. Three months elapsed before she succeeding in finding his retreat. Then she appeared, intending to take him away by means of the mental spell she exercised over him.

When she arrived Grant had fully recovered. His wife and Harry, in turn, begged him to permit them to meet her and send her away. He refused, assuring them that it was not necessary. Receiving her himself, he confronted her with a look of horror that would have made another woman wince.

"Evil woman," he said, "leave these premises! Your power has gone. The rest of my life shall be devoted to undoing what you have made me do."

The vampire gave him the old look by which she had never failed to bring him back to her when he rebelled but it was powerless, and no one knew it better than herself. Turning, she entered the conveyance in which she had come, and neither Edward Grant nor his wife or son ever saw her again.

MAX HARDEN LAUDS THE BRITISH RACE

Prophesies Colonial Loyalty—Sport Not Sign of Degeneracy—Germany Has Been Misinformed

"Germany has a hundred reasons to fear Britain, with the sort of fear that is not unworthy of a man, that is based upon respect and has nothing craven about it." Maximilian Harden, the most forceful and independent journalist in Germany has read his boastful fellow-countrymen some lessons. The sentence just quoted is the beginning of a remarkable tribute he has paid to the British.

"Any German," he writes, "who has sat on a Swiss mountain railway next to a Liverpool tailor, got up like a lord, or has regarded our comic papers as a fount of wisdom, thinks he knows Britain and the British. They have hucksters' souls, are deceitful and cowardly, are unsociable, surly and splenetic, never aspire to higher things; have minds only for sport, foolery, and money-making. That is the popular view. It is forgotten that the greatest of the modern theories that have taught us something of the spirit of nature was conceived in England, and that of all the peoples of Europe during the nineteenth century it is Shakespeare's countrymen who have produced the richest and most varied literature.

A Healthy People

"It is thought that the Briton cuts a ridiculous figure because he loves sport, and spends nearly as much time over his golf and his football as the German over his beer. Is not a game which makes the body taut and strong of value to the state? Get you to Hyde Park and look at the upright greybeards cantering by, hundreds strong, on their well-groomed horses. The young girls and the old ladies in the west end, the workmen with their offspring at the people's sport centres, look ye on them and compare them with the anæmic, prematurely old obesities or starvelings to be met with at every corner of a continental town.

"The Briton is a good healthy figure of a man. On his ocean-encircled isle he has laid to heart the lesson that only the strong can inherit the earth, and has elaborated a course of health exercises such as are wanted by men cooped up in offices and factories if they are not to grow flabby. His way of life is reasonable. He can obey without cringing, and can compel obedience without tyrannizing. The Briton will not bend the knee to the greatest official in the empire.

Why Britons Fight

"Let us give praise where it is due. Hucksters' souls? It was not of their counters and tills that they thought when they imperilled their national life and sacrificed their sovereigns by the hundred million to destroy Bonaparte, to whose overwhelming will they alone among the peoples of Europe would not submit themselves. And if in some dark hours the foundations of the British Empire should be threatened, strong men of Anglo-Saxon stock will hurry to its aid from every corner of the globe to show to mankind at large that the might of this people is indeed unconquerable."

In recent years Germany's birth rate has been falling three times as rapidly as Britain's.

Additional clasps may be added to the Victoria Cross for subsequent acts of bravery.

Substitutes For Meat

AUTHORITIES tell us that Canadians are one of the three greatest meat-eating peoples of the world, Australia and the United States being the other two. Too much meat is not a good thing, either for our digestive system or our pocketbook. Should we not, then, study substitutes for meat, and not only study them, but make use of them? Miss Nellie Maxwell of the University of Wisconsin gives us the following information on meat substitutes.

Substitutes which lend variety and produce the same energy producing qualities are the following: Whole wheat flour, dried beans, peas, lentils, peanuts, walnuts, pecans, peanut butter, oatmeal, cracked wheat, whole wheat, cheese, eggs, butter, cream, olive oil, milk, macaroni, and rice. These are a few of the many foods which, simply or in combination, make a wholesome diet.

Dried fruits and nuts are valuable foods as well as the fresh fruits, which are indispensable in a well-balanced diet.

Rice Croquettes With Cheese Sauce

Cook a cupful of rice in two and a half cupfuls of milk, with a teaspoonful of salt until tender, adding more milk if needed. Season with two tablespoonfuls of butter, a dash of paprika and mix with two beaten egg yolks, then chill. When cold and stiffened mould into cones, balls, or cylinder forms, dip in crumbs, then in egg white and in crumbs again. Brown in hot fat and serve with cheese sauce.

Cheese Sauce

Take three tablespoonfuls of butter, add four of flour when the butter is bubbling hot, mix well, add a half-teaspoonful of salt, a few dashes of paprika, one and a half cupfuls of milk, and a cupful of chopped cheese. Cook the sauce well before adding the cheese, and serve as soon as it is melted.

Cheese Savory

Prepare some thin slices of toast. Cover each slice with one-half inch pieces of good flavored cheese. Lay in a baking pan and place an egg carefully in the centre of each piece. Bake in a hot oven until the eggs are set. Season with salt and a dash of paprika on each.

Parsnip Croquettes

These are especially well liked by those who are fond of parsnips. Cut the parsnips in halves and cook until tender, remove the skins and any tough portion, and mash until perfectly smooth, and butter, pepper, salt, and set aside to cool. When cool enough to handle, mould into balls, dip in crumbs and egg then crumbs again, and fry a deep brown. Use as a garnish for a roast

Are Becoming More Particular

BUYERS of high class cheese are becoming more particular each year as to the outside finish of the goods they buy. There is a wide difference in preferences as to weight and style of cheese, but all users of fancy cheese now discriminate closely as to external appearance. Of course the drawn plug exerts more influence than a pretty finish, but the appearance of a lot of cheese will often decide a buyer in his choice.

A maker of cheese cannot be too particular on this point. Each cheese should stand up straight with clean, sharp corners, straight sides and surfaces, in substantial boxes made to fit the cheese. And uniform weights are desired by many buyers also, so that a careful weighing of the curd into the hoops, making allowance for difference in the character of the matured curd will often be found worth while. Buyers when they visit a factory to make a deal will be much more impressed if they see in the curing room rows of well shaped, clean cheese, of uniform size lined up on clean shelves than they would were the cheese an assortment of different shapes, with various degrees of slant, some sloping one way, some another, and with edges that indicated a general lack of care of hoop and followers.

No cheese should leave the press for the curing room unless well shaped, and it is poor economy to continue in use a curing room in which temperatures are so poorly regulated that in hot weather cheese will not stand up straight on the shelves.

If cheese are likely to be exposed to warm weather, it is well, when boxing, to see that the boxes are cut to about the exact height of the cheese. This will tend to keep them in shape should gas develop while in transit.—N. Y. Produce Review.

"AGONY" COLUMN WORSE

War Produces Freak Enquiries in the London Times

One of the strange features of the war is the "Agony" or "Personal" column of the London Times. Although still breathes the old impassioned cryptic messages of love or despair to Beatrice, which the outside observer regards with a cynical smile, wondering whether it's a new hair restorer ad or a rendezvous between "crooks." A whole host of new advertisements have crept into the columns of the "Thunderer." These include passionate demands for the whereabouts of missing officers, innumerable requests for the loan of automobiles, cycles, field glasses and, occasionally, a roll of bank notes without the smallest prospect of security or the least likelihood of return.

Perhaps the crowning triumph of this new brigade of impertinence was the request for the loan of "a cow in milk" to supply fresh milk to a convalescent hospital in France. The reply was instantaneous. A remarkably fine milch cow arrived well in milk. Wounded English and French soldiers were benefited to a surprising extent. But no sooner had the cow arrived then suggestions of all sorts followed in quick succession. A lady of title a countess offered to act as milkmaid without remuneration, all the latest things in pails, churns, stools were offered at very much reduced prices, a farmer proposed to knock $25 off his standard price for any animal selected from his stock. But the best of all was a moneylender who offered a "special war rebate" off a loan to cover the cost of a first class cow.

What is Crisco?

To thousands of housewives of the Dominion, Crisco has come to be regarded as the ideal cooking fat.

It can be used in cooking wherever you have been accustomed to use butter or lard, or any compound.

CRISCO
For Frying—For Shortening
For Cake Making

It gives the same superior results as the best grade of creamery butter at half the cost.

It makes your food more appetizing, and more digestible than the best grade of lard could make it—at no increased expense.

It excels lard in that it gives off no odor or smoke in deep frying, that it can be used over and over for different foods, and that it is unusually convenient to use.

The Best Treatment For Constipation

The Experience of One Who Knows and Places Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills First

It is not difficult to secure a medicine that will effect movement of the bowels. To cure Constipation and the complications which arise from it is another matter.

Constipation of the bowels is usually preceded by torpid action of the liver. Hence it follows that if Constipation is to be cured the liver must be set right. And here lies the secret of the success of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They awaken the action of the liver and insure a good flow of bile, which is nature's cathartic. The liver, kidneys and bowels are invigorated and regulated, and the troubles with the digestive system disappear.

Mr. H. M. Bell, Innisfail, Alta., writes: "For some considerable time I have been using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, which I have obtained through your firm. I suppose during my life I have used nearly all the best-known pills, as I have been subject to Constipation and digestive troubles. A friend recommended Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and I can honestly say that of all the pills I have tried nothing has suited me better—no griping action always insured, and line for the kidneys. This is how I have found them after a thorough test, and you may use this statement if you like."

This letter should convince you of the merits of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, but there is nothing like personal experience. If you do not feel like risking 25 cents for a box, write to us for a free sample box, mentioning where you saw this advertisement. Put this medicine to the test when you have indigestion, constipation, biliousness, backache or kidney derangements. The results will soon prove to you the superiority of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box; all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

NOVEL AND QUICKLY MADE.

By Anabel Worthington.

There are few of us women who do not have, at one time or another, to don an apron and put our own hands to some portion of the domestic work. It is then than an apron which is a thorough protection and yet not too disfiguring is desired.

In looking over the really protective designs none better will be found than the one herewith pictured. It has but two parts, the front and the back, joined by a seam on each shoulder and closed in the centre of the back. This is so cut that the entire dress is covered, except a little scrap at the underarm seam, which begins only at the waistline. Here there is a strap belt, which folds the fabric close to the figure.

The neck is quite deeply cut out and the edges of the opening are bound with bias bands of the apron material or of something else, or trimmed with wash braid of a suitable color. The same trimming outlines the armholes and is used on the belt.

No material has yet been found which quite equals gingham for a serviceable apron. Fast colors, good body and softness of texture make this an ideal material, but calico, chambray and other inexpensive cotton goods will also be suitable, provided they are not so sleazy as to pull in making or laundering.

The apron pattern, No. 7,195, is cut in sizes 36, 40 and 44 inches bust measure. Medium size requires 3¼ yards of 36 inch material, with ½ yard of 27 inch fabric to trim.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

1914—The Khedive rebelled against British control and was deposed. Britain taking over the country as a Protectorate.

KRUPP ARMED EUROPE

Chequered History of World's Greatest Armament Factory

To the genius of Krupp Germany owes its military power. Just over a century ago, Friederich Krupp, the founder of Germany's greatest arsenal, started a little factory on a small piece of ground at Altenessen, a suburb of Essen. Krupp possessed one great asset; he knew the secret of making crucible steel. This secret was actually discovered by an Englishman, and Professor John Oliver Arnold said that when shortly before the war he was dining with the manager of Krupp's, the latter boasted that they were making steel ingots weighing 110 tons for guns by the crucible process evolved 175 years ago by Benjamin Huntsman. It is some satisfaction to learn, however, that, according to the professor, Germans cannot produce Sheffield white crucible steel, the process of making which is a secret handed down from father to son in Sheffield, and that in the North of England we are making ingots weighing 150 tons, while our 12,000 ton presses are capable of squeezing out armour-plate like cheese.

At first Friederich Krupp did not profit much by copying Huntsman's secret. He lacked capital, while quarrels and lawsuits with his partners reduced him to poverty, and he died in 1826, leaving debt and a factory of a couple of sheds.

Friedrich Krupp's widow, however, was a woman of energy and initiative, and with her son Alfred, who was then fourteen years of age, she developed the business with such excellent results that within four years the factory was beginning to gain quite a big reputation. And as he grew up Alfred Krupp became the genius of the firm. It was he who in the works at Essen produced the first gun—a three pounder made of crucible steel—in 1847. Until then, with cast iron and bronze guns, the limit of big achievements had been practically reached. Crucible steel, however, opened a new vista, and the casting of that three-pounder was the real beginning of the great rise of Krupp, and Essen, where at the time Friedrich Krupp established himself there was a little country town of less than 4,000 inhabitants, grew and grew until it became one of the most important cities in Europe, with a population of 300,000, while the little factory developed until it extended over an area of 500 acres.

The fame of Krupp was first brought to the notice of the world, however, during the Franco-German War, for to the power of the Krupp guns was mainly attributed the failure of the French artillery, the Krupp gun of crucible steel having many advantages over the French guns of cast iron and bronze.

For years now, Krupp's have been supplying the world with guns, and the need of coal and iron to feed the furnaces led to the acquisition of collieries, the yearly output of which amounts to about 3,000,000 tons of coal. Krupp's have armed the world. In one year alone the firm has received an order from the German government to supply no fewer than 2,500 field guns. From time to time the German government has subsidised the Krupp works, the profits for 1914 amounting to $8,475,000, as against the $9,150,000 of the previous year. The war, however, has more than compensated for the temporary fall in receipts.

The 22nd ult. was the 108th anniversary of the birth of the great Italian patriot, General Garibaldi.

HAD DIARRHOEA.

Was So Bad Passed Blood.

Little Boy Was Cured By Using

DR. FOWLER'S

Extract of Wild Strawberry.

Diarrhoea arises from many causes such as, change of water, change of climate, change of diet, catching cold, the eating of unripe fruits, etc.

Never neglect what, at first sight, appears to be a slight attack of diarrhoea, for if you do some serious bowel trouble may ensue.

Mrs. Wm. Bartlett, Stanley, N.B., writes: "Last summer our little boy, age 1½ years, took diarrhoea. It got so bad as to pass blood. We procured a bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, and after I had given him the third dose he was all right. I would not be without it, as I consider it a household remedy. It is a God send to any family."

There is nothing that can take the place of "Dr. Fowler's."

There is nothing "Just as Good."

"Dr. Fowler's" has been on the market for the past 70 years.

URIC ACID SUFFERING.

Uric acid is an accumulation of poison which finds lodgment in the system when the kidneys fail to remove it from the blood. In the kidneys and bladder it forms stones, in the joints and muscles it causes rheumatism. In any case the pain and suffering is almost beyond human endurance. Uric acid is promptly removed from the system when the kidneys are kept healthy and active by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Greater Love Hath No Man

A touching anecdote is reported from the front. A French soldier fell wounded close to his trench. All around him the ground was being licked into dust by a hail of German bullets. The injured man made a painful effort to crawl the few yards that separated him from safety, his strength failed and as a last resource he called for help. Not a head showed owing to the German fire. But a voice answered. "Are you married?" asked the unseen soldier. "Yes," answered the wounded man. "Any family?" "Three," came the reply. "Right then I'll come," rejoined the soldier in the trench. A moment later a young man sprang over the parapet into the open and flung himself down between the wounded soldier and the enemy. "You shall see your children again," said the rescuer as he began to push the other towards safety. "I have only my skin to lose."

GREATEST AIR RAID IN WORLD'S HISTORY

GERMAN MUNITION WORKS BOMBED

SIXTY-TWO FRENCH AVIATORS TAKE PART IN AIR RAID UPON FACTORIES

One Hundred and Fifty Bombs, Thirty of Them Carrying High Explosives Were Dropped Upon Dillinger, in East Prussia---Birdmen Made a Round Trip Flight of 300 Miles.

GERMANS CLAIM SUCCESS IN THE EAST

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, Aug. 26.—Sixty-two French aviators bombarded German munition factories at Dillingen, in East Prussia, in the greatest air raid of the war, it was officially reported this afternoon.

The aviators flew a distance of more than 150 miles and return from the French aviation camp in the Vosges region. They dropped 150 bombs upon munition works, of which thirty were of large calibre, carrying high explosives.

In no other raid in the world war have so many aviators been engaged.

The War Office reported the bombardment by French aviators of the railway station at Offenburg, in Baden, which was mentioned in an official statement given out in Berlin early yesterday and transmitted here. The results of this air attack were not reported in the official statement.

No important infantry combats occurred on any sector of the Franco-Flanders battle front yesterday or last night.

Night bomb fighting around Souchez and Neuville, bomb actions in the region of Roye, and artillery and bomb fighting in the Argonne, are reported.

BERLIN, Aug. 26.—Germany's position regarding the sinking of the Arabic according to the facts thus far obtainable, was laid before the State Department at Washington to-day. It is believed to pave the way for a peaceful settlement.

BERLIN, Aug. 26.—An official announcement from the War Office this afternoon said: "The fortress of Brest-Litovsk has been taken by the German and Austro-Hungarian troops. They stormed the works on the western and northwestern front and entered the centre of the fortress last night. The enemy thereupon surrendered the fortress.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—A despatch from Amsterdam says that a transport carrying seriously wounded German marines who participated in the recent fighting in the Gulf of Riga has arrived at Konigsburg from Libau.

PARIS, Aug. 26.—The rumour is current in Athens that Turkey has threatened to sign a separate peace with the Allies unless Germany declares war on Italy.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—Danish importers have virtually completed arrangements with Great Britain by which goods shipped to Denmark, consigned to members of the Merchant Guild at Copenhagen will not be stopped by the British authorities.

The organization guarantees that such consignments will not reach the Central Powers.

The announcement is of supreme importance, because it may foreshadow similar arrangements with other neutrals, including the United States.

CARDIFF, Aug. 26.—Fresh trouble was foreseen this afternoon when 2,000 miners in the Llanhilleth district quit work because they were dissatisfied with the Government's award. Two other South Wales collieries closed at the same time.

NISH, Aug. 26.—The Serbian batteries have effectively shelled Austrians at several points along the frontier the War Office announced to-day. Near Drenutz Austrian detachments attempting to entrench were dispersed.

COUNT VON BERNSTORFF FORWARDS REGRETS

NEW YORK, Aug. 26.—Count Von Bernstorff, German Ambassador, made public the following statement containing an official message sent to him from the Berlin Foreign Office and forwarded earlier in the day to Washington:

"The German Ambassador received the following instructions from Berlin, which he communicated to the Department of State:

"'So far no official information available concerning the sinking of the Arabic. The German government trusts that the American government will not take a definite stand at the hearing only the reports of one side, which in the opinion of the imperial government cannot correspond with the facts, but that a chance will be given to Germany to be heard equally.

"'Although the imperial government does not doubt the good faith of the witnesses whose statements are reported by the newspapers in Europe, it should be borne in mind that these statements are naturally made under excitement which might easily produce wrong impressions. If Americans should actually have lost their lives this would naturally be contrary to our intentions. The German government would deeply regret the fact and begs to tender sincerest sympathies to the American government.

Aiming at $10,000

Campbellford Will Hold a Big Campaign Next Week

Campbellford, Aug. 25.—Campbellford citizens are planning for a big patriotic effort next month. The Campaign Committee has decided upon $10,000 as the sum to be aimed at. A patriotic picnic will probably be held with addresses by prominent speakers.

A Six-Legged Frog is Found

The high cost of living has reached such a pitch now that frogs' legs will soon be off the menu card. However, Mr. Dan. Whetung of Indian Village, has solved the problem, arriving in town with a six-legged frog. The freak has four legs on one side and two on the other. It is to be seen at the Windsor Hotel. Dan says he is going to pay particular attention to the six-legged kind from now on, as they cost less to feed.

A MASS MEETING IN LAKEFIELD ON MONDAY NIGHT

Addresses Will Be Given in Regard to the New Peterboro' Battalion Which Lakefield Young Men Will Be Asked to Join

COMMITTEE TO MEET

The local branch of the Speakers' Patriotic League will start their recruiting campaign in the country on Monday night, when a big meeting will be held in the town hall, Lakefield, at which the speakers will be His Honour Judge Hoyeke, Lt.-Col. Miller, and two Lakefield speakers, whose names will be announced later. Arrangements are being completed for the meeting to-day. Lakefield will elect an auxiliary committee of the Speakers' Patriotic League to stimulate recruiting, and the Women's Comfort Committee will assist. The Lakefield band has volunteered its services to the committee whenever needed.

There is a general meeting of the local executive called for to-morrow night, at the headquarters, corner of George and Brock streets, to complete arrangements for the city and county campaign for the 80th Battalion.

The committee would like to hear from all car owners in the city who would like to assist in the work by lending their cars to take the speakers around to the different meetings at outside points. The names, addresses and telephone numbers of such automobilists are required, and owners are asked to notify the Secretary, R. E. Layfield, 780 Water street.

Were Allowed Their Liberty

Two Local Men Must Refrain From Further Questionable Conduct

The two local young men charged with breaking into Duffus' garage and stealing a quantity of gasoline, appeared this morning before His Honour Judge Huycke for sentence and were allowed to go with a warning. Mr. G. N. Gordon, who appeared for the accused, made a strong plea for leniency. In allowing the men to go, His Honour Judge Huycke warned them of the consequences that might follow in the wake of any further deviations from the straight and narrow path. He said that he would not wait until another offence had been committed, but upon hearing of any subsequent indiscretions would command their appearance before the Court and would sentence them to a place where there are no automobiles, and where they would have an opportunity of forgetting what an automobile looked like.

Chief Howard Is in Ottawa

Together With Ald. Duffus, Chairman of the Fire, Water and Light Committee

Ottawa, Aug. 26.—By an almost unanimous vote, the Fire Chiefs attending the annual convention of the Provincial Fire Chiefs' Association here decided to change the association in fact and name to a national association, and henceforth it will be officially known as the Dominion Fire Chiefs' Association.

Acting Secretary Chief Armstrong of Kingston, put the motion to widen the scope of the association.

Chief Fowler of Sudbury opposed the change, but the motion carried by a vote of 44 to 4.

Last night an impressive memorial service was held in memory of the late Chief Smith of Barrie and Chief Smith of Belleville.

Fire Chief Howard and Ald. J. J. Duffus of Peterborough, are in attendance.

ADVANTAGES OF THE OVERSEAS CLUB FUND ARE FULLY EXPLAINED

Mr. Arthur Private Shows How System Adopted to Provide Tobacco For Soldiers at the Front is Carried Out--The Maximum Amount of Tobacco at the Minimum Cost.

Speaking in the City Council Chambers last night Mr. Arthur Private laid before his audience an unusually strong case on behalf of the Tobacco Fund of the Overseas Club. He showed that by means of the club tobacco could be delivered to the men at the front at less than half it would cost the ordinary individual to send it to their relative or friend. He explained how every parcel was, without fail, delivered to the person to whom it was addressed, while other parcels going through the ordinary mail route might never reach the persons for whom they were intended. Consequently the case of the tobacco fund appeals to all who wish to do something to make the life of the boys at the front a little more bearable, and was endorsed by everyone present last night.

Mayor Buller presided at the meeting and others present were Messrs. J. H. Burnham, M.P., R. J. Soden, S. W. Travers, W. R. Morris, W. H. Dunsford, E. G. Patterson, the Rev. J. N. Clarry and others.

A Necessity.

In opening Mr. Private explained that some objection had been made to the wholesale distribution of cigarettes to the soldiers, by people who did not object to tobacco in other forms. It was, however, a fact that cigarettes were of more service to the man in the trenches than tobacco in any other form. In the first place there was not room in the ordinary service uniform for a man to carry a pipe and tobacco. Secondly the sustained match glow necessary to light a pipe and tobacco. Secondly the suspicious wound and had cost some their lives. And tobacco in the trenches was pre-eminently a necessity. All along the hundreds of miles of battle-front small areas were being constantly taken and retaken, and hundreds of bodies therefore were left exposed for weeks in and near the trenches. The result was an odour which made the use of tobacco almost imperative, and which often made it impossible for the men to eat more than one day's rations in three. These conditions brought the nerves of the soldiers to such a state that the use of tobacco was a mighty relief.

Origin of the Club.

The Overseas Club owed its origin to the late King Edward, and having been launched as a result of his initiative in the matter had now progressed until there were one 141,000 members. The club had heard the plea of the man at the front for tobacco and were doing their best to see that it was answered. During the first seven months of the war the club brought to being a movement that resulted in the consolidation of the tobacco funds of all England. Now it proposed to extend its efforts in the interests of the men from Canada. The greatest possible efficiency of service was secured for the delivery of the tobacco, as it was made, manufactured, packed into cases and shipped directly under the control of the Government. From England it is being taken right to the trenches by the Royal Army Service Corps. The Dominion Government was prevented by law from subsidizing the tobacco fund but after interviewing several members of the cabinet Mr. Private had succeeded in arranging that the post offices throughout the Dominion be placed at the disposal of the club. Thus every municipality, great and small, central or isolated, was at one stroke taken into the movement and much very valuable time was gained. He had interviewed the authorities of the Bank of Montreal and the Bank of Commerce with the result that both of these institutions had placed their branches at the disposal of the club. Sixty or seventy representative newspapers had also taken hold of the cause.

A Vast Saving.

"If only seventy per cent of the tobacco funds of the Dominion are consolidated," said the speaker, "it will mean a saving to Canada of $600,000 a year. And we all know that every cent of money is needed and will be needed. By means of the club's organization, tobacco which would cost local retailers not less than 90c. to purchase wholesale, was bought packed and delivered to the soldiers. Not only that, but delivery was ensured, thus overcoming the difficulty that a man who might belong to a certain regiment to-day may be drafted into a different unit to-morrow. The club's system provide an equal distribution to all, thus preventing waste.

Mr. Private took pains to point out that all wishing to send tobacco to relatives at the front could send twice as much for the same money, and be a great deal more certain that delivery would be made, than by the ordinary channels. At first the tobacco had been all purchased in England, but now arrangement had been made to buy it in Canada. Thus the money was being paid to Canadian workmen.

$500 a Week.

In conclusion Mr. Private pointed out that over 1,000 men had gone from this district, and it would therefore take $500 a week to provide them all with 5lb. worth of tobacco each week. He urged upon the men who understood the absolute need of tobacco for the men at the front, to take hold of the local end of the scheme and make arrangements for monthly subscriptions which would total $500 a week. He asked that some one newspaper should make daily appeals on the Club's behalf, that a committee of prominent men well informed as to the possibilities of the club be appointed and that they in turn secure a field force of fifty men each to be responsible for a minimum of $10 a week.

Acting on this suggestion Mr. R. J. Soden was elected chairman of the committee and all the men present agreed to serve on it. A meeting of the committee was called for to-night in the Bank of Montreal chambers at 8 o'clock, and it is expected that within the next few days the undertaking of supplying the local men with tobacco will be well under way.

Last night the report from the secretary of the local overseas club showed that some $290 has been collected in this city, of which $50 was collected at the Examiner office. While Mr. Private pointed out that this amount was quite inadequate, he remarked that if $290 could be raised through individual effort surely the desired sum could be secured by systematic canvassing.

At the conclusion of his address a vote of thanks was tendered the speaker on motion of Messrs. R. J. Soden and R. W. Travers.

Sale of Flowers For Work of Red Cross

The Peterborough branch Red Cross Society, having accepted the kind offer of Mr Roland Denne, President Peterborough Floral Co. of 5,000 cut flowers to be sold on Saturday, Aug. 28th, by members of the society, at Mr Denne's store on George street, would respectfully draw the attention of members of the various churches of the city to the fact that this might be a favourable opportunity, not only of helping the funds of the Red Cross Society, but to place flowers in the several churches next Sunday in memory of those of our Peterborough men who have fallen for their country at the front.

Any who desire to make use of this suggestion please notify one of the officers of the Red Cross Society, who will see that the order is placed in the proper hands.

Any citizen who has flowers and would like to donate them for Red Cross work, kindly send them on Saturday morning to Mr Denne's store on George street.

TO-MORROW'S TRIP TO HEALEY FALLS

Those who have been watching for another chance to see Healey Falls and enjoy the fine six hours' sail over this attractive route, will no doubt avail themselves of the trip on the steamer "Stoney Lake" announced to take place to-morrow. This trip has become so popular this season and so much has been said about the attractions which it affords, that it is expected the "Stoney Lake" will have another successful excursion to-morrow. See particulars elsewhere for time of departure, fare, etc.

A Great Chance For City's Young Men

59TH BATTALION RECRUITS GIVEN A BIG RECEPTION

Were Greeted With Cheer After Cheer as They Marched Into Camp Headed by the Band—Officer Commanding Remarks on Their Smart Appearance

MADE GREAT IMPRESSION

The detachment of Peterborough recruits for the 59th Battalion, including the 59th Band, which left here yesterday morning in charge of Lieut Rackham, were accorded an enthusiastic reception on their arrival at Barricfield Camp. They travelled in a car specially put on for their accommodation. On their arrival they detrained in front of the Barracks, thus shortening the walk into Barricfield Camp, by half a mile. Led by the Band they made a decided impression on the fifteen hundred soldiers who lined the way as they marched into camp. Cheer after cheer went up for the newcomers, and it was the remark of the officer commanding the 59th, that the body of recruits was the smartest looking of any that had ever come to Barricfield.

The presence of the Band will make things lively around the camp. Their music will be greatly appreciated, as it is four weeks since there was one there, the 38th Band having gone to Bermuda.

Sergt Grainge, who accompanied the boys to Barricfield, will return to Peterborough with the uniforms of the men and band instruments, it must be 59th by the 57th.

The draft from the 59th Battalion for immediate overseas service left Barricfield to-day en route to England.

ASHES HAVE BEEN REMOVED

So the City Engineer Reports to the Board of Works—New Bridge for Bonacord Street

At last night's meeting of the Board of Works City Engineer Parsons reported that the ashes which were deposited in a creek on Smith Street at the instance of Mr D. W. Dennis, it is alleged, and over which there has been considerable controversy, have been removed.

City Engineer Parsons estimates the cost of a cement bridge on Bonacord street, at $3,685.00 or as an alternative, a bridge not the full width of the road at an estimated cost of $2,913.00. The above estimates do not include the cost of the approaches.

On motion of Aldermen Lekan and Saunders the construction of the cheaper bridge was authorized.

A New Sidewalk.

The Board recommended that notice be given of the Council's intention to construct a cement sidewalk on St. Thomas street, from Gilmour street to Charlotte street.

Mr. J. Peters' request for an approach at 461 Hunter street will be granted. The work will be done when the pavement is being constructed.

A letter was read from Mr. W. J. Johnston, drawing attention to the condition of Water street from the north of Dublin street and offering one hundred yards of gravel to be used in repairing that portion of the street. The work will be done at an early date and Mr. Johnston's offer accepted.

Sewer Connections.

A report concerning the proposed drain on Douro street was again considered and received on motion of Aldermen Weir and Lekan.

The City Engineer will be consulted as to the legality of putting in sewer connections. If it can be legally done such connections as may be necessary will be constructed and such action confirmed by the Council.

80th Battalion Affords an Unique Opportunity to Enlist.—Men Will Be Housed, Equipped and Trained Here—Separation Allowance Begins at Once.

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

It is up to the young men of Peterborough and Peterborough County.

The authorization of the formation of a battalion in Peterborough gives them the opportunity to enlist under the most favourable conditions.

By joining the 80th Battalion the young men of the district will be in a unit composed of men from their own neighbourhood. It should be a battalion of neighbours, comrades and friends, training for overseas service at home, with the additional comfort that means, and with an energetic association of patriotic citizens working to further the interests of the men. The Battalion will, of course, be on the same footing as the other units of the Canadian expeditionary force. The separation allowance commences as soon as the men enlist, and until they are placed in barracks the recruits will be paid $1.85 a day. Uniforms will be provided here, and the 80th Battalion will differ in no way from any of the other battalions, except that it will be trained in Peterborough instead of in Belleville as was the 39th, or in Kingston as were other units. To the young man looking for a chance for promotion an ideal opportunity is offered now. Sooner or later the eligible men of the city will have to join the colours, and they will have no opportunity to enlist under more favourable conditions than at present.

The 80th Battalion men drilled this morning under the direction of Sergt Calladine. The detachment is coming along in fine shape.

Lieut Rackham of the 59th Battalion is in the city in connection with the Regimental Fund of the Battalion.

Harry Simpson, the well-known Lakefield hockey player and paddler, who is with the 50th Calgary Battalion C.E.F., is applying for a transfer to the 80th Peterborough Battalion. He is at present home on leave from the West.

Sergeant Instructor L. Dove, Headquarters Barricfield Camp, formerly Colour Sergeant in the 57th Regiment, arrived here on the 5.40 train last evening, and will spend a few days' vacation in Peterborough. While here he is the guest of Colour Sergeant and Mrs. Tarzett of 543 Dovercourt Road, and will return to Barricfield next Tuesday.

In the list of the men who left for Barricfield Camp yesterday, the name of Bandsman Ernest Gibson was omitted. He has been a member of the 57th Regimental Band for 10 or 11 years, and is a splendid cornet player. He expects here will be missed.

The team of Walter Parr, who represented the 39th Battalion yesterday through, as can be seen by the score, was defeated by the 59th Battalion team. Parr was an applicant for overseas service, but was rejected on account of defective eyesight.

Since the present campaign began some 215 men have been accepted for active service in Peterborough, although three-fourths of these have not been attested. The list is as follows:

39th Battalion	13
59th Battalion Band	20
80th Battalion	62
33rd Battery	11
4th C M R	4

140 of these men have arrived here to Barricfield Camp.

Letter to the Examiner

Dear Sir,—I have heard a number of comments as to the number of Peterborough men who have enlisted, since the war broke out, and a number of different figures have been quoted. Will you kindly publish the figures for the benefit of myself and a good many others whom I know are interested.

Yours etc.

Subscriber.

The following figures will answer Subscriber's question. In the case of Peterborough serving in other units the estimate is considerably under the mark, and the total will probably be greater than that given. The list:

21st Battalion, C.E.F.	120
4th Battery, C.E.F.	90
21st Battalion	60

IS CANADA IN DANGER?

The Bishop of Huron, London, Ont., writes to the press stating that from information he has received the German Government has purchased vast quantities of munitions in the United States, and that they have not been shipped, but are stored somewhere in the United States, ready for use against Canada. We don't doubt the willingness of the thousands of military reservist Germans in the United States to use these munitions to make a descent upon Canada; but at present the danger of such a descent is problematical.

Such an invasion may not take direct and isolated form; but there is no doubt that in case we permit Germany to get the upper hand, these munitions if they exist, will be used, in the hands of German reservists to coperate, with the German invading force and either attack Canada or cripple the hands of the United States, which under "world domination" success would be "meat" for the maw of German militarism, which would be helped in its aims by the snakes Uncle Sam is warming in his bosom.

The lesson of the menace of Canadian invasion from the United States, if it exists, is that whether it comes or not, we are threatened with another danger which is not uncertain if we allow Germany to win. In this event Canada will come under the thumb of the Hun. Germany represents the greatest combination for evil, the greatest strength of devilry, the most colossal combination of fiendishly directed and organized power for evil, the world has ever seen. She is arrayed and panoplied by forty years of preparation and inspired by a spirit of savagery that is the incarnation and concentration of all the evil in spirit the arch enemy of mankind has evoked in the world. All that stands in the way of Germany's plans, must be crushed, and if the attempt at crushing is not met and foiled with, and by superior force, Canada, which stands in the way, will be the first country outside of Great Britain to suffer.

Our duty is to give all the help we can to win out against, the colossal and common enemy of mankind. Every soldier added to the ranks, counts; every man who is able to fight and refuses, is fighting, nevertheless; is fighting with Germany in that he is not doing his share to break the force of the German assault upon humanity — he is simply lying down to have the Germans walk over him.

THE GREAT DOMESTIC ISSUE.

The Ottawa Free Press, as one of the arguments against the holding of a general election at the present time, says:

> There is no domestic issue, because all domestic issues have had to be thrown overboard, owing to the great foreign issue having swamped everything else.

This is true and not true. There are in the sense referred to no domestic issues demanding immediate attention; but there is one tremendous domestic issue, that has swallowed up all foreign issues as Aaron's rod swallowed up the rods of the magicians, and that is Canada's participation in the war. That has become an obsessing domestic issue, one that demands our undivided attention; one that will permit of no distraction such as the turmoil and upsetting activities of a general election would create. This is a time for concentration upon an issue that has become the one great domestic issue of Canada. The spirit of Canada has made it so; the circumstances demand that it should be so. We are called upon to set aside every consideration, every interest, that does not involve Canada's becoming and sufficient contribution to waging this righteous war. We must subordinate our social life, our personal pleasures, and all other things that at other times normally and legitimately engross our attention. We are fighting for nationallife; if we save that all things that go with it will be saved. The littleness of party advantage or the success of this or that little policy, loses all relevance to our activities and even our duties, in face of the great domestic issue Canada has to deal with—how we can best and most effectuate our participation in the great struggle, to what we can and should do to stay and end the carnage and destruction that is setting the world aghast. Every day the war continues the waste of human life by thousands, and the destruction or destructive use of millions of property, with inexpressible human suffering, continues. Every day by which the war can be shortened—so much shortens this terrible carnival of awfulness. Every soldier that enters the ranks is a contributory factor in ending the war.

IT IS OUR FIGHT.

There are numerous excuses for evading the duty of enlisting. One among the many is that this is not Canada's war; it is Britain's war, and Britons should do the fighting. This is not Britain's war any more than it is our war. Britain went into the war not for conquest, not for direct material advantage, but to protect an assaulted small nation; for the principle of individual national liberty, which in turn involves the question of the liberty of the individual the world over. She went to war against a monstrous system of militarism, which avowedly sought world domination.

If that ambition is realized; if Germany is successful in this war, we shall have world domination. Germany wants colonies. She spent millions upon millions to build a navy that should help her gain and hold territory where she could plant her surplus population and impose the autocracy that crushes and enslaves the German people. If she wins she will realize this desire for territory for territory by seizing the colonial possessions of Great Britain. Of all these Canada is the largest, the most tempting. As sure as fate, if the German gets his way in the war Canada will pass under German rule, and we all know what that would be, or rather we will not know the crushing weight of the "mailed fist" till we come under it, as we shall do unless the calamity of German success in this war is averted. It cannot be averted unless the full force of the threatened sections of the Empire is thrown into the fight.

It is plainly, therefore, the duty of every man in Canada, and in the Empire to get into the fight, if for no higher reason than self-preservation. This may not be a very high motive, but even if each acts upon it the benefits will be common, and we shall not only have self-preservation, but by joint action the preservation of the whole.

No man in Peterborough or Canada can, it seems, seriously entertain the idea that this is not his fight. It is just as much the fight of Canada as if the German forces, were directly as they are indirectly doing, if their success is permitted, imminently threatening, our very shores with invasion.

It isn't Peterborough or Canadian manhood or manliness, that asserts that Canada is not in this fight, should not be in this fight. It is the spirit of moral pauperism, that accepts gifts, that accepts services that if we are manly, if we are good citizens, men of independent spirit, we should gain for ourselves. There is little difference in the moral attitude of a man that refuses to work, and takes his place in the bread line and holds out his hand for a crust, and of the man, able to fight, who refuses to fight, yet is willing to accept the advantages, the liberties, the good things of life, that others fight for. It is as if we refused to help put out the fire of our neighbour's blazing home, because it is not our own. The refusal to regard ourselves as in the fight in this war, because Great Britain alone is concerned, is both illogical and cowardly, and infinitely selfish.

It may be felt that by somebody's fighting, if not by ours, the victory will be won. How can a man who fails to do his share to win a victory, throw up his hat in rejoicing over the danger he has escaped? How can he hold up his head and look in the face the men who shouldered their guns and helped win the triumph in which he benefits as much as they?

No; no man able to fight, no man that has the spirit of a Canadian, the spirit of a real man, can creditably shirk his responsibility by the cowardly claim that the duty belongs to somebody else.

THE WORK OF BRITISH SUBMARINES

While Germany was murdering more of those non-combatants in the sinking of the Arabic, a British submarine was accomplishing that for which submersible boats were designed, by sinking one of Germany's largest battle cruisers, the von Moltke, in the Baltic sea.

This destruction of the von Moltke alone more than outbalances anything the von Tirpitz undersea fleet has done since the early days of the war. She was one of Germany's newest and most powerful fighting units, a capital ship being a vessel of 23,000 tons, 580 feet in length, and with an armament of ten 11-inch, and twelve 6-inch guns, and twelve 24-pounders. She was built in 1911 and had a speed of 28 knots.

The von Moltke was with the German squadron about to raid England months ago, and only escaped the fate of the Blucher because the British admiral's ship, the Lion, had her speed reduced by a shot into her oil feed tank. In the delay that occurred in consequence, the von Moltke got away to meet her end in the Baltic. The German navy can ill afford to lose ships of the von Moltke class, therefore the achievement in the Baltic has a real military value.—Ottawa Free Press.

LAURIER IN QUEBEC.

Mr. Bernard Rose, President of the St. Lawrence Ward Conservative Association of Montreal, has written a letter to the Montreal Mail, strongly approving of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's speech at St. Lin. He describes Sir Wilfrid as an outspoken exponent of all that is best in British political life. Thoroughly acquainted with British history and constitutional development, he knows that under British institutions the people rule, and Germon despotism would be impossible.

"Sir Wilfrid Laurier has ranged himself on the side of those who believe in the scantity of contracts. He believes in the right of small nations. He is prepared to counsel his fellow-citizens to assist in upholding the honour of those countries that demand respect for the bond which they signed, in the name of the people, and he is therefore justified in appealing to the chivalrous amongst his compatriots to participate in the great war. He knows that in connection with any dispute that may arise between fellow-citizens in this country of different cares and faiths, that these will finally be adjusted upon the basis and in conformity with the principles of justice and righteousness."

Sir Wilfrid is a safe and wise guide for French-Canadians as well as for other Canadians. Apart from their sympathy with Frenchmen in France, the people of Quebec have a natural interest in a struggle for liberty and for the rights which are enjoyed under free institutions. Nowhere in the world would Prussian rule be more heartily detested than in the Province of Quebec. No greater contrast could be found than that between the vulgar, hustling "bounders" of Prussian Imperialism and the people of Quebec. Nowhere is greater liberty enjoyed, and nowhere should it be more highly prized.—Toronto Star.

How does the British soldier come to be known by the name of Tommy Atkins? The name which we have come to use as a term of affection and honour (says a writer) was first given in 1815, the time of the Battle of Waterloo, when the Army forms bore the signature "Thomas Atkins, his mark," as a guide to the soldier in filling the particulars required. At that time there were many soldiers who could neither read nor write.

IS THE BISHOP OF HURON AN EPISCOPAL PESSIMIST, OR A VOICE TO BE HEEDED?

To the Editor of The Mail and Empire.

Sir,—To play the role of an alarmist is not a very patriotic thing to do at any time, and especially at a time of tension like the present. Nevertheless it is just possible in our effort to maintain a calm face and save our people from unnecessary worry that we are overdoing our part, and through false assurance drifting perilously near to dwelling in a fool's paradise.

The speech of George G. Moore, of Detroit, reported in the papers of August 18th, though intended as a warning to the people of the United States contains an even more serious warning to the people of Canada. He declares (1) that there are 2,500,000 German and Austrian reservists in the United States who are not naturalized; (2) that these are subject to the Kaiser, and report regularly to the German consuls throughout the United States; (3) that the German government has purchased in the United States vast quantities of munitions "much more than the United States has purchased for its own use since the outbreak of the war"; (4) that these munitions were not shipped away, but are now somewhere in the United States; and (5) that in any of the big cities of the United States (e.g. Buffalo, Detroit, St. Paul, Minneapolis, etc.) "within 48 hours on an order from the Kaiser," a division of reservists could be mobilized and ready for war.

Mr. Moore is apparently a responsible man and speaks of what he knows. Assuming that he is approximately correct, is not the situation for Canada even more serious than for the United States? Suppose an order from the Kaiser came for these reservists to invade Canada, what is there to prevent a division or two from invading Canada either in the Niagara peninsula or in the peninsula of Essex or Kent? The assistance of the United States government may be eliminated as of no account, since for the time being, as Mr. Moore points out, the invaders would be more powerful than any force which the United States government could bring to bear upon them. They would be masters of the situation until they had obtained a firm footing in Canada. The United States being thus incapable of preventing such an attack upon Canada, what means have we in Canada of repelling such an attack? We are told that there are about 70,000 men now in training in this country. But these are strung out in a thin line all the way from Halifax to Vancouver, and not overabundantly equipped, if rumour is to be credited. At either Niagara or Detroit a division (let us say 30,000 men), of these reservists, fully equipped with the munitions now secretly stored in the United States, could easily overwhelm any and every force that we could immediately bring against them. One in possession of either of these two peninsulas, they after the manner of the Teutons, would live off the country, and if any opposition were offered by the inhabitants we would be treated to a experience of German "frightfulness." We would then know what Belgium has passed through.

Assuming, as I said, that the statements of Mr Geo. C Moore are approximately correct, I maintain that the position of Canada is perilous, and no good purpose can be served by hiding or ignoring the situation. To be ready for such an emergency as may be forced upon us we ought to enroll all the men in the country who are capable of fighting and begin their training without delay, for untrained men would be useless against the Teuton reservists, who are all thoroughly versed in the art of war. In the meantime, should not all our militia regiments be summoned to the colours and fully equipped and supplied with munitions? The time to do this is before, not after, invasion takes place. Moreover, such a mobilization would be the best preventive.

I am writing this with a full sense of responsibility, but also with grave concern for the peril we seem to be in from our apparent unpreparedness, and also in the two-fold hope that, on the other hand, the militia department will take, if it is not now taking, steps to guard our homes efficiently from invasion, in this southern district, and on the other, that our young men will at once enroll themselves by tens of thousands for military training, so that they may be prepared to meet the enemy at the gate should he venture to invade this fair land.

Yours, etc.,
DAVID WILLIAMS.
Bishop of Huron.

"Nothing Succeeds Like Circulation"

It is the circulation of The Examiner that gets it so many "Want" and "For Sale" advertisements—a circulation that gives the advertiser every confidence of producing quick results.

When you write a "Want", tell all the important facts. If you are advertising for help, tell just what is to be expected of the applicants. As a matter of fairness, those who seek employment should know all the principal facts regarding a position.

"For Sale" advertising in The Examiner will show the facility with which you can turn "used things" that are no longer needed, into money quickly.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

MANY RUGBY PLAYERS HAVE JOINED THE COLOURS

TORONTO, Aug. 25.—The good old game of rugby in Canada has probably suffered more than any other branch of sport from the war condition. In fact, there is not a team among any of the leagues who have not had their ranks depleted by the boys enlisting in the soldiers. When one looks back a couple of years and remembers that good old Ross Bluffey, Art Moore, Bill Jarvis would be gathering their duffy togs together for the season it seems the war a little closer home. Those three good rugby players have met their death fighting for their country and along with many other athletes are buried "somewhere in France."

Rugby was played last year after several of the stalwarts had left for the front and it will likely be continued again this season and it should, be for no other reason that it seems to make a lot more soldiers for the Empire.

Last year when the war broke out the number of football stalwarts who went away with the first contingent seemed at that time to be large but the game went on just the same and [illegible] and Varsity were [illegible] Hamilton Tigers [illegible] Championship.

Before the season of 1914 commenced the Argonauts lost such rugby stalwarts as Binkley, Jarvis, Grant, Sinclair, Botterill, Muir and Rennie, while Varsity were without the services of "Pete" Campbell, Blackbeck Storms and several others who were inured on to make the team last year, but despite the handicap they were good enough to win.

The report from Queen's to the effect that they will decide next week whether they will have a team or not in the inter-collegiate series [illegible] Red Mackenzie, the great half-back, Tommy Stratton, the clever quarter and Saunders, Bryon, Sinclair and Bryans, and several others of the second squad who gave promise of making the senior team this season.

However it is more than likely that the colours of the two great organizations will be carried on the field as usual in the fall and they will be able to muster teams strong enough to give the Hamilton Tigers and Frank Shaughnessy's McGill aggregation a good tussle for the rugby honours.

FRENCH SPORTING CELEBRITIES FIGHT ENEMY IN THE AIR.—This photograph was taken at a French aero base in Northern France. The figure on the left is Georges Carpentier, the famous boxer, and next to him is Somes, French champion cyclist. Somes had brought down a German aviator in an exciting aerial battle just before the photograph was taken.

CAMPBELLFORD BEAT THE TWEED TEAM 6 TO 2

Campbellford, Aug. 25.—Campbellford won their tenth straight victory, and the eastern Ontario championship of the O. A. L. A. here today when they defeated Tweed by the score of 6 to 2 before the largest crowd that was ever at a game in Campbellford. This gives the locals the round to 11 to 1 as the first game in Tweed was 5 to 5. It was a nip and tuck affair in the first half but the pace set by the locals told on Tweed in the last half. In the second quarter Campbellford had five men on the fence but Tweed failed to score.

Pete Hocking of Toronto handled the whistle and gave perfect satisfaction and had the players well in hand at all times. Score by quarters: 3 to 1, 3 to 2, 4 to 2, 6 to 2.

GERMAN REPULSE IN ATTEMPT TO LAND TROOPS WAS COMPLETE

MR. ASQUITH'S LIFE

Yorkshire Sunday School Lad Who Has Had Long Premiership

"Cold as crystal, as clever as the devil, whose intellect is tempered steel. One whom all respect; many fear." It was the late Mr W. T. Stead who thus on one occasion summed up Mr. Asquith, who has been Prime Minister without a break for a longer period than any other statesman since the Reform Act. His nearest competitor is the late Marquis of Salisbury, whose last Premiership extended over seven years sixteen days. Mr. Asquith became Premier in 1908. Before the war it was said that no Premier had ever experienced such a strenuous seven years, in which violent party strife, threats of civil war, and reform of the Constitution have been followed by the greatest war in modern history.

From Middle Classes

Unlike other distinguished men, there has never been any argument regarding Mr Asquith's birthplace. He is a hard-headed Yorkshireman from Morley—the busy little textile town, five miles from Leeds, and eight miles from Bradford—where he was born at the Croft House on September 12th, 1852. It is recorded that Mr. Asquith's ancestors lived in the town for over 400 years. The house in which Mr. Asquith was born is still utilised, a place of equal interest being the Rehoboth Chapel, which he attended as a boy. Some time ago Mr. Asquith, when referring to this period of his life, stated that he recalled as a small boy taking part in the Sunday school processions and carrying a banner on the occasion of the rejoicings at the declaration of peace in the Crimea.

Mr. Asquith lived at Morley until he was seven years old, when his father, who was a manufacturer, died. Mrs. Asquith then moved to Huddersfield, where the future Premier was sent to the local grammar school. Subsequently Herbert Henry Asquith and his brother William attended the City of London School, and the former, having obtained two scholarships, went to Oxford.

Brilliant at College

At the City of London School Mr. Asquith is best remembered as a quiet, studious boy who did not care for games, but preferred to spend his dinner-hour reading the "Times." It was the Master of Balliol who remarked, "Asquith will get on, he is so direct." And after a brilliant career at that college, Mr. Asquith was called to the Bar in 1876, and became a Q.C. in 1890.

Four years previously he had entered Parliament as M.P. for East Fife, which he has always represented since. It is a fact not generally known that both Mr. Joseph Chamberlain and Mr. Gladstone were so impressed by Mr. Asquith's abilities that he was offered sixteen different seats before he finally accepted the invitation to stand for East Fife.

Although in public life somewhat cold and austere, Mr. Asquith in private life is the most genial of men. Like Mrs. Asquith, whom he married in 1894, his first wife having died three years previously, the Premier seeks relaxation in golf. He has two daughters and five sons, four of whom went out to serve their country in the great war.

GERMAN PRAISES FOES

Berlin Officer-Lawyer Faces War Situation very Candidly

An American resident writes from Berlin, Germany:

—I had a talk with a reserve officer, whom I have known quite well for some years. Before the war broke out he was a lawyer here with a very good practice. He went to Belgium and returned here on a short furlough to visit his wife and children who live in a pretty villa just outside Berlin.

When I spoke to him of the long campaign he had been through and asked him with what feelings he returned to his regiment on the Yser, he said: "Of course, I know that we shall win in the end, but the war will go on for a long time yet. People here, I find, believe we are fighting an inferior enemy, but I only wish they might come out and see what we are up against. Frenchmen, Englishmen and Belgians, all fight like heroes. As men they are our equals in every way, and if we beat them, it will only be because we are better organized."

He then expressed his belief that before the end all the remaining neutral states would be forced to take sides. "Probably against us," he said.

WHY FORTRESSES FALL

Action of Heavy Guns Against Viaduct Will Explain

The destruction of Dannemarie viaduct, in Alsace by one of the German 42-cm. (16-inch) guns is described by a Swiss eye-witness. This viaduct, a magnificent piece of engineering is half a mile in length. The French had been compelled to blow up the middle arch in order to prevent the enemy from using this easy means of communication. Then came an offensive movement, which restored all the region east of Dannemarie to the possession of the French and the Belfort military authorities set to work to repair the viaduct. German airmen watched the progress of the work, and German heavy artillery 6-inch guns—sought in vain to wreck the pillars from the distance of five to six miles.

Determined to have the last word, the Germans brought up one of their 42-cm. guns. An emplacement was carefully prepared in the Wittenheim quarries in the vicinity of Alkirch, and the bombardment began. "It was something awful," says the eye-witness. "I have never heard such a cannonade. The houses rocked to their foundations, the earth shivered, and the detonations were so powerful that we were dazed. The Germans had three aeroplanes locating the viaduct from an altitude of 6,000 feet to 9,000 feet. The viaduct was wrecked, cut in two, but not before 51 shots were fired, six of them coming from the 42-cm gun. The ground on which the viaduct stands is cut up beyond recognition. One of the holes caused by a '42' shell is 13 feet deep and 28 fee tin diameter. It is easy to understand how the most solidly constructed forts are powerless to resist such effects."

"WHO COMES HERE?"

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1913, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

"Halt! Who comes here?"

"Friends, with the countersign."

"Advance one and give the countersign."

It was the relief going the rounds to change the pickets, and I was dropped out at post No. 7. We had fought Lee all day long on the strangest battlefield of the whole war—in the Wilderness. From right to left flank, from front to rear, we were hemmed in by forest and thicket. There were swamps in which lizards and serpents lurked, thickets in which the coy whippoor will built its nest, dense spots of forest which seemed never to have echoed the ring of the woodman's ax.

Post No. 7 was under a large tree on the edge of a thicket. It was a lonely place, well away from the camps, the dead and the dying, but I was glad to be alone. I had been nearly an hour on the post without anything happening to alarm me, when I heard a person moving in the thicket across the open strip.

Rustle, rustle! Step, step! It was a cautious movement. Whoever it was hoped to reach me without discovery, but there were dead leaves underfoot, and the thicket was dense. A hare could not have moved without betraying its presence.

"Who comes here?"

There is silence for fifteen seconds, and then a woman's voice answers:

"I can't find the place! It's [illegible] I can't find the place!"

Aye, it was a woman's voice, and it had a sob in it, too—a woman there in the darkness between the hostile lines with powder smoke still in the air, with stray bullets darting through the thickets with a whiz as of some great insect stirred to anger.

"Who comes here?"

"I wish it wasn't so dark! I am so tired!"

And then she comes across the open strip toward me, making no stop, never hesitating, walking straight up to me, as if she could see as well by night as in the sunshine of day.

"I can't find the place!" she sobbed as she came to a stop within arm's length.

"Good God, woman, what are you doing here?" I gasped, almost terrified at her presence.

"See! See!" she replied, holding a bundle out toward me. "One time I saw a beautiful spot in the woods and said to myself that if he died I would bury him there, but I can't find it—I can't find it!"

"What is it, woman? What have you got there?"

"See! See! Don't be afraid. He's dead. He can't speak or move. Take him!"

She put a bundle into my arms, and I cried out and let my musket fall. It was the body of a baby about a year and a half old. Dead? Yes—dead from a cruel bullet which had pierced its little body and left a great wound, which looked horrible to me in the dim light; dead and cold and bathed in its own blood—dead for hours! And when I reached out and touched the shawl or wrap worn by the mother my fingers burned at the feel of blood!

"Was it your baby? Did you live in the cabin beyond the thicket?" I asked, still holding the little corpse.

"He was so happy!" she said as she patted the little bare head with a motherly hand. "And I was so happy too! He won't ever laugh and crow again, will he? I've got to find that beautiful place and bury him, haven't I? And you'll help me? Yes; I know you will, for you don't swear and curse at me."

She had lost her mind. Think of it—an insane mother wandering over a bloody battlefield with her dead child in her arms! She had but one idea—to bury it in a dell which she had once visited and remarked its beauty, a dell in which Federal and Confederates were doubtless then burying their own dead.

I knew not what to do. I could not leave my post, and I did not want her to go wandering farther. I was trying to soothe and quiet the woman when she suddenly cried out:

"Ah, it's not so dark now, and I can find the place! I'll go on ahead and dig the grave, and you follow on with the baby. Poor baby! He won't know that he is buried, will he? I can find the place, and you"—

"Come back! Come back!" I called to her as she fled away in the darkness, but she was 300 feet away as she answered me:

"I'll find the place! Poor, poor baby!"

And when the relief came I told the story and pointed to the bundle resting on the ground beside me.

"God pity her!" whispered the sergeant as he lifted his cap.

"God pity her!" echoed all the others as they stood uncovered around the poor little corpse.

Time meant human lives that night. Grant was moving by the flank. Lee was moving by the flank to match him. The morrow was to witness more slaughter—make thousands of other widows and orphans.

"Dig here!" said the sergeant, and with our bayonets we scooped out a shallow grave in scarcely more than a minute's time.

"Carefully now! Poor little thing! Now fill in. That will do. God knows where it lies! Fall in! Forward, march!"

And yet men write of the glory of war!

The total subscriptions to the National Committee for Relief in Belgium now amounts to over £705,000.

Off to Barriefield.

The third draft from the 24th Field Battery for the 33rd Battery, C.F.A., left for Barriefield camp this morning, the quota consisting of Lieut. M. B. Hamilton and eleven artillerymen. This makes Peterborough's representation in the new battery so far two officers and forty-two men. Another draft will leave in a few days.

This morning's send-off was quiet in comparison to that which marked the departure of recent detachments. The music was furnished by the Bugle Band of the 57th Regiment, while a number of infantry recruits were on hand to say good-bye to their comrades-in-arms. The gathering at the station consisted mainly of friends of the departing soldiers, and there were some tearful farewells.

Of the eleven who left this morning six were born in Canada, three in England and two in Italy, the latter consisting of two former employees of the Boston Cafe.

(Kingston Standard.)

The new band of the 59th Battalion arrived in the city this afternoon from Peterborough and immediately proceeded to Barriefield camp. The band went up the hill en into the camp playing popular airs and all were pleased with the showing of the men. The bandmaster and twenty-two men of the band were recruited in Peterborough, and in the camp are fifteen musicians to be added to the number that arrived from Peterborough.

The 59th Battalion will now have a band of thirty-seven pieces and all of the musicians are experienced men. It is hardly necessary to state that the men are more than welcome to the battalion and in the camp.

PRESENTATION TO DEPARTING CHORISTER

Mr. C. Green Remembered by St. Luke's Choir on the Eve of His Departure for Toronto

The members of the choir of St. Luke's church, with a few other invited guests, including the rector, Rev W. H. White and Mrs. White, were pleasantly entertained at the home of Mrs. A. Perrin, Burnham street, last evening, the occasion being a farewell to Mr. Charles Green, an earnest and enthusiastic member of the choir, who is leaving shortly to reside in Toronto. A very happy time was spent by all present. Mrs. Perrin, in her usual charming manner, leaving nothing undone to make everyone feel at home. The time was spent in the enjoyment of many original games and the several pianoforte numbers by Miss Rita Muir of Toronto, added greatly to the pleasure of the evening.

Mr. J. J. Turner, Jr., in a neat speech, referred to the regret all felt on learning of Mr. Green's contemplated departure from Peterborough, and consequently his severance with St. Lukes' church. He had been a faithful and enthusiastic member of the choir, and his help in the services of the church in this regard, would be greatly missed.

Mr. Turner then called on Miss Maud Adams to read the following address to Mr. Green.

St. Luke's Parish, Aug. 25, 1915.

Mr. Chas. Green,
Burnham street, city.

Dear Mr. Green,—This gathering has been arranged through the kindness of Mrs. Perrin, alto soloist, and Mrs. Greenslade, organist, to give the choir of St. Luke's church an opportunity of spending a pleasant evening with you, prior to your departure to Toronto, to which place you have been transferred in the interests of your employers.

You have been a faithful member of the choir for three years, which has given us an opportunity of enjoying your excellent voice and sweet harmony, as well as the pleasure of association and converse. You have always been ready to help with counsel and advice in matters pertaining to the welfare of the choir, in particular, and St. Luke's church in general.

Your leaving us we feel sure is a distinct loss, one hard to replace. Our loss, however, is gain to others, and we feel we should rejoice that loyalty and application to duty has earned the promotion given you.

We desire to send you off to your new field of labour as bright and happy as possible, hoping you will sometimes think of St. Luke's choir, and to help you to remember us we ask you to accept this watch charm as a token of our love and esteem.

Signed on behalf of the choir,
W. A. Greenslade, Choir Master.
Mrs. Greenslade, Organist.

Miss L. Stewart made the presentation of a watch charm, of handsome design, and suitably engraved.

Mr. Green thanked his fellow choristers most heartily for their kind remembrance, assuring them of his deep appreciation. He regretted severing his connection with St. Luke's, his associations in the choir having always been of the most pleasant character.

Dainty refreshments were then served, and altogether a most enjoyable evening was brought to a conclusion with the singing of Auld Lang Syne and For He's a Jolly Good Fellow Hearty thanks was tendered Mrs Perrin for her kindness in throwing open her home for the entertainment of the choir.

RAZORS ARE ACKNOWLEDGED

Mrs. (Dr.) Middleton wishes to thank all those who contributed to the package of razors, of which the following is an acknowledgment:

20 Front Street, East,
Toronto.

"I thank you for your package of razors, which I will forward, with others, to Sheffield, to be put in order for the soldiers at the front.

Yours truly,
Thomas B. Lee.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

What's Doing in Civic Circles

A special meeting of the City Council will be held this evening, when a number of matters requiring immediate attention will be dealt with.

Tearing Up the Pavement.

A strip of the asphalt pavement on Charlotte street is being torn up to permit of the telephone wires being placed underground. The amount of pavement that is being displaced is a matter of a few yards.

Board of Works.

So far to date $17,711.60 has been expended out of the Board of Works' appropriation of $26,710.00.

Building Permits.

Francis White. Shed at the rear of 380 Water street to cost $350.

A. A. Moore. Garage at 260 Aylmer street. Estimated cost $35.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES.

Orillia's contribution to the War Funds has reached ten machine guns and three motor ambulances. Some $15,000 has been subscribed and paid within a week.

Health By-laws.

Guelph's sanitary inspector is enforcing the health by-laws with strictness and impartiality. Six residents have been summoned for infringement of the by-law.

$50,000 For Construction.

The Ontario Railway and Municipal Board has assented to the issue by Stratford of $50,000 debentures to cover the cost of steel standpipe for the waterworks pumping station.

Town Planning Commission.

The newly appointed town-planning commission of Hamilton met in Mayor Walters' office and plans were laid to begin at once in the re-making of Hamilton into the most beautiful city in the Dominion.

New Lay-out.

The Petrolia Council has ordered the Hydro Commission to proceed with the construction of an entirely new outfit for the distribution of the incoming Hydro light and power.

ONTARIO'S CROP UP TO STANDARD

Special to The Examiner:

The Ontario Department of Agriculture has issued a bulletin dealing with the crop situation in the Province of Ontario. The report in part says:

"That the hay and grain crops have come through so unpropitious a season so comparatively well is a matter for much encouragement. All the grains as a rule were splendidly headed, promising unusually large yields, and it is likely that even with a considerable percentage of loss by sprouting or shelling in the stooks the net yields in most cases will be well up to the mark acre for acre, and there has been a generous increase in the area of several of the leading cereal crops. While the straw is generally reported to be of good length, much of it has been so long exposed in the field that it likely will not be up to standard of quality."

The following statistics of the principal field crops of Ontario for 1915 show the acreage as compiled from individual returns made by farmers to the Ontario Bureau of Industries and the yields as estimated by a large and experienced staff of correspondents, who give probable yields according to conditions on August 10, 1915.

LIVE STOCK MARKET

Special Wire to The Examiner:

TORONTO, Aug. 26.—Live stock receipts small, market dead, prices weak: Choice steers $7.75 to $8; Spring lambs, $8 50 to $9. Hogs, unchanged.

Peterboro' Boy Witnessed the Zeppelin Raid

Sergt. Jas. McGrath of the 39th Battalion Was on Guard When Big German Airship Paid a Visit to Dover Recently

Mrs. David McGrath, 141 Hazlett street, has received an interesting letter from her son, Sergt. James McGrath of the Peterborough detachment, now stationed in Shorncliffe England.

Sergt. McGrath has the following to say under date of Aug. 12th: "There was an air raid on Dover last Monday night. I happened to be on guard, and about one o'clock we heard some very heavy firing and looking up in the direction of Dover I saw all the sky lit up with searchlights. At that time we thought it was the artillery practising at night, but the real cause came out in the papers the day after.

I was talking to a fellow who was up on the hills near Folkstone. He saw the whole thing from start to finish. He said that five minutes after the Zeppelin was first sighted the air was full of aeroplanes and then the guns at Dover commenced firing. One of the shots seemed to crumple it up in the centre and it disappeared. Later a destroyer was sent out to find it. In a short while three more Zeppelins came in sight but retired without dropping any bombs. The first one dropped four bombs and killed about nineteen people. One British airman was killed while trying to land in France in the dark after an exciting chase across the channel. The people in Folkstone say it was the greatest sight they ever saw. The Zeppelin looked like a big silver fish suspended in the air with all the searchlights turned on and all the aeroplanes flying around with their machine guns going and the shell bursting all around.

We have to get up at three o'clock every second morning and go to the ranges. We are using nothing but service ammunition now.

Street Paving Is Progressing

The rails, ties and brick for the Charlotte Street extension of the Street Railway are on the ground. The work of laying the pavement will commence in a few days. At present the Standard Paving Company is working on McDonnel Street, while the Warren Paving Company is operating on Hunter Street. The work of laying the concrete on the last named street was started this morning. On McDonnel Street the concrete base is down and the curb and gutter work will likely be completed by to-night. This will leave the road in a condition to receive the asphalt. A large supply of the latter was unloaded today at the C.P.R. freight sheds. The latter is a busy point at the present time. It represents an industry in itself. The value of the equipment located at this point and owned by the two companies respectively, is estimated at between seventy and a hundred thousand dollars.

Evangelist G. M. Sharpe who will speak at the Big Tabernacle TO-NIGHT, on Hunter Street at 8 o'clock. Hear Him!

7.—The establishment of an American protectorate under the terms of the Platt amendment clause in the new treaty.

PRESENTATIONS TO FATHER AND SON

Mr. Harry Castle and Son Everett Leave Shortly on Active Service —Enlist With Battery

A most enjoyabel evening was spent on Wednesday evening when the employees of the Tool Department of the C.G.E. gathered at the home of Mr. Everett Castle, 118 George street, to say good-bye to Everett and his father who leave for Barriefield on Monday with the artillery.

The evening was spent in songs and music with Mr. James Seger presiding at the piano, Mr. McLeish playing the mandolin, Mr. Taylor playing the auto-harp, and Mr. Sands at the violin. Mr. H. Taylor, Mr. Smeaton and Mr. Carl MacKay rendered several songs.

During the course of the evening, Everett was presented with a purse of some twenty dollars, and his father with a box of cigars. Mr. Joseph Christopher read the following address, and Mr. Sid. Gibbs made the presentation:

Peterborough, Aug. 25, 1915.

Mr. Everett Castle:

Dear Everett: Our Empire's call for able men for her defence in these trying times has been nobly heeded by your good self. It is indeed with mingled feelings of regret and pride that we have learned of your intended departure from our midst,—regret that we are losing the association of a real good fellow and pride because of the loyal sentiment that has prompted you to the action you have taken. Rest assured that we will have a very special interest in the exploits of the battalion with which you are connected, and our earnest wishes for a safe return accompany you at this time.

As a small token of our esteem, we would ask you to accept this purse, allied with the hope that you may in the near future be taking in the sights of Berlin.

Signed on behalf of your fellow-workmen of the Tool Room of the C. G. E.

The evening was brought to a close with the serving of refreshments and the singing of the National Anthem.

Madame Melba Warbles Dollars For the Red Cross

By an arrangement concluded with the management of Massie Hall, Toronto, Mme. Nellie Melba, the world-famous prima donna soprano, is coming to Toronto on October 4th, to sing for the Red Cross. With characteristic loyalty and generosity, the great Australian singer has agreed to provide the services of herself and the assisting artists free of charge in a concert to be given on that date, by which she hopes to raise at least $10,000, which she will place in the hands the Red Cross authorities as her "bit."

In recognition of the noted singer's patriotic offer the trustees of Massey Hall have agreed to operate the big auditorium on that night for the bare expenses involved, giving up the profit which would accrue otherwise to the hall fund from a concert of this kind.

Ever since the war began Mme. Melba has thrown herself heart and soul into the Red Cross movement. On the outbreak of the war in August last she was in Australia where in recent years she has spent much time with her father. In the past year she has raised more than $100,000 for the Red Cross and kindred purposes.

IMPROVEMENTS TO THE OPERA HOUSE

Entire Interior Has Been Transformed—Work is Nearing Completion

One Peterborough firm that refuses to be stampeded by existing conditions is that of J. J. Turner & Sons. In the face of what has frequently been characterized as a period of depression, this firm has struck a more pleasing keynote by a practical manifestation of confidence. Instead of shutting down and throttling expenditures to suit presupposed conditions they have undertaken improvements to their property that many would not undertake unless times were normal. This is to be seen in the recent alterations to the Grand Opera House. While Peterborough's playhouse has always been recognized as a model of completeness, combining comfort and convenience, the management saw opportunities for even greater improvement. During the past few weeks a large corps of men have been employed in re-decorating both the interior and exterior, and the result awaits the inspection of the public, when the theatre throws open its doors for the initial performance of the season. The interior finish is of a much lighter colour than formerly, while the decorative effects thoroughly harmonize with the splendid appointments. A brand new metallic ceiling is included among the improvements. This has been beautifully decorated, while the boxes have undergone similar treatment at the hands of the decorator.

The whole serves to add a pleasing tone to the interior. The lighter colours used gives the place a much brighter appearance. The lighting system includes a complete new supply of tungsten lamps, which will add to the illuminative effect. The improvements which are nearing completion will cost the management several hundred dollars. The theatre will open at a date to be announced later. A run of popular plays such as are meeting with unqualified success in the larger cities are in prospect this coming season for Peterborough theatre-goers.

THE WEST IS STILL SAFE

Higher Temperature is Promised For Ontario—Light Frosts in the West

Examiner Special:

Half the world will breathe easier to-day as a result of the announcement that in spite of the cool wave in the west last night, practically no frost has occurred. The weather was fine and comparatively cool to-day. To-morrow the danger of frost will become more remote, the weather man having promised higher temperatures.

Last night in Manitoba there were a few light local frosts, but it is not believed they will prove damaging to an appreciable extent.

Ontario has shared the fate of the Maritime Provinces in being subjected to more rain. In many parts of Ontario, the mosquitoes are now as bad as in early spring. To-day in Ontario the weather is to be generally fair, with a repetition of the same for to-morrow.

On coming home from the office the father met Jack and Dick. "What have you been doing to-day, boys?" he questioned. "Fightin'," replied Dick," Fighting, eh? Who licked?" "Mamma did," answered Jack.

FRENCH TRENCH ONLY TEN YARDS FROM GERMANS

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, Aug. 26.—We motored up a road newly built through the woods—a really remarkable feat—to the top of a mountain, from which we walked to the summit of the Hartmannsweilerkopf, and then entered the bayou.

We immediately entered the front line trenches. Looking through a steel peephole I saw the German front trench only ten yards away, so close that I could distinguish the frayed edges of their sandbags, the tracings on the bark of the saplings used as supports for wire. The French and German chevaux de frise were nearly touching.

I asked at once how lines could remain so close, and why mines were not employed underneath each other's trenches.

"Solid rock" said the officer. That is the explanation; it is only on solid rock that such positions as this can be found.

Odd bullets whined continually overhead, two shells exploded in the open space behind a wing at one corner not twenty-five yards away, another exploded at the very base of the trench, among the entanglements within only a few feet of us — the smoke, acrid and disagreeable, hiding for a minute men at our very side—for the artillery of both armies shell each other's front line trenches ten yards apart from positions perhaps 3,000 yards away.

But there is practically no danger; only four casualties in many days on the Hartmannsweilkopf.

It was a hard position to take, harder still to consolidate, but it is now held and held securely. And in regard to mountain fighting this may be said: That as a rule the positions are more difficult to storm, but once stormed they generally compel the enemy to retire on a broader front and to give more ground than in the flat plains of nothern France.

We continued through the trenches with the engineer who built them, three lines connecting at three separate points, so that there would always be an outlet of escape.

Seventh Annual Regatta Held At Kawartha Park, Clear Lake

Most Successful Yet Held—Big Programme of Sports Keenly Contested—Presentation of Prizes and Patriotic Concert

The seventh annual regatta of the Kawartha Park colony, which was scheduled to take place last Saturday, was held Wednesday afternoon, under condition- which were none too promising earlier in the day. A large concourse of people gathered on the shore in the vicinity of the post office and store, and thoroughly enjoyed the programme of aquatic sport-, twenty-nine events in all, which were run off with dispatch, by the following officers. Judges, Hon. Lawrence Grahame, Harry Sutherland and H. G. Fitzgerald; starters, Alfred Stewart, and Prof. Louis Stewart, Recording-Secretary, Rob. Neill; promoters, Dr George Zimmerman and G. Douglas Carlisle.

The entries were numerous and events keenly contested.

The crab race once more proved its popularity, but the surprise of the day came in John Carlisle failing to capture first place, which, however, was secured by his brother, Douglas.

Both of the motor boat events aroused a great deal of interest, particularly the bang and go back feature.

The plain, long and fancy diving contest, which concluded the regatta, was, by all odds, the best thing seen in Stoney Lake in a long time. The work of Hugh Makenzie and G. Grier was very clever, indeed. Hon. Lawrence Grahame, himself the holder of several championships in swimming and diving, proved a very careful judge of this event.

The presentation of prizes was made in the evening from the verandah of "Daishelene," the summer home of Dr. Husband, by the Hon. Lawrence Grahame, who proved a very happy chairman; and was followed by a high class patriotic concert.

During the programme, the Chairman presented a detailed report of the excellent work done by the ladies of the Stoney Lake Red Cross Association, in raising a total of $230.45, less disbursements, $58.48, leaving a balance of $171.97 for this most worthy cause.

The ladies of the Clear Lake Association contributed very largely to the above amount, and, in addition, have "adopted" Pte. Heber Rogers, an old Kawartha Park boy, now a prisoner of war in Germany, to whom they will send money for at least six months. Mr. Grahame, whose son, Lieut. Gordon Grahame, is home to recuperate, made a very touching reference to the bravery of Heber, and three hearty cheers echoed along the shore.

The thanks of those assembled was tendered all who took part in making the regatta such a splendid success; to Mrs. Husband, who so kindly placed her home and grounds at the disposal of the committee, and to the talent who assisted in the patriotic concert.

The programme was as follows:

National Anthem.

Chairman's address.

Reading—Mrs. Johnston.

Duet—Misses Pearl Brock and Husband.

Reading—Miss Dorothy Sherin.

Solo—Miss Pearl Brock.

Duet—Miss Husband and Mr. G. Douglas Carlisle.

Accompanist: Miss Daisy Husband

Plain, Long and Fancy Diving: 1, Hugh Mackenzie, flash light; 2, G. Grier, jack knife; 3, Hilliard Willoughby, box chocolates.

Tug of War. 1, Harry Blewett, Hilliard Willoughby, G. D. Carlisle, Dr G. Zimmerman, who divided up safety razor, shaving outfit, suspenders, and a lazy back, only ne entry, therefore no race).

Regatta Skits.

Five gallons of "gas" are a great assistance to a chairman.

Mr. Alfred Stewart, a guest of Mrs. Rayson at "Raysonia," proved a very capable and patient starter.

No wonder a railing was required around the "judges' chambers," when three such stalwarts as Harry Sutherland, H. G. Fitzgerald and Hon. Lawrence Grahame occupied the "post."

Capt. Millage gave Capt Robinson a tight squeeze for first place.

The weather man evidently dislikes Saturday as Regatta day.

Not an accident to mar the pleasure of the day.

Monty La Rock.

The Russian Retreat and The Delayed Western Drive

Special to The Examiner:

From the time that the Russian retreat became a definite and established fact, with its duration and extent the remaining questions a great part of the world has been asking, "What about the drive of the Allies on the west front?" Like many another questions, it was very easy to ask, especially as it had been rumoured that a great drive had been looked for to start in May. As the Russian retreat continued and daily seemed more dangerous, the question became more and more persistent. As the fall of Warsaw became certain many thought the blow in the west would be struck to save the Polish capital. But, it has often been argued that the fall of Warsaw is not nearly so serious as many people imagine and that the further the Germans penetrate into Russia the more nearly impossible will be their return. It is said that the German army is on its way to Petrograd and that Russia is preparing to transfer the capital to Moscow, as France transferred her capital to Bordeaux for similar reasons. The drive toward Paris and Calais had the double object of capturing those two cities and splitting and smashing the French army—especially the latter. It was a mighty costly failure. So, the German drive in the east, the most powerful, most extensive, and so far, most successful launched by Germany and Austria has the two fold object of capturing the most important and most strategic positions in western Russia, and splitting and smashing the Russian army. So far they have succeeded in only capturing several of the most important strategic positions at very heavy sacrifice. They are pushing on toward Petrograd, and using every known tactical move to drive a wedge through some point of the Russian line. Time and again they have used every force at their command to push through and isolate a large section of the Russian forces. Never have they succeeded even in the smallest degree. Further and further they follow greedily in the trail of their wary and formidable foe, getting daily more distant from their base and more dangerously involved in the enemy country. Now, since the outbreak of the war, all countries involved have been inventing and developing the greatest possible engines of destruction for their own use, as well as all possible means of protection against the enemy. It is rumoured in many circles that England has recently perfected and satisfactorily tested an enormous cannon far superior to anything of the Germany army a 17 inch gun with a range of twenty-five miles. It is also rumoured that the Allies in the west have a number of these guns with ample ammunition and that all is prepared for the long expected western drive as soon as the proper time arrives. None of the warring countries is anxious for a second winter campaign. Many eminent thinkers are looking for an enormous effort on the western front at almost any time now. One thing we rest assured of, there is a thorough understanding between all the Allies. They are playing a gigantic game and each of the Allies is fully posted as to all moves of the others. So when the German drive against Russia is reached a predetermined point we may be sure of the move in the west with Germany in a very tight box, her final struggles close at hand, and the peace of the world not far off.

NEW BATTERIES ARE NOW WELL ORGANIZED

BARRIEFIELD CAMP, Aug. 25—Everything, even to the smallest detail in military life, is done on a fixed system, and this is probably the reason why the three artillery batteries at Barriefield are now so well organized, although a month ago there was no thought of them being organized.

The 32nd Battery lines are at the west end of the artillery grounds. In the centre is the 33rd Battery and at the east is the 34th Battery. Each battery has two lines of tents with a wide area between which will be used as horse-lines. At the end near the ranges and away from the Gananoque road are the cook tents, quartermasters' stores and other marquees.

At the road side or the front of the camp for each battery are the orderly tents and between this last row and the road is the gun-park. A gun-park is one sign that points out that the region behind is composed of the aristocracy of the camp. The artillery, in the opinion of artillery officers and men, is the best branch of the service, and in certain points at least they are right. It is the only branch of the service where field guns are used and this mere statement will be borne out most emphatically when one examines a field gun. There is certainly a lot to learn about a field gun. There are levers, screws and all kinds of intricate machinery that take the best type of men quite a time to thoroughly understand.

The guns are in straight lines and at Barriefield are twelve in number, as four guns is the number now used by each battery at the front.

In the 33rd Battery under Major W. Sears, is Lieut. M. B. Hamilton, an R.M.C. graduate, and Lieut. G. M. Huycke, both of Peterborough, and Lieut. H. J. McLaren, Brockville.

Lieut. Huycke has been on duty almost since the battery has been organized and has proved himself an energetic and efficient officer, who is proving a splendid man for handling and instructing men. He is in Peterborough an organizer of the baseball teams and this characteristic alone has made him very popular with all ranks.

A piano is being secured for the entertainment of the men of the 33rd Battery. This will assist in the amateur theatricals which are being put on by the men. Last evening the famous old drama, "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was played before a large audience. "Uncle Tom" was ably represented by one of the negro cooks, while Little Eva crossing the ice was portrayed by an ex-member of the London police force.

GOVERNMENT ACKNOWLEDGES GIFT OF MACHINE GUN

The following letter has been received by Mr. E. G. Patterson, General Superintendent of the Canadian General Electric Co.:

Ottawa, 24th August, 1915.

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge and thank you for your favour of the 10th inst., enclosing cheque for $750.00, being a contribution of the Mutual Benefit Society of the Canadian General Electric Company, Limited, Peterborough Works, for the purchase of a machine gun.

Upon delivery of the guns which the Government has ordered to provide the many gifts the public are making we shall be glad to purchase one in the name of the above society and in the same as their gift to the 59th Battalion. This is, of course, subject to military necessity that may arise from time to time. Should military necessity require it, the government will forward the gun overseas as the gift of your Mutual Benefit Society to one of the battalions now in service overseas.

Please convey to the members of the Society the sincere appreciation of the Government for this generous and patriotic donation. Believe me,

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) James A. Lougheed.

TEN MACHINE GUNS AND THREE MOTOR AMBULANCES

Is Orillia's Response to Patriotic Call—Fund Already $15,000 and All Returns Are Not Yet In ORILLIA, Aug. 25—Orillia's birthday present to the Empire in connection with the Champlain tercentenary will be ten machine guns and three motor ambulances. The fund is now nearing $15,000, and when all returns are in will exceed that amount. The motor ambulances will be built by the Fisher Motor Company of Orillia, and the company, in addition to a generous subscription to the general fund, is making a gift of one of the three. Their total subscription represents $2,700. It was this princely gift that enabled the committee to raise the number of motor ambulances from one to three. Another large subscription received this week was $1,000 from the Water, Light and Power Commission. The success of the Orillia Birthday Fund has quite doubled the most sanguine expectations of the promoters. It is the more remarkable in that the giving has been voluntary and cheerful, no systematic canvass having been attempted. The amount raised represents more than $2 a head for every man, woman and child in the town. The recruiting campaign in connection with the tercentenary will be brought to a conclusion at a meeting in the Armory on Friday. Already fifty men have been enlisted, and it is expected to add considerably to this number.

WEALTHY WOMAN FOUND DEAD

Examiner Special:

BUFFALO, N.Y., Aug. 26. The body of a woman known in business circles as Mrs. Belle Elliot, reputed to be worth $250,000, lies unclaimed in the rooms of a local undertaking establishment. The woman died in a rooming house Monday, and a day or two before her death was seen burning a large bundle of legal papers, believed to be deeds of property she owned.

GERMANY IS FISHING FOR AN EASY WAY OUT

Special Cable to The Examiner

LONDON, Aug. 26. The Handlurt Nachrichten, in an editorial, says a despatch from Amsterdam to Reuter's Telegram Company, hints that the report that the sinking of the White Star Liner Arabic was caused by a torpedo will be confirmed, because the newspaper contends, since the Lusitania disaster only rarely have vessels of more than 5,000 tons been sunk by German torpedoes.

"It has been said with sufficient clearness to the Washington Government in notes from our Foreign Office," says the Nachrichten, "that we can in this war against an enemy like England renounce no weapon and, least of all, one of our most effective weapons."

After remarking that, "Germany's enemies hope President Wilson will liberate them from the dangers of a submarine war," the new-paper adds "It has not been proved that the vessel was struck by a torpedo, and it may have fallen victim to one of those bad English mines."

Admitting it may, nevertheless, have been a German under-sea boat which destroyed the Arabic, the Nachrichten contends:

"The Cabinet acted rightly and even if American passengers on board sank with the steamer, and some of them were drowned, then that serves again as a warning that no one should light-heartedly enter the war zone or go within range of weapons."

GENEROUS OFFER FROM CAPT. HARRIS

Capt Harris of the steamer "Geneva" has generously offered his steamer and the services of his crew free to the Canadian-American Society of this city, for an excursion to be held on Monday, August 31st, the proceeds to be donated to the funds of this society. It is not yet known whether the offer has been accepted, but no doubt if such should be the case, the public will have due notice of the same in the Examiner.

BALKAN KINGS NEARLY READY TO ENTER WAR—On the left is Premier Radoslavoff of Bulgaria, next King Ferdinand of Bulgaria, and on the right King Ferdinand of Rumania. The two Ferdinands are distantly related. The King of Rumania is a Hohenzollern, Catholic branch, and is perhaps a tenth cousin of the Kaiser. The King of Bulgaria is a Saxe-Coburg, a second or third cousin of George V.

A real recovery

Bear mining was a short one

Bulls were back in the saddle again.

Lambs have evidently recovered from their attack of nerves.

Canadian railway earnings showed further improvement last week, but wait until that western crop starts moving.

$2 Per Capita Increase.

Bankers point out that saving bank deposits in Canada work out at $10.93 per capita taking the population on a basis of eight millions. This compares with $9.13 at the end of last year. The deposits in post office savings, trust companies, etc., are, of course, not included in this computation.

Gold Output Greater.

Increased production of both gold and silver in the United States for the calendar year 1914 as compared with 1913, is shown in a statement issued by Director of the Mint Woolley.

The gold output was 4,572,976 fine ounces, valued at $94,510,800, and silver 72,455,400 fine ounces, the commercial value of which was $40,087,700. Gold produced was greater by $5,647,000 than in 1913 and silver was greater by 5,653,600 fine ounces or $3,126,400.

SEMI-INVESTMENTS.

There has been a good deal of buying of the preferred stocks of the Canadian companies which are working on war orders, the demand coming from semi-investors who were too conservative to speculate in the common stock issues. A number of those preferred securities have arrears in dividends owing on them, and allowing for these, purchase prices are considerably reduced from the prevailing market quotations. The buying interests figure of course that the profits on war orders will enable these arrears to be paid up before long.

FORTUNE FORCED ON HIM.

Not long ago a prominent manufacturer bought 100 shares of Peerless Motor Co. stock for his wife at 42. On Thursday of last week he decided to sell it, thinking he would get around 75. He asked for a quotation and the stock was quoted 60 bid, 80 asked. He hesitated before giving the order to sell and a little later the stock was quoted at 80 bid, 100 asked. He made up his mind to sell at 120, and called up his wife for her advice on the matter. Before the conversation was ended he was informed that the stock was selling at 140. The owner now expects to sell at 160, if the price does not jump beyond that level before he has a chance to execute the order.

RUINS OF PACIFIC MAIL.

In the high tide of America's prosperity following the Civil War, that veteran stammering Wall Street operator the famous Bill Travers, wended his way on an eastern journey with his nephew William Travers Jerome, later the district attorney of New York. Of course all the way Travers kept posted upon quotations. When admiring the beautiful vermillions of the uncovered walls of Pompeii, he received a despatch that Pacific Mail, then paying $6 per share quarterly, had fallen to the par of 100 from above 200.

"Great God!" exclaimed Travers to Jerome. "What are the ruins of Pompeii compared with Pacific Mail?"

What would be the expression of Travers if he could to-day arise from the tomb and behold Pacific Mail in the boom-tide of international shipping, wrecked by the politicians in Washington, and their last ships under the American flag offered for sale to the Chinese, and the receiver-shipped International Mercantile Marine?

PROPOSE HUGE GOLDSHIPMENT.

Paris Le Journal des Debats, urging the borrowing and sending of gold to the United States, preliminary to a loan, says: "Let the allies send two or three or four hundred million dollars to New York at one time. The effect would be far greater than that of small sums, destined to pay the insignificant loans already due.

NEW YORK PRESS COMMENTS

Sun: While the change in the political outlook must be accorded its full share of responsibility for the rise in stocks the main cause must not be overlooked. This is the confidence of the public in the future of the market.

Times: A large part of Wall street has come to the conclusion that dangers of complications arising out of the sinking of the Arabic have passed.

Journal of Commerce: There is apt to be an apparent improvement, if not a real one, in railroad earnings in the near future, as we will soon begin comparing with a period of extreme depression a year ago caused by the war.

Financial America: The stock demand from the public is becoming so large as to absorb offers for both long and short account.

Wall Street Journal: The pool in U.S. Steel is a powerful one, and it is said to entertain expectations that the price will cross par within the next few months.

NEW YORK, Aug. 26.—Apart from a sensational rise of over ten points on Tennessee Copper there was little change in to-day's market situation. The market closed around the opening prices with very few exceptions. A number of the industrials showed fractional losses. There is a strong undertone to the market and opinion generally is inclined to forecast an upward movement.

OBITUARY

MRS. JOHN KELLEHER.

Mr. Joseph Collins, 263 Monroe Avenue, received a telegram today announcing the death last evening at Tilden, Neb., of his sister, Mrs. John Kelleher. The deceased was stricken suddenly with apoplexy and passed away soon after. She was 50 years of age and was born in Douro. Her maiden name was Margaret Collins she being the daughter of the late Wm. Collins. She was married 28 years ago, when she moved to Nebraska. Her husband, three daughters, and one son are left to mourn her loss, as well as four brothers and three sisters. The brothers are James of Douro; Timothy, Nebraska; Patrick, Oklahoma; and Joseph, of Peterborough. The sisters are Mrs. M. Crowley, Otonabee, Mrs. J. Dalton, Dummer, and Miss Alice Crowley, at home.

MATHERS COMMISSION FINDS CHARGES TRUE

Scathing Condemnation of Late Ministers of Roblin Government in Manitoba---Overpayment of $822,963--"Unfavourable Inferences" From Actions of Thomas Kelly, Dr. R. M. Simpson, V. W. Horwood, Dr. Montague and Others.

WINNIPEG, Man., Aug. 25.—In a report of twenty thousand words the Royal Commission appointed some months ago to investigate the charges made by the Liberals when in Opposition with regard to Manitoba's new parliament buildings reported unanimously to-day. They find the charges substantially true, and report that there has been fraud and much overpayment since the contract was let to Thos. Kelly & Sons over three years ago. The Commissioners were Mr. Justice Mathers (Chairman), Mr. Justice McDonald and Sir Hugh John Macdonald. The Commissioners find that Kelly was shown or told of the figures in the tender submitted by Peter Lyall & Sons, Montreal, and given an extra day to submit his own tender a few thousand dollars lower.

They find large overpayments in connection with the caissons and steel contracts, and state that it is proved by evidence that Dr. R. M. Simpson, now in France, was the Government's financial agent, and set the amount to be added as extras in the contracts for campaign funds. They refer to the statements of Howden, former Attorney-General, which they call untruthful, and declare they received no assistance from the former Minister in prosecuting the inquiry. The report, with appendices and subsidiary reports, totals about twenty-five thousand words.

The following excerpts from the report tell their own story:

Assessing the Stealings.

"There is direct evidence that before the amount to be paid the contractor in respect of each extra was agreed upon he (Dr. Simpson, Treasurer of the Conservative party fund) was consulted, and he dictated the amount to be included therein for the election funds. That such amounts were paid over to him by the contractor when received from the Government is, we find, also established.

600,000 Fraudulent Over-Payments.

From April 21 to July 9, 1914, payments were made to contractors totalling $822,963. Upwards of $600,000 of the above amount was made up of fraudulent overpayments by the Government to contractors. When it is remembered that these large over-payments were made immediately before and pending an election campaign, it is not difficult to infer the source of the election funds handled by Dr. Simpson."

Tampering With Tenders.

"From all the facts and circumstances," say the Commissioners, "we draw what appears to us the irresistible inference that when Thomas Kelly went to the Parliament buildings on July 2 he had a tender for $3,300,000 and a marked check for $160,000 with him; that he there had an interview with Sir Rodmond Roblin, who showed him the Lyall tender, or conveyed to him the amount of the latter, when Sir Rodmond extended time for receiving tenders one day to enable Kelly to prepare a new tender and get the required marked check to accompany it."

Scheme for Election Funds.

Application for payment made on January 9, 1914, was held up until March 4. Horwood understood, "as the fact was," says the report, "that the scheme had been formed to obtain election funds out of extras created by the change of plans, and that part of this fund was to be obtained by paying the contractors for a yardage largely in excess of the cubic contents of the caissons."

Attorney-General Hudson in the Norris Government, seen in Toronto on his return to Winnipeg, said in reference to the findings of the report that—

The Government is pledged to do all in its power to thoroughly clean up the ugly mess, to utilize every authority it possesses in the effort to restore to the public purse as much as possible of the money improperly paid out, and to take action against all — you note I say "all"—who by their actions have placed themselves within the pale of the law.

POPULAR EARL OF DERBY

No one has displayed more unwearying zeal in the recruiting movement since the war began than Lord Derby—politician, soldier, and sportsman. Some time ago he made the frank confession to a number of schoolboys that he started life with two ambitions, namely, to be Prime Minister and to win the Derby. He has been second in the Derby, and has not yet done trying for either of his ambitions. And, bearing in mind Lord Derby's keen love of the turf, his success as Postmaster-General, and the work he did in other administrative offices in the last Unionist Government, there seems no reason why he should not in due course realize these ambitions.

As Lord Stanley he was a popular figure in the Lower House, and his sporting qualities and love of horses added not a little to that popularity. Apropos of his sporting tastes an amusing story is told of an incident which occurred when he was first elected to Parliament. Lord Derby had invited questions at one of his meetings, and a voice called out, "Can you give us a tip for to-morrow's race?" Lord Stanley did not hesitate a moment. "Yes," he said; "I am backing such and such a horse," and he gave the name. The horse won and Lord Stanley was returned at the head of the poll. It will be remembered in 1910 that Lord Derby took over the ownership of the King's horses for a season. His father, the late earl, was also a keen sportsman, but at the same time he had a strong dislike to betting, and always objected to gambling being so closely involved in horse-racing.

Knowsley Hall, in Lancashire, the magnificent ancestral home of the Stanleys, has long been a strong centre of interest in the turf world, and war frequently visited by the late King, who nearly always stayed there for the Liverpool races. The Derby estates are worth about $4,000,000. The legend over one of the gateways at Knowsley runs, "Bring good news and knock loudly." Certainly the legend seems to have brought good luck to the Stanleys. The Earl of Derby is one of the three "Catskin" earls, the others being Lord Shrewsbury and Lord Huntingdon. The explanation of the word "catskin" is that the ancestors of these three earls were privileged to wear four rows of ermine fur on their robes because of their ancient descent, and that "quatre skins" (four skins) became changed to "catskins."

WHAT SOLDIERS READ

Horace, Dante and English Poetry Favored—Nothing Light for Tommy

"An army in which every soldier read his Bible and every officer read his Field Service Pocket-Book daily, would be the finest army every seen," said Sir John French, on one occasion, and although our brave lads do not confine themselves entirely to these two books, it is a significant fact that in the British Army almost every officer's kit contains the Field Service Pocket-Book—a potted resume of military text-books issued by the War Office—and the Bible is easily first favorite as a book for the battlefield.

It has been noticed, too, that "Tommy" prefers solid reading rather than the lighter kind. A committee of ladies who organized the supply of literature to our soldiers have recorded that requests for "travels and history and often for some books of a more solid character," are being constantly made. A typical artisan asked for "Dante," adding that he had "never had time to read Dante before."

Marcus Aurelius is a favorite with a great many officers; Horace, too, is fairly common; and, strangely enough, collections of English poetry, such as Palgrave's "Golden Treasury," and Quiller-Couch's "Oxford Book." The more exciting type of novel and war stories are taboo, but the more domestic type of story—Bennett's "Old Wives' Tale," also Jane Austen's "Emma," are popular. Shakespeare is not very widely read—perhaps because the Huns seem to have a penchant for him.

Admiral Jellicoe is said to favor the amusing light type of novel, while General Joffre's favorite author is Dickens. Funnily enough, Joffre is not the first famous soldier who has loved our great novelist. Forster tells a story of how, when Bismarck and Jules Favre met outside Paris to discuss terms of surrender, Moltke sat in a corner throughout the conference absorbed in "Little Dorrit."

A Noted British Soldier

General Sir Ian Hamilton is a native of Greece, having been born in Corfu at a time when the British were in military possession of the Ionian Islands. Sir Ian is a "Kitchener man" having served with the Sirdar in Egypt and in India. He was with Roberts in the Afghan war of 1878, was in the march from Cabul to Kandahar and is one of the few survivors of the disastrous South African battle of Majuba Hill in 1881.

STRIKE OF 200,000 COAL MINERS AGAIN THREATENS

ANOTHER BIG AERIAL RAID BY ALLIES' AIRSHIPS

NATIONALIZATION OF COAL MINES AND SOME FORM OF CONSCRIPTION BEING CONSIDERED BY ENGLISH CABINET

Another General Strike of 200,000 Miners Threatens to Close the Nation's Shell Factories---General Unrest Reported Throughout the Coal Region.

NUMBER OF U BOATS ARE DESTROYED

Special Cable to The Examiner

LONDON, Aug. 27.—Nationalization of the coal mines of Wales and some form of conscription, to force "shirkers" into the army are important questions now under serious consideration by the English Cabinet, it was learned to-day.

The Ministry is keeping in close touch with the situation at Cardiff, where another general strike of 200,000 miners threatens to close the nation's shell factories. The report to the Government indicates a general unrest throughout the coal region and declared every miner in this district probably will quit work unless the arbitration award made by President Runciman of the Government Board of Trade is altered.

The Government will not tolerate the closing of the Welsh collieries at the present critical stage of war.

If even the two sides are unable to agree the Government will take over the Welsh mines and operate them for the remainder of the war.

A LARGE NUMBER OF U BOATS DESTROYED.

LONDON, Aug. 27.—For the first time since the German submarine campaign was inaugurated, the Admiralty has confirmed reports that a large number of U boats have been destroyed, news having been previously kept secret in fear that it might be of aid to Germany.

CARRIED IN ZEPPELINS TO TURKEY.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 27.—One hundred tons of fine machinery used in the manufacture of shells have been carried from the Austrian frontier across Serbia and Bulgaria to Turkey in Zeppelins, which travelled by night to escape detection by the Bulgarian border patrols and protests against violation of Bulgarian territory.

BELGIAN KING PAYS A VISIT TO THE FRENCH

Special Morning Cable:

PARIS, Aug. 27 — Belgian's brave young monarch received a remarkable tribute from the soldiers of France on his first trip of inspection of the French battle front. His two-day tour of the French trenches from Arras to the Vosges just ended, was one continued triumphal procession, amid the cheers of the French fighting men.

King Albert returned the visit recently paid to the Belgian front by President Poincare. He motored first to the French lines near Arras, where he was met by President Poincare and General Joffre and escorted to general headquarters, where an exchange of decorations took place.

From headquarters the Belgian King was driven to an important French position along the Aisne. Five French regiments passed in review before him there, demonstrating new formations. President Poincare, on behalf of the French troops, thanked the Belgian King for his visit.

Following this review the party proceeded to an artillery observation post, from which it was possible to view the French and German fronts for many miles. On Monday night the two rulers boarded a train for the eastern front, and on Tuesday King Albert reviewed an entire French army corps between Nancy and Luneville.

Before leaving the eastern front the Belgian King visited a French aviation camp and several observation points between Nancy and Pont-a-Mousson. When he parted from President Poincare late Tuesday night to return to Dunkirk, King Albert expressed the highest admiration both for the French army and its system of defences.

Asia Minor and Syrian Coasts Blockaded From Samos Island to Egyptian Frontier

Preparatory to Landing Italian Troops---Danger of a Break With Germany is Now Over---Germany Orders Submarines to Spare Innocent Travellers.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, Aug. 27.—Asia Minor and Syria coasts from Samos Island to the Egyptian frontier blockaded by the Allies preparatory to landing Italian troops.

LONDON, Aug. 27.—Premier Borden is now on his way home Military necessity precluded previous reference to his departure.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27.—Danger of a break with Germany is now over. Germany orders submarines to spare innocent travellers and will make reparation for murdered citizens.

LONDON, Aug. 27.—Germany is alarmed over the cotton shortage, the consequence of the contraband declaration. German children are tearing up old rags to serve the purpose.

PARIS, Aug. 27.—Another big aerial expedition has been carried out by British, French and Belgian aviators to Monthulst Forest which they set afire.

LONDON, Aug. 27.—Flight squadron commander Bigsworth destroyed a German submarine off Ostend, the Admiralty announced yesterday afternoon. Bigsworth sank the U boat by bombarding it from his aeroplane.

BERLIN, Aug. 27.—German aviators attacked the French Aero base at Nancy Wednesday destroying four French air raiders in the Saar River Valley.

BERLIN, Aug. 27.—While Austrians stormed and captured three forts of Brest-Litovsk on the western front, German reserves stormed the northwestern forts penetrating the central works at night. The enemy then gave up the fortress BERLIN, Aug. 27.—German advance guards have reached Bielostok, it was officially announced. The Russians had evacuated the city.

LONDON, Aug. 27.—In reporting the sinking of the German submarine off Ostend yesterday, the Admiralty hints that previous sinkings of German submarines are not reported

BERLIN, Aug. 27.—Several persons were killed in a French air raid on Saar Louis. Material damage was reported in official statement

BERLIN, Aug. 27.—Russians who evacuated Bielostok are still retreating. On the whole front to the Pripet swamps pursuit of the enemy continues.

BANDITS HOLD UP WEALTHY WIDOW

Examiner Special:

GREENWICH, Conn., Aug. 27 — Luncheon was served on the lawn in front of the beautiful Riverside residence of Mrs. Mary Tyson yesterday when Ambrosina Lopez de Antuerma held up Mrs. Tyson at the point of a revolver while three companions, John Spooner, sixteen, Thomas Deering, sixteen, and Matthew Dudley, fifteen, attempted to enter the house.

Mrs. Tyson was attracted by the cries about three o'clock, when she saw them on the front lawn.

"What are you doing out there?" she demanded, as she opened the door.

"Oh nothing," replied Spooner, who seemed to be the spokesman for the band. "We were just trying to find the nearest track."

Mrs. Tyson told them the nearest was to the tracks, and then requested that they leave the premises at once. They disappeared, but returned a few minutes later. Mrs. Tyson warned them to leave her property.

Being alone, the gang called on Deering to Antuerma, who was behind Mrs. Tyson. Instantly Mrs. Tyson found herself looking into the muzzle of a 32-calibre revolver. For a moment she was frightened. Finally she summoned up courage to grapple with the boy and knock the revolver from his hand. She then ran into the house, locked the door and notified Constable George Jones.

After a chase in an automobile Constable Jones and Miles McMurtry, a member of the Connecticut State Police Department, rounded up the band near Stamford and brought them to Police Headquarters.

When they were searched skeleton keys, pawnbrokers and numerous burglar tools were found in the possession of the boys. Antuerma had a small kit in his pocket to appear in the Municipal Court in Boston for alleged assault he had committed there. It was learned was an old offender.

When arraigned before Judge Eugene R. Mead in the Greenwich Borough Court today a charge of burglary was preferred against the boys and an additional charge of carrying concealed weapons was lodged against Antuerma. The court imposed each boy a suspended sentence in the care of Hanley and Iverson, who were directed to leave town.

Antuerma and Spooner were held by the court pending investigation. Hanley gives his residence as Jersey City, N.J., and the other three say they live in Boston.

HAVE A MOST POWERFUL ARMY WHEN READY

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, Aug. 27.—"The Government now has under control all factories able to produce cannon, rifles, projectiles and explosives," said David Lloyd George, British Minister of Munitions, in an interview with Charles Humbert, new editor of The Journal. "It also controls all foundries and machine and tool factories, and not one pound of metal or one detached piece is turned out by this vast industrial machine which is not destined for the use of our armies. This war must not be fought with brawny chests, but with machinery."

From what Mr. Lloyd George showed him, M. Humbert believes British preparations in many ways are more ample than those of the French. He declares the army now in training will be one of the most powerful the world has ever seen and when, later, it will be possible to tell what has been accomplished by the British, the universe will be "dumb with admiration."

Hard Times in Germany

Special to The Examiner.

HAMILTON, Aug. 27 — A well-known Hamilton lady of German birth has just had the first letter since the war from her sister in Berlin. The letter has four sons, two of whom are in the trenches. The local lady also has two sons in the Allies trenches.

The letter states that the rich of Germany are being taxed so heavily that they will soon be poorer than all others. Foodstuffs, too, are about six hundred per cent. in advance of normal prices.

Crown Prince Tired of the Trench Warfare

Special Cable to The Examiner:

BERLIN, Aug. 26, via London Aug. 27.—An army order issued by Frederick William, Crown Prince of Germany, on August 22, in celebration of the anniversary of the battle of Longwy, the Saarbruecken Volks Zeitung says, expressed the earnest hope that the Emperor might soon call upon his forces in the west for a renewal of offensive warfare. The order concluded with these words:

"Upon the joyful life of the offensive battles followed our mole war of hardships by which we have interposed inseverable chains before the enemy storming against us with impotent rage, thus enabling our brothers in the east to conduct an incomparable campaign of victory, but as under a volcano irrepressible fires burn ad spread until, forcibly bursting through, they liberate their powers, so we await with undiminished joy the day of battle when the Emperor summons us to a new attack. Out of the trenches and tunnels. Into the war that we love. God grant that this day may come soon. France must again recognize the victory of Longwy.

Young Scotch Soldier Gives Wonderful Picture of the Fighting at the Dardanelles

Special to the Examiner

The following description of trench life at the Dardanelles was written by a soldier, aged 21, to his mother in Scotland.

The chatter of the trenches is wonderfully cheerful; a mail from home, football, racing, reminiscences of festive occasions, and little happenings of the fight are all occasions for cheery banter. Then, of course, there is the grousing—not bitter, but all as part of the day's work. For the eye, all around the blue-grey muddy trench bank, sun-dried and parched, occasional glimpses of dusty plane trees, old Achi Baba's wicked top. And the men, some on lookout duty at periscopes and rifles ready for every offering target; others cleaning their rifles, mending their clothes, reading books, cooking, smoking, or eating. A queer, narrow life, but full of quiet interests. The sun blazes overhead, the guns boom, the shells scream and burst, the rifles crackle and the bullets whistle, and the silly drama of war goes on while good men die. Stretcher parties make their way along the narrow path with their sorry burdens, voices are hushed, for a pal is badly hit. Oh! the pity of it all.

NIGHT IN THE TRENCHES.

All but the lookouts asleep, sprawling in the dust in attitudes of deep fatigue. Very little smoking, hushed voices, queer shadows, and the red flash of rifles. Such is the night picture. Officers and working parties move stealthily about, picking their way among the sleeping figures, as considerate as possible, but sometimes evoking from somnolent humanity an outburst of unexpected trenches. Suddenly up goes a flare, and all the queer picture becomes more queer in the varied chiaroscura of intense localized light. It's only another view of the inhuman picture of fighting humanity, killing and being killed, for what? Alas! for what?

June 19.—We have a lot of night work. The bullets whiz by, but the fire is unaimed, and exposure has not the bitter certainty of day time. Man has a sporting chance, and with a gambler's instinct takes it almost with a pleasurable thrill. Like gnomes in a Norse Saga, the black figures wield their picks and shovels, or hastily drive in pickets for obstacles and rush round with coils of barbed wire, muttering curses for scratched hands or torn clothes. Then a lull, as one man has run against the bullet that sought him, hurried down the back communication trench to days of pain or to die.

TOO MATHEMATICAL.

June 20.—I have now been actually in the front of two advances. I find that I am too mathematical to be afraid. My old love of "probabilities" consoles me. Bullets may whistle and shells howl, but my chance is still "n" to 1. I find the turmoil does not prevent me thinking clearly.

June 25.—Our company retired for a rest, to work on back communication trenches.

June 27.—Impressions. Our shells tear the air; shrapnel like lashing of scorpions' tails. Aeroplanes buzz all day. Bombs like a demon's shout. Wild thyme round by dug-out. Gold-finches very pretty.

June 28.—Tremendous bombardment on our left. Very good advance; everyone optimistic.

LEITER WOULD HAVE WAR

Examiner Special:

CHICAGO, Aug. 27 — Joseph Leiter, millionaire of wheat corner fame, is a great war advocate.

War should be declared against Germany without delay, said Mr. Leiter, who is in Chicago on business.

This is going to be a long struggle. It will last for two or three years yet. We want a voice in the settlement when it comes and in order to get it we will have to fight for it.

We should throw our immense resources both in men and supplies to the allies. The fall of the Dardanelles is imminent and it is going to make Russia open to move her vast imports and exports through that channel. The allies will slowly wear Germany down. Austria already is bankrupt. The time for diplomatic dalliance on our part is over.

Julius Caesar

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1915, by the Metropolitan Newspaper Syndicate.

The Hopetime Debating Society was again Jonjahs men. It dawned on him at breakfast that he was born in a garden, and that evenin he came over to the drug store and made a speech and started the ball rollin. A week later the society had its first meetin. There was not room for all and I had to stay outside my own premises but I could hear the proceedings and I gathered that two questions were to be debated. The first was, Resolved, That Julius Caesar was a greater man than Napoleon. The second was, Resolved, That the pen is mightier than the sword. The first question was taken up at the next meetin and Jonjah Bebee and [illegible] were appointed to lead off on the affirmative and negative sides. Each speaker was to be limited to ten minutes. I don't know what I'd do if I had to talk for ten minutes. I guess I'd set down after I got started and when I got up to the end of a sentence I'd say, "Mr. Chairman, I have finished."

The question of Julius Caesar was a hot one. Where I was a young man I had never heard of Julius Caesar. I had never even heard of Napoleon. I had been born and brought up in the country and had never had much education. I had never had time for books. I had been too busy with [illegible] to read much. I had never had time for books. I had been too busy with [illegible] to read much. I had never had time for books. I had been too busy with [illegible] to read much.

[illegible] first thought was to use the money to start in business, but it was only a temptation. His honesty wouldn't permit such a thing. He went around inquirin' who had lost $5 and at length found the owner, and the owner took it likin' to him and pushed him along until he was ready made a king.

"That's one tally mark for the affirmative side," said the deacon as the speaker sat down, "and I decide that Jedediah has made five points. We will now hear from Jonas Bebee on the negative side."

Jonas went back to the days of Julius Caesar, began Jonas as he rose up.

"When Caesar was a young man of twenty-two he hadn't a dollar to his name," continued Jonas. "He had made up his mind to hang himself when he found a stray mewl in the woods. He sold the critter to the first man who would buy, and with the $12 he received he went into politics and pushed along until he finally became one of the greatest men of his time."

"That's a tally mark on the negative side," said the deacon, "and the points seem to be even."

The deacon called upon Aaron Bradshaw, who was on the affirmative side.

"Foller me back to the days of Julius Caesar," began Aaron, with a wave of the hand. He had it that Caesar was dog and out of a job and discouraged when he happened to find a diamond ring in a mudhole. He could have got an advance of $50 on it at a pawnbroker's, but he actually went hungry for three days while huntin' up the loser. Struck by such a display of unselfish honesty, the owner presented him with $75, took him under his wing and in time made him king.

"That's another tally for the affirmative," said the deacon, "and I guess I'll give Aaron the same number of points as the rest.

"It's the turn of the negative," said the deacon as Aaron sat down, "and we'll now hear from Philetus Johnson."

"Foller me back to the days of Julius Caesar," began Philetus as he rose up, and there was a row. It was full ten minutes before order was restored, and during that time everybody got his head pinched at least once and his vest torn up the back. By and by Deacon Spooner said:

"It's a shame and a disgrace to this town of ours to carry on in this way. I notice that Jim Yates, who don't belong on either side, has jest come in. Jim, do you want to say anything?"

"Not very much," replied Jim as he looked around. "I'd simply like to ask if anybody here has lost this half dollar?"

He held up the coin in his fingers. There were forty-seven men in the room, and every single one of 'em, including the deacon and the squar', replied that it was his.

"As to a debatin' society, it may be a good thing," said Jim as a grin spread over his face, "but as to the subject of discussion tonight I guess you'd better drop it and let it stay dropped. This half dollar has bin in my pocket for two weeks, and every one of you was willin' to lie to git hold of it."

Then he moved softly downstairs and went home, and after the rest of the crowd had sat and looked at each other for two or three minutes in an uncomfortable way the president put on his hat and said:

"Instead of follerin' anybody else back to the days of Julius Caesar, I guess we'd better foller Jim Yates downstairs and call [illegible] busted!"

The Speed of Light.

Light holds the record for high speed among all moving things that have been measured. It travels at the rate of 328,028,800 yards a second. This is faster than thinking, even by the most quick witted person. Let any reader try to think the simplest thought and then with the aid of a stop watch note how long it has taken him to think it. He will then be able to understand how slow his mental operations are compared to the speed of light.

The Mole.

The most courageous of all living things is, by common consent of naturalists, the mole. Seemingly without any sense of fear whatever, the mole will fight anything that crosses its path. Neither giving nor asking quarter, it tears away at its adversary until it kills it or is itself killed. The mole's appetite is in keeping with its courage, and it thinks nothing of eating its own weight. In appetite the spider is a close second to the mole, but when it comes to fighting the mole carries the palm.

Old Time Butterscotch.

Put three pounds of light brown sugar in an enameled kettle with three-fourths of a pound of butter. Place over a moderate fire to melt; let it boil until thick, stirring all the while to prevent scorching. Take the kettle from the fire and pour the boiling hot liquid into buttered tins or upon a large flat meat platter. When stiff enough mark off into big squares, and when cold break these apart and wrap each square in wax paper. Butterscotch carefully made will keep for months. It improves with age.

Sheppard's Plaid.

Of course everybody knows the popular black and white check patterned cloth "sheppard's plaid," but ninety-nine people of every hundred ascribe the origin of this cognomen to some connection with the pastoral personage which is apparently indicated. Indeed, the description is generally written erroneously by tailors as "shepherd's plaid." Sheppard was the manufacturer who first introduced this fabric, and he exhibited his invention at the great exhibition of 1851.—London Scraps.

Cheap Sheep.

Sheep could be purchased for fourpence each in England in the twelfth century.

Honolulu.

The proper regional address for a letter to Honolulu is "T. H.," territory of Hawaii.

French Military Law.

Every Frenchman not declared unfit for military service must on reaching the age of twenty serve three years in the active army, eleven years in the reserve of the active army (two trainings of one month each), six years in the territorial army (one training of two weeks) and six years in the reserve of the territorial army. Part of the conscripts, drawn by lot and the number of which is fixed every year by the minister of war, pass into the reserve after one year of active service, if they can read and write, or after two years if illiterate. Those who are not able to bear arms or belong to the active army for a period less than three years have to pay a military tax of 6 francs ($1.15).

Why Italy Loves the Army.

The Italian soldier is not only severely drilled, but he is also expected to perform a good many duties not usually regarded as falling within the requirements of military service. It is considered incumbent on every man wearing the king's uniform to give aid whenever and wherever it may be needed for the protection of life and property, against crime, accident or disaster, and whenever a calamity befalls—such as an earthquake—the first move is always to send troops to assist the suffering. That is one reason why Italy regards her army with affection as her protector at home as well as her defender against foreign aggression.—London Chronicle.

The World's Longest Sentence.

"It says here that the longest sentence in the English language contains 140 words," said the old fogy.

"That's wrong," replied the grouch. "The longest sentence contains only one word."

"What is that?" asked the old fogy.

"Life," replied the grouch.—Kansas City Star.

Work it Out.

Those who are tired of railroad travel may find a hopeful remedy in the diversion of a commercial traveler who spends the lagging hours with such problems as this: He consults the timetable, ascertains that his watch is thirty minutes slow, discovers that there is one hour's difference in time and the train is fifty minutes late. What station is it?—Buffalo News.

Makes Her Restless.

"The confidence Mrs. Gadders reposes in her husband is wonderful."

"My wife says she has confidence in me, but I fear it is not the reposeful kind."

"No?"

"It's the kind that keeps her awake at night until she finds out where I've been."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Chinese Beggar Chiefs.

At a Chinese wedding the "beggar chief" is always invited and brings a plate. He begs from all the guests, but in return keeps all other mendicants from the marriage feast. The beggar chief of a big Chinese city makes as much as $15,000 a year, and out of this he pays the common or street beggars to keep away from social gatherings.

What Belfry Means.

The term "belfry" has no etymological connection with "bell," as one would naturally suppose. It is the old French "berfray," from the middle high German "bervrit," and means a place of safety ("bergen," to conceal, and "vride," peace, protection). The word signified originally a kind of tower, and the association with bells, so convenient in English, came later.

Rather Offended.

"I like acting with spirit to it," said the great star, "but that girl has too much spirit to suit me."

"How so?"

"In the third act she is supposed to resist my kissing her, and the vim she puts into it is far from flattering to my personal pride."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

First School For the Blind.

The derisive exhibition of blind men in the streets of Paris in 1784 led to the establishment of the first training school for the afflicted of this class. It is related that a Paris innkeeper to found a new attraction for a street fair took five blind men, arrayed them in grotesque habiliments, furnished them with discordant musical instruments and bade the people come, see—and laugh. The pitiful spectacle touched the sheart of an onlooker, who established a school whereby the sightless might be educated.—Argonaut.

WOMEN OF CANADA.

Fort Coulonge, Quebec. — "I am happy to tell you that your medicine did me wonderful good. I was troubled with weakness and I tried wines and other things but received very little benefit. I was young at the time and knew very little about medicines till a lady friend came to me with a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I became strong and a year afterward had twins."—Mrs. J. Brady, Fort Coulonge, Quebec.

Thousands of women right here in Canada who are now blessed with robust health cannot understand why thousands of other women continue to worry and suffer when they can obtain for a trifling sum Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which will surely and quickly banish all pain, distress and misery and restore the womanly health.

Young mothers who preserve the charms of face and figure in spite of an increasing family and the care of growing children are always to be envied. "Favorite Prescription" gives the strength and health upon which happy motherhood depends. It enables the mother to nourish the infant life depending on her, and enjoy the happiness of watching the development of a perfectly healthy child.

A GREAT BOOK THAT EVERY WOMAN SHOULD HAVE.

Over a million copies of the "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser" are now in the hands of the people. It is a book that everyone should have and read in case of accident or sickness.

Send fifty cents (or stamps) for mailing charges to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., and enclose this notice and you will receive by return mail, all charges and customs duty prepaid, this valuable book.

TO THE PANAMA PACIFIC EXPOSITION VIA THE CANADIAN ROCKIES.

At the present time a great many are planning their annual tour. Considerable numbers visit the popular California resorts, while many prefer the unsurpassed resorts, palatial hotels and magnificent scenery of the Canadian Rockies. This year, why not combine the two by a visit to the Panama Pacific Exposition?

Now-a-days people in comfortable circumstances will scarcely afford a trip have the mistaken idea that a journey of this nature is most expensive. This is not so, thanks to the modern railway facilities, an extensive trip both interesting and educational, can be made with speed and comfort at a comparatively small cost. Why not investigate?

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Ananias Sline's Airship

Story of a Troubled Conscience.

By CLARISSA MACKIE

The very day I arrived at Quince Harbor I met the Widow Rowell. She was emerging from Em Bevis' department store, and on her comely face was a baffled look.

"It has something to do with Ananias Sline," was my first thought, for these two interesting widows, Em Bevis and Hetty Rowell, were boldly contesting for the heart and hand of Ananias Sline, one time mate of the good ship Indus and now porter in the Quince Harbor bank.

"Good morning, Miss Telham," she gave greeting. "How's Maria's rheumatism?"

"Much better than it was. And how are you?"

The little widow cast a baleful backward glance at the department store, where I distinctly saw Em Bevis' sleekly pompadoured head against the window. "I'm fine! Splendid!" responded the Widow Rowell vivaciously. "Have you heard about Mr. Sline's aeroplane? Captain Barnabas said Ananias had been building one. He makes his trial flight tonight. I'll tell you something if you won't tell," she added proudly.

"You may confide in me, Mrs. Rowell," I reproached her. "I shall be as silent as the grave."

She drew nearer and whispered:

"I'm going up in the airship with Ananias!"

And while I listened, aghast, she patted my arm and darted away down the village street.

Suddenly I remembered that I had an errand at Em Bevis' store, and as I mounted the steps the door flew open and Mrs. Bevis' ample form was bowling me inside, and her heavy features relaxed in a generous smile of welcome.

"You heard about Mr. Sline's airship?" she asked suddenly.

"Yes. He makes a trial flight today," I repeated quickly, for I was mindful of Hetty Rowell's secret locked in my breast.

She glanced toward her two clerks, young girls, bright eyed and rosy cheeked, who were exchanging witticisms with the stage driver, who had just delivered an express package.

"He's going to take a passenger," whispered the Widow Bevis.

"Who? Ned Roberts?" I glanced at the lanky stage driver.

"No; Ananias Sline!"

"Oh, a passenger in the airship?" So Hetty's secret was no secret after all.

She nodded.

"It's a secret. Perhaps you can guess." She smiled archly.

"You?" I weakly asked.

"Yes. Don't tell a soul," she cautioned, although I am sure she hoped I would confide the news to Hetty Rowell.

I spent the afternoon on the bay with Captain Barnabas and his wife, Maria. As we tied up at the little landing below the Fish cottage the captain cast a glance at the wind signal.

"Not a puff!" he ejaculated. "There isn't a mortal reason why Ananias can't make that flight tonight."

"Bright moonlight, too," added Maria. "Hurry up and come to supper so's we can go right over to Terry's field. I want a good look at the critter before it's smashed to bits."

"Will the machine really fly?" I asked as we ate a hurried meal.

"So Ananias says," returned the captain dryly. Ananias had been his first mate on many voyages, and Captain Fish was confident that the truth was not in Ananias.

When we reached Terry's ten acre

And [illegible] above the [illegible]. The roof was flooded with white light, revealing the gathering crowd of villagers.

In the middle of the moonlit space was a great white winged object surrounded by curious men and boys.

This was Ananias Sline's airship.

We approached the awkward looking object and found Ananias himself, looking absurdly small in a feather aviation suit and helmet. He looked like a brown gnome.

He greeted us with his accustomed dignity, but even while he explained the mysteries of the Hawk, as he had named it, his cold blue eyes were searching the arriving crowds.

"He is looking for Hetty, or is it Em Bevis?" I thought, wondering how this latest scheme of Mr. Sline's would work out. Would he have one passenger or two?

A hand plucked at my sleeve. It was Hetty Rowell, almost unrecognizable in heavy skirt, woolen sweater under her winter coat and a green veil wound around her head and face so that only her sharp gray eyes were visible.

"Hetty, aren't you afraid?" I whispered.

She smiled proudly.

"Not with him. Ananias knows and understands his own machine."

She slipped past me and stood talking to Ananias, who continued to peer nervously around while he talked.

There was the sound of heavy breathing close beside me. Em Bevis, as strangely attired as her rival, stood there, her eyes gleaming with resolution. She pushed past me and strode toward Ananias and the Widow Rowell.

Before she reached them there was a shout. Alvin Barker, a teller in the bank, jumped from his automobile and half carried a veiled lady to the airship and lifted her into the passenger's seat, strapping her in with deft rapidity.

"There's your passenger, Ananias," he muttered in a choked tone. "Clear the way, all of you!" he shouted.

The crowd fell back. Ananias jumped nimbly into the pilot's seat, was strapped in, Barker whirled the propeller, the engine started, stopped, started again, and the ungainly bird teetered over the ground on its landing wheels.

It mounted a rise, then lifted and rose obliquely toward the pale moon.

From the pilot's seat loomed a gnome-like figure, Ananias Sline.

In the passenger's seat, stiffly erect, sat the passenger, the veiled lady.

On the ground two other veiled ladies stood shoulder to shoulder and gazed upward after the vanishing Ananias.

For the moment a common grievance declared a truce between them.

"Who was she?" rumbled Em Bevis in her deep tones.

The Widow Rowell cleared her voice of emotion.

"It looked like that Underwood girl from Snarling Hollow," she muttered.

The shout of applause which had arisen when Ananias Sline sailed away died down as the airship became a dark speck against the moon's face.

Silence fell upon Terry's field—silence which was broken by confused shouts.

We turned hastily to discover Haywood Drayton's big motorcar plunging across the grassy field. Haywood Drayton was president of the Quince Harbor bank.

Mr. Drayton jumped from his motorcar, followed by the imposing form of Constable Lee.

Alvin Barker was sliding toward his own little runabout when the big constable's hand fell upon his arm.

"I guess you'll have to come along with me, Alvin," he said good naturedly, and as the teller struggled to free himself the officer's hand tightened its hold.

"Be a good boy, Alvin," he coaxed. "You can't rob the bank without being punished for it, you know."

"It was Ananias," quavered the teller desperately.

"Ananias is an accessory; don't forget that. We must get him," put in Haywood Drayton.

"He's got a lady with him," some one said, and the constable laughed.

"A nice lady—deaf, dumb and blind," he explained between chuckles—"a wax figger from Em Bevis' show window, her holler form filled with packages of greenbacks from the bank. Oh, Ananias is eloping with an heiress, all right!"

Em Bevis and Hetty Rowell exchanged glances of dismay.

"Look!" screamed some one. "He is coming back!"

We gazed up at the pale star strewn sky.

Out of the silence came the throb of the airship's engine, and the huge wings were directly over Terry's field.

Down swooped Ananias Sline's airship until it was 200 feet above us. For a moment it hovered, rocking violently.

Then some one screamed in horror, for a dark object was falling from the airship—a human form.

A shuddering cry went up as the veiled passenger struck the ground and was still.

Some one remembered what the constable had said about the wax figure in Em Bevis' show window.

"Let's see!" he shouted, and ran forward.

Sure enough, the poor veiled lady was the familiar figure we had often seen in Mrs. Bevis' window. But her waxen head was smashed to atoms, and her broken form revealed rolls and wads of newspapers—that was all.

Cunning Alvin Barker had tempted Ananias to run away with the stolen money, while all the time he had hidden the money in a safe place and had stuffed the dummy passenger with paper.

Ananias, conscience stricken—perhaps fear stricken, who knows?—had repented and returned to drop the lady and the loot upon Terry's field. He might have made his escape in the Hawk had not something happened to the engine.

So the Hawk came flopping to earth, and Ananias crept out of the ruins and sought Constable Lee to give himself up.

An hour afterward two veiled ladies appeared in the constable's office. One was Em Bevis, and the other was Hetty Rowell. They came to proffer bail for the aviator's release.

"Cap'n Fish bailed him out an hour ago," explained Lee. "I don't reckon we can do much agin a man's running off with wads of newspaper—unless," he added hopefully, "you want to make a charge against him for stealing your wax figger, Em?"

Em Bevis looked thoughtful.

"'Twan't my figger, Jim," she said at last. "I gave it to Ananias, didn't I, Hetty?"

Hetty Rowell nodded emphatically. "Of course she did!"

"Then there ain't any case against him," declared Jim Lee.

When I told Ananias Sline of this noble deed on the part of Em Bevis his bulbous blue eyes filled with emotional tears. I had not believed he could weep any more than a fish could shed tears.

"Miss Telham," sniffed Ananias, "that's why I can't make up my mind to marry either one of them noble women. It's because I don't feel I'm good enough for 'em."

And I almost believed him!

Old "Drury" Disowns War Lord

Mementoes of the Kaiser have just been removed from Drury Lane, England's premier theatre. Until recently a carved mahogany notice board on the wall in the inner vestibule contained an interesting account of the command performance of "Money," which was given in honor of the Kaiser in 1912, when he was in London in connection with the unveiling of the Queen Victoria Memorial. The record has been discreetly expunged. This is not the only memento of the visit of the War Lord and Kaiser to be removed from public gaze at Drury Lane. The plan of the royal box, bearing the names of the occupants for the historic occasion will not be seen, and the finely painted drop curtain which used to hang on the wall at the top of the circle steps is also missing.

Great Soldiers' Ages

Napoleon was forty five at Waterloo and never reached the sixties. Marlborough was sixty two at Oudenarde, and by no means in his dotage at sixty five. Frederick the Great was fifty-on[illegible] end of his great campaign [illegible] other hand, Moltke at sixty five [illegible] only [illegible] establishing his nation [illegible] was about sixty-[illegible] he was appointed Commander-in-chief in the Crimea. Radetzky, one of the few great soldiers Austria has produced, was eighty-two when he led the Austrians in their last successful war. Wolseley's last campaign was fought at fifty two, but Lord Roberts began his last at sixty-seven. Sir John French was sixty-three after he entered the present war.

Decrease of Merchant Ships

Several British shipyards which are used exclusively for mercantile construction have been closed, and the men transferred to centres where there is great pressure of naval work. The result is that the output of merchant ships will be small until the war is at an end, and it is not expected that for some time after the cessation of hostilities a beginning will be made with the construction of many ships, as builders will be occupied with the repair and overhaul of the steamers that have been commandeered by the Admiralty.

How Welshwomen Carry Their Babies.

The quaint old Welsh way in which Swansea women carry their babies attracts every one's notice when visiting that town for the first time. A big shawl over the right shoulder is drawn down to the left hip, where the two ends of the shawl are met and held together, forming a sort of pouch or pocket, in which the baby snuggles cosily and safely. Its weight is so supported by the hip and distributed by the shawl over the whole upper part of the body that there is no strain at all nor any tiring of the arms. This probably accounts for the upright carriage of the Welsh mother.—London Telegraph.

The Dean's Retort.

One Sunday morning at his church Dean Hole noticed a tipsy man in the congregation. He bore his presence until it was no longer possible and then came to a halt with the question, "Are you fit to remain in God's house?"

The man got up unsteadily and was helped to the door by a parishioner who made himself useful in emergencies.

"James," said Hole after the service was over, "what did you do with that man?"

The useful parishioner replied, "I put him on a tombstone, sir."

The indignant vicar's retort was, "Couldn't you have put him under it?"

WELL, did them picture people get moving pictures of everything on the farm?"

"Everything but the hired man," said Farmer Heck. "They couldn't ketch him in motion."

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM

This is a Canadian method of preserving fruits without sugar, so that they will keep for some time. Fill some clean, wide mouthed bottles with fresh sound fruit, add nothing to them not even water. Be sure that the fruit is well and carefully packed and the corks tied down with string level with the glass. Put the bottles in a pan of cold water, packing them round with hay to prevent breakage, and let the water reach not quite to the shoulders of the bottles. Place the pan over a moderate fire and bring the water to the boiling point. Boil for ten minutes, remove from the fire, and allow to cool. When cold store with head downwards.

A WEAK CHESTED BOY.

My boy Frank seemed weak-chested and took a very severe cold," writes Mrs. D. Stevens, Ninga, Man. "The many medicines used did not seem to benefit him, until we tried Dr Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine and found it to be exactly what was wanted to cure him. No treatment is so thorough and effective as a cure for croups and bronchitis.

Prescriptions in English.

"If a medicinal substance has any effect except upon the imagination it will have that effect as much when written in English as in perfect Latin," says the New York Medical Journal. It says doctors still write their prescriptions in Latin only because their ancestors did so and perhaps because it impresses the patient, but the names of the drugs now used "look as formidable in English as in Latin." Therefore it urges physicians to write in English. Thus fewer mistakes will be made in putting up medicines.

Will Devote Life to Aiding Others to Fight Superstition and Conventionality

BOSTON, Aug. 26. Edmund Trowbridge Dana, whose "perfect bride" Jessie Holliday Dana, took her life under tragic circumstances a month and a half ago, says that from now on he will devote his life to "freeing people's minds from the chains of superstition and conventionality."

His statement came during a talk on his recent dismissal from the professorship of philosophy at the University of Minnesota. A reporter found him at his father's summer home at Manchester-by-the-Sea.

In the course of conversation young Dana said:

That he did not feel bitter over his dismissal.

That he was accused of teaching atheism at the Minnesota institution.

That he knew he was "professionally dead" so far as teaching in the near future was concerned.

That he never said he thought his wife "did right in committing suicide".

That he hasn't seen his baby son, Shaw, since its mother's death; that he never cared for real small children as "playthings," and that they appealed to him only when they began to talk and "get ideas."

"LACK OF RESERVE"

Young Dana was ousted from the Minnesota University on the ground of his "lack of regard for common usages, indiscretion and lack of reserve and dignity." The dismissal was declared to be the result of his statements in the newspapers following his wife's death.

Referring to the faculty which dismissed him, he said:

"I am only sorry for the fact that such benighted ideas are kept alive by such a procedure on the part of universities as a whole. Where is progress to be made if institutions of learning proceed to discharge men with originality and frankness of expression?"

"Why, do you know, there is more bad philosophy taught and thought than anything in the world today, except bad poetry."

The radical young scion of two of New England's oldest and best known families went on to say that if opportunity came, he would be ready to devote his talent to the service of the cause of Socialism. He is the grandson of the poet Longfellow and also of Richard Henry Dana, Jr., the famous author of "Two Years Before the Mast." Young Dana's mother, daughter of Longfellow, and the "Edith with golden hair" of Longfellow's "Children's Hour," died only a few days ago.

EXPECTED DISMISSAL

"On the contrary I had expected it after I had received their first letter requesting my answer to certain questions propounded by them," he said. "Those trustees were looking out for the appropriation from the State Legislature, which pays the running expenses of the college. Naturally, the majority of the Minnesota legislators were not in favor of Socialism being taught in their state university. So what was more natural than to eliminate me, a Socialist, whatever the pretext, in order to stand in a more favorable light with the Legislature when asking for an increased appropriation?

"If it was my job to administer a university I would seek to have the favor of the State Legislature it my salary depended upon it. To do otherwise would be suicidal for the university and myself included. No, I have no sense of rancour against any one following my dismissal.

"The Minnesota affair really began last winter so far as a dislike toward me and my teaching was concerned. While at Minnesota I tried to have a Socialist organizer speak on the campus and organize a branch of the Intercollegiate Society.

WROTE LETTER OF PROTEST

"My plans were frustrated, however, by a faculty edict forbidding any sort of propaganda within the university precincts. Not even Christian Science was tolerated on the campus. I immediately wrote a letter to the college paper criticising the action of the faculty and condemning such a procedure as savouring of the middle ages. The idea of a modern university forbidding its students from spreading ideas within its confines! It seemed very unwarranted to me, and I said so plainly.

"Well, you should have seen the daily papers the day following my action! The local papers came out with great headlines saying that one of the faculty openly criticised the general edict of his associates and accused the college of trying to prohibit freedom of thought and speech.

"You may be sure that all that publicity did not raise me in the estimation of certain influential citizens connected with the college. Then some 16th century intellect added to the burden of my lot, as it were, by circulating the report that I was teaching 'atheism' in my class.

"So I lay low for a few years in order to be able to secure another university position. Still I do not regret my course of action in talking to the newspapers. A position in the Socialist ranks seems to be the only thing open to me for a time at least."

Dealing In Futures.

"It is my firm belief," announced Jasper Knox, the sage of Piketown-on-the-Blink, "that in the dim and misty future there is a faint possibility of some hitherto unknown inventive genius accidentally stumbling upon a scientific formula, the compounding of which, superinduced by a liberal and proper administration of the same to teething infants, will impart to those necessary household adjuncts a sense of propriety which will enable them to comprehend the utter folly of keeping their overworked father awake half of the night, when the high cost of living demands that he be up and doing when the cuckoo clock proclaims the advent of another day of toil."—Judge.

The Modesty of a Hero

Fighting as a soldier builds up men physically. Lance-Sergeant Douglas Belcher, who received the Victoria cross, was a salesman and weighed 147 pounds when he enlisted. Now he weighs 182 pounds. He writes to a friend in London of how he won the V.C., as follows: "Three days ago we took up a new position, and I was given eight men and told to hold an advanced post. Well, we were being shelled to blazes. I got a message through: 'Regiment on my right retiring but I am holding on.' I got a reply: 'Good. Hold on,' which I did until reinforcements came up. I had to see the C.O. next morning, and he said, 'Sergeant Belcher, allow me to congratulate you personally on your brilliant performance yesterday. You saved the situation.' Nearly took my breath away. I had nothing worse than a bit of shrapnel through my hat and a slight scratch on the chin."

Free Course of Training

The London, England, Central Young Men's Christian Association have made arrangements under which 1,000 men, who by reason of insufficient chest measurement or physique are under standard, may receive a free course of gymnasi training for one month, or longer if necessary, in order to fit them for service in His Majesty's forces.

To Put on Flesh And Increase Weight

A Physician's Advice

Men want to put on from four to six pounds of good solid fat making them every day, and who do not increase in weight one ounce, while on the other hand many of the plump, chunky fellows can't lose weight and keep gaining all the time. It is a mistake to say that this is the nature of the individual. It isn't nature's way at all.

They look stout because the powers of assimilation are defective. They absorb just enough of the food they eat to maintain life and a semblance of health and strength, but nothing more. Nothing they eat makes a day's work easier. They pound the fat producing elements in their food out of shape in the intestines until they pass from the body as waste. What such people need is something that will prepare these fatty food elements so that the blood can absorb them and deposit them at once for body building, so that when muscular work is done the tissues will be renewed with firm healthy flesh, and not with fat. Then, and then only, will the body be plump, chunky, full of vim, vigor and vitality.

For such a condition I always recommend eating a Sargol tablet with every meal. Sargol is not a secret remedy, but a scientific combination of six of the most effective and powerful flesh building elements known to chemistry, each so absolutely harmless yet wonderfully effective and a single tablet eaten with each meal often has the effect of increasing the weight of a thin man or woman from three to five pounds a week. Sargol is sold by all good druggists everywhere on a positive guarantee of weight increase or money back.

When a child has the slightest tendency to crooked legs he should have a very special treatment. His bones are too soft, and he needs more lime and iron. He should be taken off his feet at once, and have cool water bathing and massage.

Doctor Said Only Hope Was In An Operation

Was Skeptical When He Began the Use of Dr. Chase's Ointment—Relief Came Quickly

Here is a plain, honest statement to be read by Dr Chase's Ointment. Between the lines of this letter you can read the gratitude which its writer feels. One does not suffer from autointoxication, the cause of piles, for ten years without appreciating a cure when it is obtained.

Time and time and brings the report of more who has been cured of piles by the use of Dr Chase's Ointment. Such statements are never used without the permission of the writer, and until we are satisfied that he cure is genuine and the other a point of responsibility.

You may believe in operations for piles, and think there is no other cure. Write to Mr Ingles, enclosing stamp, and he will gladly verify his statement. He will tell you that he paid the expense, the risk of an operation are quite unnecessary. That relief and cure come with the use of Dr Chase's Ointment.

Mr Ernest W Ingles, Penticton, B.C. writes: "I suffered from piles [illegible] years and though I tried all kinds of ointments and injections I really had no permanent relief until I used Dr. Chase's Ointment. When I began this treatment I had absolutely no faith in it, for I had been examined by a well-known physician in Vancouver, and he said that an operation was the only thing that would benefit me. It was surprising the relief I obtained from the very first box, and now, after using four boxes, I am practically cured. My case was so exceptionally bad that I received no relief day or night, and for this reason the results are wonderful."

You can obtain Dr. Chase's Ointment from any dealer at 60 cents a box. If you do not want to risk this much send a two-cent stamp to pay postage, and mention this paper, and we shall send you a sample box free. We are so certain that any sufferer from piles will obtain relief by using this ointment that we do not hesitate to make you this offer. Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

SUSPENDER SKIRTS—A LATE CRAZE.

By Anabel Worthington.

The suspender idea comes and goes. We find it used in the overblouse in many fetching modes and also in a far more simple form in skirts such as the one shown in our illustration. The new fearless figure makes it seem as if this skirt should be popular, for if we have no hips, how are we to keep our skirts in place? This is even more true of young [illegible] whom this design is especially [illegible].

In the [illegible] the deep yoke, which is another fancy of the present season. Below this the skirt is straight, with a flat panel in front and pleats turning backward from it and meeting in the center at the back. Here the closing is placed. Two high pockets which form the yoke are a feature of choice, and this also decides whether the high or the normal waistline shall be used.

These skirts are intended primarily for wear with odd waists and need not match them in fabric or color. Indeed it is far better to have the skirt entirely different to make it of linen or even of serge or a panne mixed effect perhaps of silk poplin with taffeta [illegible] and use waists of white or pale satin or even of fresh cotton.

Instead of having the panel some women prefer to have it [illegible] giving the outer edge of each side a [illegible] to the bottom. This lends itself to piece effectively and is adapted [illegible] when new satin is not to be had for [illegible].

7214

The skirt pattern, No. 7214, is cut in [illegible] sizes 14, 16, 18 and 20 years. Medium size requires 3¾ yards of 36 inch material.

When ordering [illegible] give your name and address as well as the number [illegible] pattern required and age of a child.

FRENCH AVIATORS CONTINUE AIR RAIDS OVER GERMANY

Railway Stations, Depots and Munition Factories Are Again Bombarded With High Explosives---French Gain Trenches at Several Points While German Attacks Are Easily Repulsed.

HESPERIAN REACHES ENGLAND SAFELY

Special Cable to The Examiner

PARIS, France (French Official Communique) Aug. 27.—French aviators renewed their raiding operations last night and early to-day, attacking German railway stations and factories.

The air attacks were made principally in the Woevre region and along the railways used by the enemy to carry supplies to the armies of the Crown Prince and those fighting before Metz.

Among the more important points under attack were the railway stations at St. Baussant, Essey and Divoiry, and the big gas plant at Dornach. At Muelheim the railway station, electric light plant, and other buildings were bombarded.

German trenches were captured at Landersbach, in Alsace, and the trench portions of the crest of Sondernach.

The new gains consolidate the French positions in this region and make them more difficult of attack by the enemy.

In the Argonne, Germans launched an offensive last night before Auberive, but their advance was speedily halted. In the regions of Arras and Roye, and between the Oise and Aisne a violent cannonading continued throughout last night.

BERLIN, Aug. 27.—For the second time the German Admiralty to-day issued a statement declaring the Russian Admiralty claim that the battle cruiser Moltke and other German ships had been destroyed in the Gulf of Riga, was a "fake."

LONDON, Aug. 27.—A Committee of the Cabinet, consisting of Lord Crewe, Lord Curzon, Winston Churchill, Austin Chamberlain and Arthur Henderson is holding an inquiry as to the advisability and feasibility of conscription.

Lord Kitchener has given evidence before the committee as have other ministers, members and officials, and it is hoped that the committee will finish its labours before the meeting of Parliament in the middle of September.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27.—Unofficial advices to representatives of the Balkan nations here say Bulgaria has signed an agreement with Turkey which includes the provision that she remain neutral, and that the attempt to form a Balkan League has failed.

LONDON, Eng., Aug. 27.—Unquestionably it can be said that the first informal peace negotiation is now, in fact, under way.

Instead of being conducted through intermediaries they are taking the form of public statements delivered by responsible ministers of England and Germany. Each nation is cautiously sounding the other. After the first extravagances have been brushed aside, a basis for consenting to an armistice may reveal itself as suddenly as the war clouds gathered last summer.

LONDON, Aug. 27.—Cable despatches reporting the statement yesterday of Count Von Bernstorff, German Ambassador at Washington to Secretary Lansing, that German submarine commanders had been ordered to attack no more merchantmen without warning, are displayed prominently today in the London newspapers.

The Westminster Gazette says: "If Count Von Bernstorff is speaking with full authority, the American Government can claim to have won a very notable victory."

OTTAWA, Aug. 27.—It is officially announced that the Hesperian, which sailed from Canada on August 17, has safely arrived in England with the following drafts of reinforcements.

Royal Canadian Dragoons, 2 officers, 15 men; Horse Artillery, 2 officers and 50 men; Field Artillery, 4 officers and 100 men; Engineers, 3 officers and 100 men; Signallers, 1 officer and 50 men; Infantry from Ontario, 24 officers and 1,246 men; other details, 3 officers and six men.

RUSSIAN ARMIES DIVIDED BY AUSTRIAN CAVALRY WEDGE

Special to The Examiner:

AUSTRIAN HEADQUARTERS, Aug. 27. Austrian cavalry has pushed eastward from Kovel and divided the Russian forces into two groups, which are now unable to co-operate with each other, according to advices received from the commanders at the front.

The Austrian armies operating south of the Bug have gained ground in the direction of the railway connecting Brest Litovsk with Minsk. They now hold positions about three miles west of the River Lesna.

The wedge thrust into the Russian front by the Austrian cavalry occupying Kovel has been carried farther eastward and widened. The Russian forces thus are severed into two groups, which makes it impossible for them to co-operate with each other.

GERMANY TO USE CLOTHING IN THE PLACE OF RAW COTTON

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Aug. 27. Germany is seriously alarmed over the cotton situation that has arisen as a consequence of Britain's declaration of the staple as contraband. This measure has caused an extremely profound impression in Berlin.

The Lokal Anzeiger says on the subject: "There is no doubt that Germany will be affected much more seriously by the stoppage of the cotton supply than by that of food imports. Germany will be able to produce a sufficient quantity of cereals and vegetables, but we cannot produce cotton at all.

"Nevertheless they are terribly mistaken in England if they suppose that they can prevent Germany from manufacturing explosives thereby bringing the war to an earlier conclusion.

"A country that transformed an average of two million bales of cotton yearly into fabrics in time of peace possesses among its population an inexhaustible stock of worn cotton rags, which can be easily employed as substitutes for raw cotton."

The German Army authorities also are reported to be alarmed over the shortage of cotton and have asked the school managements of Berlin to permit the girls in the boarding schools to revert to the ancient German war custom of lint picking. This consists of unravelling cotton rags and preparing them for the use of bandages.

The school authorities have given their assent to the proposal and the girls are now doing the work under the direction of woman teachers.

The German jute industry also seeks the help of the school children in collecting large quantities of the well-known willow herb from which a so-called substitute for jute can be obtained. This scheme also has been approved by the authorities.

EVERYONE MUST DO THEIR BIT FOR LOCAL BATTALION

Col. Hemming Having Officially Announced the Selection of Peterborough as a Training Centre, It is Up to the Citizens Generally

RECRUITS MUST COME

To the Editor of The Examiner

Sir,—The Mail and Empire announces under date of Kingston today as follows:

"It is announced that four battalions of infantry will be kept in the 3rd divisional area until the close of the war. Two of these will be stationed at Kingston, one at Ottawa and one at Peterborough."

It cannot be too strongly impressed upon our people that having succeeded in getting one of these battalions, every effort must be made to justify our requests and the confidence reposed in us at Ottawa and Kingston. There is a meeting of the Patriotic League to-night at the recruiting headquarters on George street, and all who wish to help in recruiting for this battalion should attend. The work must be taken up with all speed. Provision for winter quarters must be made early and the need of winter quarters depends upon recruiting so that both must come, and come soon, if our hopes are to be fulfilled by our own efforts. Ottawa has done its share, now for ours.

White Frost Last Night

Temperature Dropped to Thirty-six Degrees

White frost made its presence felt in Peterborough last evening. The temperature dropped to a minimum of thirty-six degrees which is four degrees above freezing. Garden produce suffered slightly. People who are camping down the river or in the back yard regarded the change as significant. Another week will drive the majority of the summer campers back to the fringe of civilization and a warm feather bed in a steam heated room. The weatherman states that the cold spell of the last day or so is not unusual at this season of the year. In less than a week September will be here. September spells "autumn," and a succession of frosty nights with warm sunny days. The soar of the autumn is already on the leaf, if one stops to examine them closely enough.

Will Speak on Interesting Topic at Knox Church

On Sunday evening at Knox Presbyterian Church, Rev. Dr. Lawrence of Binghampton, N.Y. will give an address on the subject "Some outstanding features of the European War as viewed by citizens of the United States." This is an extremely interesting topic and should be heard by a large congregation.

Excursion on Monday

Capt. Harris' generous offer of his steamer and crew, free for an excursion, on Monday has been accepted by the St. Anders - Patriotic Society. The steamer "Geneva" will leave the George Street Wharf Monday morning at 10 o'clock, calling at East City and Street Railway Wharf. Fare for the round trip, 50c., proceeds to be devoted to the funds of the above Society. Take a day off and help along the good cause. 2148

KEEP EVERLASTINGLY AT IT

That—what our soldiers have to do, day in, day out, in order to stem the German hordes and drive them out of stricken Belgium.

In this dazzled light our sons, brothers and sweethearts are risking life and limb, and all they ask of you is something to smoke.

But tobacco all goes up in smoke, and the need is now greater than ever, so the Examiner appeals to you to keep on giving—to keep everlastingly at it, for our boys sorely need that comfort and consolation that only a cigarette or pipe can give.

It should be understood that arrangements were made some time ago to supply the Canadian soldiers with Canadian tobacco, and the standard brand, Tuckett's T. and B. tobacco is being supplied.

ANOTHER FORT HAS FALLEN

Olita on the Niemen River is the Ninth Russian Fortress to be Captured by Germans in the Past Three Weeks

GODNO STILL HELD

Special Cable to The Examiner.

LONDON, Aug. 27.—Berlin's official statement this afternoon declares that the Russian fortress of Olita on the Niemen river, 30 miles south of Kovno, has been evacuated.

In all the wide sweep of Russian territory south of the Baltic provinces which has been covered during the great Austro-German offensive movement, the fortress of Grodno, is now the only strongly defended position remaining in the hands of the Russians. Olita was on the principal Russian line of defence, midway between Kovno, "already in the hands of the Germans," and Grodno. It is about 50 miles south-west of the important centre of Vilna, which is on the direct trunk line to Petrograd.

Olita is the ninth important Russian fortress to fall before the invaders in the last three weeks.

Big Meeting At Lakefield

Mr. J. A. Sexsmith Will Be Among the Speakers on Monday Night

At the big mass meeting at Lakefield on Monday night to stimulate recruiting for the Peterborough City and County Battalion, the speakers will include His Honour Judge Hoyles, Lieut.-Col. Miller and Mr. J. A. Sexsmith, M.P. for East Peterborough. The Lakefield band will provide music and a number of the recruits of the Peterborough Battalion will be in attendance at the meeting. A recruiting sergeant will be left in Lakefield for a few days and it is expected that the response to the call for men for the Peterborough City and County Battalion will be a ready one. Lakefield has already done well in the recruiting line and is expected to keep up the good work on this occasion.

A DELAY IN THE OPENING

Big Rush of Men Back to the Teaching Profession Has Made it Necessary for More Normal School Accommodation

TO OPEN ON SEPT. 14th

TORONTO, Aug. 27.—Ontario Normal Schools, failed to open on Monday next, will not commence their season's work until September 14. Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, Acting Minister of Education, made the announcement yesterday.

The cause of the delay is regarded by the Education Department with considerable satisfaction. For some years now there has been an annual shortage of teachers and inducements of various kinds have had to be made to tempt young people to enter the teaching profession. This year the applications for entrance to the Normal Schools have unexpectedly swamped the department. Last year was a big year as recent years have been counted and 1,450 applications were received. This year over 1,700 have been received already. The economic condition resulting from the war is believed to be largely the cause of the change.

Unexpected Situation.

It is perhaps specially significant, as pointed out by Hon. Mr. Ferguson, that the bulk of this substantial increase is male applicants. The percentage of male applicants this year has nearly doubled over last year, while there is also a substantial increase among female applicants.

The situation confessedly came upon the department unexpectedly, and the congestion is such that it has become necessary to considerably increase the number of teachers in the Normal Schools and also to supply considerable increased accommodation in every one of the institutions. This necessitates the delay in opening.

Temporary Accommodation.

Hon. Mr. Ferguson stated that it was not the intention to make any capital outlay at the present time in increasing accommodation. Temporary accommodation will be arranged by transforming certain portions of the existing schools into classrooms and in particular into halls and galleries. The new teachers necessary will be advertised for at once and the Acting Minister has reason to believe they will be obtained in time for the postponed commencement.

The Government and Hon. Mr. Ferguson in regards with satisfaction the large number applying for training as teachers, showing that the Normal School policy is a success. In the course there will be an ample supply of teachers with a high grade of certificate for all schools, rural as well as urban, of local boards desiring to avail themselves of the supply.

COL. HEMMING HAS OFFICIALLY ANNOUNCED THE NEW BATTALION

Officer Commanding the District States That Peterborough is to Have One of the Four Battalions to Be Stationed in Eastern Ontario.

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

At Kingston yesterday, Col. Hemming, the officer commanding the 3rd Division, officially announced that a Battalion would be stationed at Peterborough. There will be four Battalions in the division, two at Barriefield, one at Ottawa, and the fourth at Peterborough, until the conclusion of the war. That means that Peterborough has been selected as a permanent centre, where men will be trained and sent forward to the front as reinforcements from time to time as they are needed. Just at present it is up to the people of Peterborough, city and county, to justify the confidence shown by the authorities, by keeping a steady stream of recruits into the Peterborough Battalion. A splendid body of men are already in the battalion, but many more of the same kind are needed.

The Peterborough Battalion should appeal to every one eligible to enlist. Never since the war broke out have the men of the city and county been given such a chance to get away together with the advantage of training at home until sent to the front. The recruiting so far in the campaign has been splendid, but it must be kept up. Now is the time to get in.

The public is asked to keep the date open Thursday, Sept. 2nd, with the admission fee 25 cents. It will be a fine patriotic night, and the soldier boys entertain an evening's solid enjoyment.

The meeting after parade yesterday and selected the following officers and committees:

Chairman, Sergt. J. H. Watson.
Secretary, Sergt. Sam Gallagher.
Treasurer, Pte. J. Vollans.
General Committee—Pte. Wood, Knowles, Kane, Smith, Theobald, Dix, McKeller and Mr. Hope.
Entertainment Committee—Pte. Freeman, Smith, Wicker, Lessard, McBride, Foster, King and Mr. Hope.

The organization of the band for the Peterborough Battalion will be undertaken at once. Already applications have been received and a number of musicians will be enlisted and sent to Barriefield in the next week or two. The Peterborough Battalion should have its own band for the route marches. The new band will be used for all the recruiting meetings in the district.

The members of the new battalion are not yet definitely announced. It was understood that the Peterborough Battalion would be the 80th but Col. Hemming announces that [illegible] the 59th and drew on [illegible] Peterborough Battalion [illegible] other names [illegible] not yet settled upon.

H. Rogers Possesses a Long Police Record—Indulged in a Few Whiskies

H. Rogers pleaded not guilty to a charge of vagrancy. His police record which dates from 1907 and includes a number of convictions relating from indecency to vagrancy was read out to him. He admitted the entire list which also includes a number of convictions for drunkenness. He accused Recorder Weir of Magistrate for charging him three dollars in the form of a fine for three drunks. "He charged me a dollar for each drunk," accused Rogers. The accused claimed to have worked yesterday. He received one dollar for his labours and spent a portion of it in new "whiskies." He could not recall on the side of his book, and he was disposed to credit the police.

NOT SO BAD.

It is stated that British war orders already placed in Canada amount to more than 230 million dollars, according to Mr. D. A. Thomas, the British munitions overseer now in Canada. Add to this a 500-million-dollar grain crop of all kinds, and in spite of our big spendings, Canada's finances should not be in a bad condition. This war will make a big hole in our national bank account, but with economy, with abstinence from all but necessities on the part of both people and governments; with little or no waste in luxuries; with honest and humble living, we shall tide over the situation without any disastrous results. With nearly a quarter billion dollars of British gold coming into Canada for munitions, and nearly as much foreign gold in return for our crops, we can take courage over the outlook, dark as it seems at times.

JAIL THE RASCALS.

Recruiting is said to be slow in the Maritime Provinces. What could one expect? That Nova Scotia should do more than its share? Hasn't that province nobly responded in the way of sacrifice. Its sturdy farmers have sacrificed their conscience to accepting fancy prices for army horses — the price of first-class horses for spavined, ring-boned steeds, for horses in the old bachelor age class? There would be little trouble to get recruits galore if medical examiners would "pass" recruits as readily as the Government veterinary surgeons passed bone-yard horses in Nova Scotia. We could soon raise a battalion in Peterborough. Sir Robert Borden has done well to turn the Davidson searchlight upon the disgraceful horse deals of Nova Scotia. He would do better, however, to put the machinery of justice in motion and turn some of the culprits into jail. We jail a woman for stealing a loaf of bread, to still the hunger cries of her starving children. These men are guilty of far greater crime in degree. They are worse than criminals; they are traitors. We have need for every penny of our national funds to be devoted to the necessities of this war time. The money dishonestly spent in purchasing horses—the part of it wasted on spavined scrubs—would supply a ship load of hospital supplies. Stealing in the abstract is bad enough; but it is only a peccadillo compared with the stealing that tears the bandages off our soldiers' wounds. Sir Robert Borden does well to order exposure of such crimes as the horse-looting in Nova Scotia; he will do better by jailing the rascals; and he will do better still, if he takes a lesson from the circumstances, and abolishes the patronage list, whose principle is responsible, not only for the actual crimes committed, but also for the hope of easily satisfied greed it creates, and the warped consciences that can permit men to rob the country in its hour of greatest trial and stress. We have no parties in the national cooperation in waging war to save the country; we should have no parties in the matter of ungodly gain at the public expense. When all are making holy sacrifices, a few favoured ones should not be permitted to make unholy gain.

FLOWERS AND THE RED CROSS.

When we do some heart thinking over Red Cross work and what it means, we can appreciate the fitness of converting flowers into agencies in the work. Without becoming maudlin we can point out that Red Cross work is chiefly done by women—the flowers of humanity, and, in our gallantry, closely associated in their attributes and charm with the flowers of the field.

Flowers, apart from their intrinsic loveliness and beauty, are valuable as being the forerunners and graceful promise of grateful fruit. The women associated with the Red Cross work—and in one way or other nearly all are in it—are ornaments to their sex and to society; but they are not ornaments only; they are like the flowers, the promise of fruit—the promise, and more than that, the fulfilment of noble work for our stricken — wounded and sick—soldiers.

The claims of the local branch of the Red Cross, are well established, both by the need of their work and by the work they have done to meet the need.

Give them a helping hand.

Second the noble spirit and generosity of the Peterborough Floral Company, which has donated 5,000 cut flowers, to be sold to-morrow for the benefit of the Red Cross funds.

When you come out in the morning come prepared to buy some flowers, to help swell the funds of the Red Cross Society.

You will not only be giving substantial help, but you will give encouragement. You will not only be getting value for your purchase, but the fragrance of the flower will be as a balm to your conscience and make you a better man, and unite you closer to the noble lads that in the way of duty have met wounds, and are in hospital beds, in weariness and pain.

You will feel better, if while you buy flowers, you can in spirit, lay them by the cot or place them in the hands of some wounded and suffering soldier — perchance, a chum or comrade in the days of home and peace — or place them as on the grave of one of the Canadians "nobly slain."

If you could, by some benign magic, be transported in person to the cotside of one of our soldier boys, and be able to place in his hands the flowers you will buy to-morrow, you would not think them dear if you paid ten times the price you are asked to pay to-morrow.

You are doing virtually that if you buy flowers to-morrow. You are helping bring the sweet flowers of comfort, and help, and healing, and cheer, to the lonely cot of some sufferer, whose eyes will shine brighter, or grow dim with tears of tenderness over the thought of being remembered, at home.

What would you not give for a flower if you could find the nameless grave of some Canadian lad and place it there?

Think on these things. Reflect that the trifle you pay for the flower you buy, binds up some hurt and helps to heal and comfort some sore-wounded soldier, whose last memory of a flower may have been a bloom on the battlefield, stained with his own blood.

Think, above all, that you will be helping the chum or friend, suffering from wounds in the fight for you, while you are safe and sound at home.

Thousands are calling across the sea for the help you can help give by buying a flower to-morrow.

In connection with the suggestion made in the press yesterday the churches, should buy Red Cross flowers to adorn the places of worship. Their sight would be a call to deeper worship; be the hint of prayers for our sick and wounded, that should rise as the perfume of the "bright consummate flower" of altruistic devotion.

Remember the place where 5,000 flowers and more if more are contributed, will be offered for sale, is 338 George street, the store of Mr. Roland Denne, President of The Peterborough Floral Company.

Earl Grey Says and Shows That Belgium Did Not Traffic in Her Neutrality

In a letter to the people, through the press, Sir Edward deals at length with the charge that Belgium had trafficked her neutrality with Great Britain and the allies.

Neutrality Not Trafficked.

"One Belgian record, a conversation with the British military attache, was published by Germany last autumn to prove that Belgium had trafficked her neutrality with us, and was, in effect, in a plot with us against Germany," said Sir Edward. "The conversation, of which the most use has been made, never was reported to the Foreign Office, nor, as far as the records show, to the war office at the time, and we saw a record of it the first time when Germany published the Belgian record."

"But it bears on the face of it that it referred only to the contingency of Belgium being attacked, that the entry of the British into Belgium would take place only after violation of Belgian territory by Germany, and that it did not commit the British government. No convention of agreement existed between the British and Belgian governments.

Nothing More Despicable.

"The violation of Belgian neutrality was deliberate, although Germany had actually guaranteed that neutrality; and surely there has been nothing more despicably mean to attempt to justify it ex post facto by bringing against the innocent, inoffensive Belgian government and people the totally false charge of having plotted against Germany.

Germany's Flimsy Pretext.

"The war would have been averted if the conference had been agreed to. Germany, on the flimsiest pretext, shut the door against it. I would wreck nothing on the point of form, and expressed myself ready to acquiesce in any method of mediation that Germany could suggest if mine were not acceptable. I said I was ready to cooperate in any method Germany thought possible if only Germany would press the button in the interests of peace.

"Some day, perhaps, the world will know what really passed between Germany and Austria respecting the ultimatum to Serbia and its consequences. It has become only too apparent that in the proposal for the conference, which we made and which Russia, Italy and France agreed to and which Germany vetoed, lay the only hope of peace. And it was such a good hope.

Germany Refused to Confer.

"The refusal of the conference by Germany, though it did not decide British participation in the war, did in fact decide the question of peace or war for Europe, and signed the death warrant of the many hundreds of thousands who have been killed in this war.

Control of All Nations.

"And what is the German programme as we gather it from the speech of the chancellor and the public utterances in Germany to-day? Germany to control the destiny of other nations, to be the 'shield of peace and freedom of [illegible] and small nations.' Those are the chancellor's words—an iron peace and a freedom under the Prussian shield, under German supremacy, Germany supreme.

"Germany alone would be free—free to break international treaties, free to crush when it pleased her, free to refuse all mediation, free to go to war when it suited her, free when she did not go to war to break again all rules of civilization and humanity on land and sea; and while she may act thus all her commerce at sea is to remain as free in time of peace.

Freedom of the Sea.

"Freedom of the sea may be a very reasonable subject for discussion, definition and agreement between the nations after this war, but not by itself alone; not while there is no freedom and no security against war and German methods of warfare on land. If there are to be guarantees against future war, let them be equal, comprehensive and effective guarantees that bind Germany as well as other nations, including ourselves.

Germany to be Supreme.

"Germany is to be supreme. The freedom of other nations is to be that which Germany metes out to them. Such is apparently the conclusion to be drawn from the German Chancellor's speech. And to this the German Minister of Finance adds that the heavy burden of thousands of millions must be borne through decades not by Germany, but by those whom she pleased to call the instigators of the war. In other words for decades to come Germany claims that all the nations who resisted her should labour to pay her tribute in the form of indemnity.

Fighting for Tribute.

"Not on such terms can peace be concluded of the life of other nations than Germany be free or even tolerable. The speeches of the German Chancellor and Finance Minister make it appear that Germany is fighting for supremacy and tribute. If that is so, and so long as it is so, our allies and we are fighting and must fight for the right to live, not under German supremacy, but in real freedom and safety."

A NEW FORCE IN THE LEGISLATURE.

Samuel Carter, M.P.P. for South Wellington, a new member, has already established himself as one of the strongest and at the same time one of the most picturesque men in the House. The dramatic material in his life and his career are recognized in an article by Don Hunt in the current number of the Canada Monthly in which Mr. Carter is described as "Ontario's scrappiest member of Parliament" and "The man who wouldn't be run over."

The story of Carter's radicalism, inherited from a line of radical ancestors makes an absorbing tale, Mr. Hunt says.

"There are two main reasons why Mr. Carter is a citizen of Ontario today and not still living in the knitting districts of Nottingham. For one thing, he neither wanted to be run over himself nor to see other people like him run over. In the second place, he was a passionate temperance man. From these causes he came to America thirty-five years ago. For these causes he is still fighting today and the two ambitions merge with him into one compelling motive and driving force.

"In the Legislature today Carter stands first of all for the abolition of the bar and for the prohibition of the sale of all intoxicating liquors. At the same time, true to his traditions, he is fighting for those men who for various reasons are in danger of being run down in the race of life. His democracy and his radicalism are essentially of the highest and practical type.

On the Witness Stand.

A little flaw in his statements ruins the evidence of the witness. It may be a slight exaggeration, but the opposing lawyer seizes it and uses it to impress upon the jury that this witness is not reliable.

The Advertiser to-day is on the witness stand. If he makes mis-statements he is judged accordingly and his entire advertising is distrusted.

Wide-awake business men realize this. They tell the truth in their advertisements; not because they are better than they used to be; but because they have learned that it pays.

"No Peace Until Heroic Belgium Is Freed and Not Until We Have Retaken Alsace and Lorraine"

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, Aug. 27.—The Minister of Finance, Alexandre Ribot, introduced in the Chamber of Deputies yesterday a bill providing for a comprehensive reform in the liquor trade. The measure contemplates suppression of privileges enjoyed by private individuals, who are now permitted to distill brandy from their own fruits, and for an increase in the tax on alcohol from 12 francs ($2.40) to 25 francs a gallon. To this is added a tax on consumption of 5 francs a gallon on appetizers and liquors.

Memoranda attached to the bill contain an estimate that if consumption of the articles affected should decrease by one-half the Government would nevertheless receive increased revenue to the amount of 10,000,000 francs.

It is also proposed that the State create a monopoly in the manufacture of industrial alcohol and endeavour to find an additional outlet for the product among consumers of fuel, such as owners of automobiles.

France Equal to Task.

Premier Viviani arose to address the House immediately after the session was called to order. All the members of the Cabinet were on the ministerial benches. The galleries were filled with persons prominent in Paris, among them many women. Nearly all the members of the diplomatic corps were in their boxes.

"I am not going to speak of the sanitary service alone," said the Premier, "but also of Parliamentary incidents that cannot be ignored."

In the higher interest of the country, by which we are judged, we must justify the union of Government and Parliament.

"The home services of the War Department have accomplished their task. In other quarters errors have been made, but Parliament has entire co-operation without seeking at the time to fix responsibility at mistakes. The errors have been repaired. Let us banish pessimism and depressing anxiety.

"France, by the grace of all her children's efforts, her public servants prompted by necessary criticism, is equal to the task of nobility for destiny.

Must Free Belgium First.

"Put the question of peace before the country and it would be blown to nothing," the Premier continued. "Not until heroic Belgium has been freed, not until we have retaken Alsace and Lorraine could there be mischievous division among us. Our enemies may continue astray in their dull error of last year, but not we, who have seen workmen and employer, the rich citizen and the poor, men of every party and every walk in life fulfilling with a single purpose and with equal zeal their duties in defence of the liberty of the world.

"With this certain knowledge we come before Parliament, which has given the country an admirable spectacle, rising to the demands of the future; which has devoted admiration for the army, from the commander in chief to the private, for all those combatants who, silently absorbed in their heroic labour, ask nothing better than to be left outside the sphere of politics.

"We must destroy the legend that the republic of France, having borne for 45 years a horrible wound, did not make provision for military defence. I must repeat the words of the commander-in-chief during the last session of the chamber. 'The republic may be proud of her armies.'

"France has created an army fulfilling the most modern conceptions. She has instilled the love of justice, the love of right, and upon the day the war began the children of France united in support of this high ideal, without which there would have been only armies of mercenaries."

Deputies Cheer Premier.

At this the deputies sprang to their feet and cheered the Premier wildly. When the demonstration had died down the Premier continued:

"Yes, the German press has said that France was divided. Yes, there are divergencies of opinion. These are the essences of free Government. But it would be a fatal division if there was in this country a fraction of the people who even thought of a premature peace."

ONWARD TO BERLIN

Neutrals are in trouble,
And don't want to fight;
But German policy
Says that might is right;
Killing non-combatants
Is an awful sin;
Neutrals join the Allies—
Onward to Berlin.

Chorus—

Neutrals join the Allies,
They are sure to win,
Quit you like men; be strong;
Onward to Berlin.

Neutrals are in trouble,
And don't want to fight;
Belgium over run,
Was of the same plight;
The Lusitania,
A sad massacre;
Arabic passengers,
They sank under sea.

Chorus—

Neutrals join the Allies,
They are sure to win;
Quit you like men; be strong;
Onward to Berlin.

If the Allies should lose,
And Germany win,
Then the United States
Would have to begin,
And fight the Huns alone,
And shoulder his gun,
And fight for liberty,
Or become a Hun.

Chorus—

Neutrals join the Allies,
They are sure to win;
Quit you like men; be strong;
Onward to Berlin.

The outcome of the war
Will surely be good;
All who join the Allies
Will be like one blood
All fighting for freedom,
And war ever cease,
And remain one Empire,
For eternal peace.

Chorus—

Neutrals join the Allies,
They are sure to win;
Quit you like men; be strong;
Onward to Berlin.

Soap Is Bad For The Hair

Soap should be used very sparingly if at all if you want to keep your hair looking its best. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle and ruins it.

The best thing for steady use is just ordinary mulsified cocoanut oil, (which is pure and greaseless), and is better than soap or anything else you can use.

One or two teaspoonfuls will cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, which rinses out easily, removing every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves the scalp soft and the hair fine and silky, bright, lustrous, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at any pharmacy, it's very cheap, and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months.

A Marriage That Failed.

Mandy—What foh yo' been goin' to de postoffice so reg'lar? Are you corresspondin' wif some other female? Rastus—Nope, but since Ah been a-readin in de papers 'bout dese "conscience funds" Ah kind of thought Ah might possibly git a letter from dat minis tah what married us.—Topeka Journal.

A Hustler.

First Boomer—You fellows have no situp about you at all. Why don't you have photographs of your town taken, like we did? Are you ashamed of it? Rival Boomer—Naw; that ain't the reason at all. I want you to understand, young fellah, that our town don't stand still long enough to be photographed.—Terre Haute Express.

Instinct and Reason.

The term "instinct" is supposed to refer to the intelligence which leads to the performance of actions that are adaptive in character, but pursued without necessary knowledge of the relation between the means employed and the ends attained, while "reason" is supposed to be aware of such knowledge and to work accordingly.—New York American.

Cheese in Soup.

Cheese is almost always a nice addition to a soup. Besides being agreeable to the palate, it adds nutriment to the soup if it is not rich in itself, like the tomato and the vegetable soup. Any good yellow cheese can be utilized in this way, even ordinary American cheese. In foreign households clear consomme and other soups are often accompanied by grated Parmesan cheese.

Such Cases Are Known.

"I can say this much for Cupid," remarked the sentimental man. "He doesn't use dumdum bullets."

"Perhaps not," replied the confirmed cynic, "but a dumdum bullet brings a speedy death, while a person who is struck by one of Cupid's darts is apt to linger on for years."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Curious Lightning Display.

A brilliant and startling spectacle was witnessed a short time ago in a Tyrolean valley near Tannenheim. A violent storm arose suddenly and several globes of lightning rolled over the surface of the lake. Then a column of water arose thirty feet high from the middle of the lake and from its top small flashes darted. The spectacle lasted about three minutes.

Convicts Work In Salt Mines.

The principal salt mines of Roumania are worked by convicts, and produce a fine, bluish grey rock-salt.

Giants Nearly Twenty Feet Tall.

The giant Ferragus, who was slain by Orlando, the nephew of Charlemagne, was, it is alleged, eighteen feet high. He always accompanied the army on foot, there being no horse tall and strong enough to carry him. Platerus in his published writings tells of a giant whom he examined at Lucerne whose body measured nineteen feet four inches and three lines.

NO REWARD FOR COMPOSER

Song Replaces Tipperary, But Copyright Has Expired

Leslie Stuart, the famous English composer, tells a remarkable story about a new song which is taking the place of "Tipperary" in the trenches. The title of it is, "Is That You, O'Reilly?" and it was written by Mr Stuart over thirty years ago. Mr. Stuart had practically forgotten it until a cheap copy was sent to him from the United States. This did not bear his name, but he recognized it as his own competition, and was amazed to learn from American publishers that 30,000 copies a day were being sold. Unfortunately, Mr. Stuart's copyright had run out, so that he is not getting a halfpenny from a song which is lining the pockets of others.

The Belgian army has adopted khaki. Their tunics differ from ours in having stand-up collars. The khaki is of a greenish shade.

WONDERFUL FOR THE BLOOD

Cures Sallow Skin, Headache, Languor and Tiredness.

You don't need to be told how you feel—blue, sort of sickish, poor appetite, vague pains, tired in the morning. This condition is common at this season.

Fortunately there is prompt relief in Dr Hamilton's Pills which immediately relieve the system of all poisons and disease-producing matter.

Thousands have been so utterly depressed, so worn out as to be despondent, but Dr. Hamilton's Pills always cured them. "I can speak feelingly on the power of Dr. Hamilton's Pills," writes C. T. Fearman, of Kingston. "Last spring my blood was thin and weak, I was terribly run down, had awful headaches and a gnawing, empty feeling about my stomach. I couldn't sleep or work until I used Dr. Hamilton's Pills,—they did me a world of good." At all dealers in 25c. boxes.

JEALOUS BROTHER ATTEMPTS TO SHOOT

John Patterson, of Cobourg, Committed for Trial

Examiner Special:

COBOURG, Aug. 27.—Here is John Patterson, of the Stewart Settlement, appeared before P. M. Davidson, C. charged with attempting to shoot his brother, Samuel Patterson. Both are old bachelors and live in the same house, but in different apartments, and are not on speaking terms. Last Friday the brothers went to Cobourg and was drinking. The latter, returning, he got a shotgun and pointed at his brother told him to get down on his knees and say his prayers, and then snapped off the gun several times.

Jealousy seems to be at the bottom of the trouble, some time ago Thos. John was paying attention to a widow in that vicinity, but recently she appears to have soured on him and transferred her affections to Samuel.

Police Magistrate Davidson committed him for trial.

CONFESSES TO 50 BURGLARIES

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, Aug. 27.—Attributing his downfall to the woman he loved, and whose expensive tastes compelled him to resort to burglary in order to satisfy them and retain her affection, Andrew De Barry, twenty-two years old, of No. 254 West Forty-Second Street, was arrested for the fiftieth burglary committed in flats on Lexington Avenue and Third, Fourth Street.

"The girl I love a woman will bring a heavy sentence," De Barry, when locked up in a cell in the East Thirty-Fifth Street Police Station. "I loved her well, and my salary as clerk wouldn't buy her the things she wanted. So I began to commit burglaries on May 3 and have been at work in that line ever since."

De Barry furnished Detectives Burgess and O'Connell, of the Second Branch, with a list of more than forty places which he says he has robbed since May 3. One of these is the residence of Frank L. Polk, at No. 7 East Thirty-Sixth Street, Corporation Counsel, where, he says, he stole $400 several weeks ago. The list includes many apartment houses on Madison and Park Avenues, from Seventieth to Ninetieth Street, and in Columbus Avenue between Seventy-Second and Ninetieth Streets.

Had Pawned the Jewellery.

That the prisoner spoke the truth regarding his thieving operations, the police say, is attested by the fact that more than a score of pawntickets were found in his possession. De Barry said he took only jewellery and cash at the places he looted, and he ignored bulky articles. It is estimated that within the last four months his burglaries netted him nearly $40,000, all of which, he says, was spent in the white light district with the woman he loved, and whose name the police have not revealed.

About six o'clock the other evening, while Mr. and Mrs. James Weber were at supper in the dining room of their apartments on the top story of the building at No. 252 Lexington Avenue, Mr. Weber heard a sound in the front room. Going to investigate, he saw a man crawling out of a window. Retreating and unseen, he started on a run for the police, and left the burglar at work. De Barry dashed through the door and ran down the stairway followed by the Webers.

De Barry reached the street with the Webers close behind him, and ran toward Thirty-Fourth Street. The shouts as well as the shouts of Mr. and Mrs. Weber, attracted a large crowd, including Detective Burgess and O'Connell, both of whom recognized De Barry, and finally captured him. The young man offered no resistance, and after a formal charge of burglary had been made against him by Mr. Weber he was locked up.

Summary of War Situation
The Failure of Von Kluck Was the Real Turning Point

Blunders of Last September at Battle of Marne Have Never Been Overcome by German Strategy—Foremost Military Critic in Europe Deals With the Situation on the Western Front—Allies Were Outnumbered Two to One at the Outset—Days of Anxiety.

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, Aug 27.—Writing in the American, Hilaire Belloc, foremost military critic in Europe, makes a general summary of the war situation, embracing the first year's result on the western front. He declares nothing since the first three weeks of German invasion of France has ever balanced the failure of Von Kluck to outflank the Allies in September at the battle of the Marne. This, he says, was the turning point of the whole war.

Discussing the potential military resources of the nations at war in the early days, he points out the great advantages held then by the Germans in men and organization. He says that it was the number of soldiers, guns, and munitions actually present against France in the first shock of the campaign—somewhere in the first four months that ought by all reasonable calculation, to determine the result.

Victory Reasonably Certain.

In this concrete piece of calculation, concerned as potential power is not with real issues, the Austro Germans could prove an advantage so overwhelming that, with all the facts before him, an impartial observer would not have hesitated to prophesy as certain that complete and swift victory of the Germanic body and its dependents over the Allies which the government of Berlin took for granted, and which its commanders had a full and reasonable right to expect.

Resuming the review of early actions, M. Belloc says:

The German invader, with admirable organization and in a few days, brought up against the Belgian frontier of France, never properly fortified because protected by treaty, not nine or ten feet, but no less than seventeen army corps. He, therefore, outnumbered the seven and three-quarter corps of his opponents on this front by roughly two to one.

Days of Anxiety.

And, upon the top of this, Namur wholly failed to resist. By the morning of Saturday, 23rd August, the junction of the Sambre and the Meuse and the bridges across these rivers, all of which are contained within the circle of the Namur forts, were in the hands of the Germans, the two branches of the French force on the Middle Meuse, the Sambre, were in full retreat and suffering the pressure of forces about double their own.

Two moments of peculiar anxiety to the higher command were present during this retreat.

The first was that when the forts of Maubeuge, offering itself as a refuge upon the British right, might have tempted the British Field-Marshal to take advantage of its works and to have shut his army up within them. It was the intention of the Germans to compel this conclusion, and they undoubtedly believed that the threat to the exposed flank of the British force would lead to that conclusion. It was avoided.

Maubeuge was left to its fate, and, as the event proved, most wisely, for it was destined to fall after a resistance of less than a fortnight, and with it would have disappeared, had they fallen behind the protection of its permanent works, all the British forces in the field.

War's Turning Point.

As it was, these forces maintained their retreat against the heaviest pressure, fighting in particular, at Le Cateau, a determined rearguard action which at once checked the pursuit and frustrated the German attempt at envelopment. This particularly brilliant piece of tough, general fighting, decisive and certainly in that proportion of superiority in guns, was decisive in the sense that it saved the British army.

The decisive action could no longer take the form of envelopment round the west. The Germans would make attempt to pierce the line at one or more points between Verdun and Paris. The line so pierced, its left or western portion would be isolated and could be dealt with at leisure and in detail.

Straining for Paris.

The German effort, therefore, from the end of August, September 2 to 4, which marks the end of their great drive, had for its task the breaking of the Allied line between Verdun and Paris.

[illegible] which [illegible] the [illegible] corresponding to [illegible] served by the French and [illegible] movement [illegible] upon the Germans has turned probably [illegible] of the whole war. [illegible] and [illegible] close as [illegible]. It [illegible] knew [illegible] Von Kluck [illegible] the Marne.

[illegible] discovered that this extreme right, known to the German First Army under the command of Von Kluck was turning at right angles to its former direction [illegible] no longer facing south, but toward Paris, but south east, and as for the greater part on the march and in column.

Its object was combined with the Second German Army upon its immediate left, to bring at a point about [illegible] of forty miles from the Paris end of the line an overwhelming weight of men that should there break the line.

Most Dangerous Attempt.

This movement upon the part of Von Kluck and the western most army of the German line obviously involved what is called "a march across the enemy's front."

This is always a very dangerous manoeuvre, because while one's men are on the march they are not ready for fighting, and if one's enemy spreads out parallel to one's march, himself ready for fighting, and attacks one's marching columns before they have time to deploy, those marching columns would be destroyed.

A vast amount of discussion has turned upon Von Kluck's motives or excuses for this exceedingly rash action. Whatever they were, he thought the risk could be run, and suffered the consequences of his miscalculation. The French Commander-in-Chief attacked Von Kluck as the latter was passing by in column during the course of 6th September, and the German plan fell to pieces.

Von Kluck's Retreat.

Von Kluck was, of course, forced to precipitate a retreat, which he conducted with admirable skill and with comparatively small loss, but which entailed the corresponding retreat of every German army in succession eastward, right away to the Argonne and the pivot point of Verdun.

The German resistance was sufficiently prolonged to enable the First German Army to retire to the line of the Vesle.

Along the course of that river and on across the Plain of Champagne, through the middle of the Argonne, and so to the neighborhood of Verdun, the German line stretched when, by the 13th of September, it stood to check the pursuit. The Germans had created defensive positions along the line. They were chosen, and already sufficient to afford opportunity for defence.

From that defensive line the Germans were not dislodged throughout the whole of the remaining period to the moment of writing these lines.

"Capital Periods of War."

With this date, the middle of September, we conclude the first chapter of the great war, which history will also probably or certainly regard as the capital period in the whole story.

The succeeding period up to the moment of writing is nearly twelve times as long in mere time. It has cost incalculably more in human lives and in economic values.

Yet it remains true to say that all that has passed between 11th September, 1914, and 1st August, 1915, is no more than equal in historic value to the military meaning to the three weeks which saw the failure of the German invasion in the west.

CLOSING EXERCISES OF CITY'S FIRST SUPERVISED PLAYGROUND

Held at the Central School Grounds Yesterday Afternoon Congratulatory Speeches by Prominent Citizens—Parents in Attendance.

Peterborough's first experiment with supervised playgrounds has proved eminently successful. The ladies of the Woman's Council who, in the face of many difficulties, inaugurated the first playground under supervision, have every reason to feel proud of their initial endeavors and the success attending their efforts in this regard, this summer should be an incentive to do even greater things in the future. The closing exercises of the supervised playgrounds was held on the grounds of the Central school yesterday afternoon. Children were brought to the grounds in automobiles and many of the parents were present, watching their children at play under the careful leadership of a supervisor. The boys, with Mr Burridge in charge, played a good game of baseball, while the girls, led by Miss Johnston, enjoyed a number of games and drills. The little tots were kept busy playing in the sand, while others were taking full advantage of the many swings on the ground. Comments of surprise and admiration were expressed on all sides when it was seen what really had been accomplished during July and August. Those present seemed satisfied that a scheme of supervised playgrounds would be a great thing for the boys and girls of Peterborough, and every encouragement should be given the project another year. The children who have attended have had a happy time this summer and will return to their studies next week with strengthened bodies and freshened minds.

At yesterday's proceedings, a number of speeches were made by prominent men, including His Worship the Mayor, Mr G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., Rev Canon Davidson and Col. Miller of the Board of Education. The chair was taken by the Inspector of Public Schools, who in his remarks said, a good start had been made this summer towards making supervised playgrounds a permanent institution in Peterborough. This city had splendid school buildings with spacious grounds. He would like to see them all utilized in the way the Central schools had been used during the past two weeks.

Col. Miller, on being called upon to speak, said that he was sure all appreciated the work done by the ladies of the Woman's Council and that next year they would find the Board of Education even more willing to assist them. He would like to see the grounds beautified by the planting of some trees. He hoped the boys and girls would use the playgrounds at every opportunity. The grounds belonged to them, and he believed both the School Board and the Council should do everything possible to provide suitable places for the children to play. Play such as he had witnessed there developed the boys along clean, manly lines. That was the kind of young men that had been sent forth from Peterborough to fight for the Empire and the boys playing here now must so train themselves as to be able to take their places in the years to come. He would like to see properly supervised bathing places where they could learn to swim.

Mayor Butler, who next spoke, congratulated the ladies on the splendid start they had made. Such a playground was for the betterment of the physical and moral well being of every boy and girl. He would like to see the city provide proper bathing places, where every child should learn to swim. Every boy and girl should be taught the art of swimming and he hoped suitable bathing places would be an accomplished fact in the near future.

Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., said that after his visit to the grounds and witnessing what was going on, he was thoroughly converted to the idea of supervised playgrounds. The Woman's Council deserve great credit for making supervised play an accomplished fact in this city. Play was just as essential in a boys life as was work. "Work while you work and play while you play" was a good motto to follow. The children at this play ground seemed to enjoy themselves to the fullest. Their leaders, Mr. Burridge and Miss Johnston had done excellent work. He urged the boys and girls to strive for the highest whether at work or at play, and thus they would meet with success.

Rev. Canon Davidson in speaking to the boys and girls remarked that the thing that struck him most was the happy look on their faces. 'You were happy the day the play grounds were started, and we want you to be happy. Everyone is grateful to the supervisors who have entered enthusiastically into their work. Their efforts are appreciated." Canon Davidson also spoke in appreciation of the hard work of the Woman's Council. The supervised play grounds represented well spent money and well spent effort. He would like to see the School Board do something towards beautifying the grounds. A possible way would be to have the children themselves plant flower beds.

Miss Davidson, who has been a supervisor of play grounds in Montreal for the past three years, was present yesterday. She spoke in admiration of Peterborough's first supervised playground. She referred most favourably of the local equipment and also of the good work that had been done during the past two months.

Mrs Neal, president of the Woman's Council and the supervisors, Mr Burridge and Miss Johnston, also spoke briefly. Hearty cheers were given for Mr. Burridge and Miss Johnston by the boys and girls, after which the proceedings closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

BUSINESS IS ON INCREASE

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, Aug. 27—"Trade generally all over the Dominion is exceptionally good, considering the conditions, said Mr. C. A. B. Brown, manager of Bradstreets, Limited. "In Toronto the conditions are not nearly so good as could be expected, but taking the Dominion as a whole there is a decided improvement. All the whole sale and retail business in the city report that trade is slow, even for the month of August, which is always looked upon as the slowest month of the year, but, despite that, the general feeling all around this city is that fundamental conditions are turning decidedly for the better. The market value of dry goods certainly remains firm, while the grocery trade has been remarkably active.

War Contracts.

"The firms dealing with war contracts are all reported to be working overtime, except in the leather goods business, where there has been a little slacking off, due to the lack of further orders from the Government for this class of goods, but there is a prospect of a better time ahead for these people all this fall, as the war orders will shortly be increased.

"In the cheese business there has been a certain decline, due to the act that the make in Ontario has been exceptionally large. In the packing business there is a brisk business, finised cattle continuing to go through Toronto from Ontario in large quantities, principally to France, and this is certainly strengthening the local market values. Pork packers also are exporting hog products in large quantities. This export is principally to Europe, and the business looks good for some time to come."

Fall Trade Outlook.

"Things are just a little brighter than they have been for some time," was the way the manager of one of the big wholesale dry goods firms spoke this morning. "There seems to be an increase for fall trade, and I would not be the least surprised if the business exceeds that of last year. While there was a big slump last year, the people are beginning to realize that this sort of thing cannot go on for ever, and it is a good sign of the times when the retailer is sending in now his order for his fall supply. He must see something ahead of him, or he would not order as some of them are doing, and we are looking forward to a good fall trade."

Montreal Rosy.

In Montreal the trade conditions look better than they have looked for some time. In the wholesale dry goods business there is a better volume of business than was expected, and good Government orders for shoes has made this industry exceedingly active. In the hardware business, trade is decidedly more active, and the hide and leather men are more hopeful of a better trade in the fall than they at first thought. There is also a good sign in the payment of overdue bills in Montreal. There is a better circulation of money, and altogether prospects in the eastern city are even brighter than was expected for the fall.

Mexicans Loot City of El Paso

Special to The Examiner:

EL PASO, Texas, Aug. 27—This city is practically under martial law today after a night of anxety, due to fears of a Mexican uprising. American soldiers are stationed in various sections of the city, particularly in the Mexican quarter, and also are on guard at the International Bridge.

Many Mexicans were arested last night and early today after reports, apparently reliable, had reached the authorities that Huerta, Orozco and Carranza adherents were planning to capture El Paso and loot the city.

Gen Pershing, commander of the Eighth Brigade, ordered out two regiments of infantry. Deputy Sheriffs and Deputy U. S. Marshals were also sent to the sections of the city where trouble was feared.

Heavy guards were placed about Gen Huerta's quarters at Fort Bliss and ever Mexican found in that vicinity was arrested and held for investigation.

Ald. Langford in Police Court

Was Charged With a Breach of the Automobile Act—Case Was Dismissed

The law is no respecter of persons. This morning Alderman Wm. Langford appeared in Police Court on a charge of ignoring the signal of P. C. Smythe, while the latter was on traffic duty, at the corner of George and Charlotte Streets. The case was dismissed owing to lack of conclusive evidence and the fact that Ald. Langford was able to state that he was not in the city on the day the offence was committed. The case was featured by a number of warm passages between P. C. Smythe and Mr. G. W. Hatton, who appeared for the defence. The latter objected to the use, in Smythe's evidence of the term "congestion," and sought to show that the witness was ignorant of the dictionary meaning of the word. It appears that the driver of car No. 2626, alleged to have been driven on the evening in question by Ald. Langford, was proceeding north on George Street when he was signalled to stop by the traffic officer, the right of way being ceded to a west-bound automobile on Charlotte Street.

Was Out of the City.

Mr. Hatton—"If neither of the cars got a signal from you which would have the right-of-way?"

"I suppose the north-bound car would," replied Smythe.

"There you are supposing again," said Mr. Hatton. "Just answer my questions if it is at all possible," pleaded the counsel for the defence. It required the combined efforts of Magistrate Dumble, Chief of Police Thompson, and Mr. Hatton to exact anything like a lucid account of the incident from P. C. Smythe. The latter persisted in arguing with the counsel for the defence and explaining his knowledge of court procedure.

Ald. Langford went into the box on his own behalf. He said that he did not drive the car on the day in question, and at the time the offence was recorded, was out of the city. He admitted that the car referred to was owned by his father. The constable failed to identify Ald. Langford as the driver of the car.

The traffic by-law came into considerable prominence this morning. One other man to run foul of it was Noe Laplante. He pleaded not guilty to a charge of driving a horse and vehicle on the wrong side of George Street. The animal was twenty-nine years of age. This fact came out when Mr. Laplante accused P. C. Smythe of abusing it by pulling it up with a jerk and also of calling him an "old farmer." Mr. Laplante said he was not ashamed of being called a farmer, but objected to the manner in which the Police Constable used the expression. Mr. Laplante was allowed to go with a warning.

TEUTON KILLED IN A FIGHT

Examiner Special:

GARY, Ind., Aug. 27—With the arrest of George Schneider, a member of the Gary Saxon Verein, in connection with the murder of the Rev. Edmund Kayser, whose body was found near his parsonage in Tolleston, a suburb, Tuesday night, the police announced they virtually had abandoned the theory that the German pastor may have been slain because of his pro-German utterances. Schneider's face was cut and bruised. He is said to have told a relative he was in a fight Tuesday night. The police declared his story unsatisfactory.

"Schneider answers the description of the man we have been looking for," Chief of Police Heintz said.

Schneider has been a member of the murdered minister's congregation at St John's Evangelical Church, Tolleston, but is declared to have been his enemy.

PREFERRED DEATH TO POVERTY

"I Will Kill Myself Because I Can't Be Rich," Says Girl's Note.

NEW YORK, Aug. 27.—Leaving a letter to her parents, in which she said she sought death because she never would be wealthy, Miss Helen Gross, eighteen years old, a waitress, employed in the family of Abraham Levin, of Arverne, L.I., was found dead in her bedroom with a tube from an open gas jet in her mouth.

The letter to her parents, Mr and Mrs. E. Gross, No. 619 East 182nd street, the Bronx, was as follows:

"Dear Father and Mother:—Excuse me. I can't help this, for the money came slowly. I will kill myself because I can't be rich."

No Break With United States As Result of Arabic Incident

Germany Will Make Apology—Commander of Submarine Instructed to Attack No More Merchantmen Without Warning

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27. Two important developments to-day in the relations between the United States and Germany further reduced the tensity of the situation and were taken to foreshadow a declaration from Berlin on the subject of submarine warfare which would eliminate that source of discord between the two countries.

Count von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, called upon Secretary Lansing and informed him that the statement presented Tuesday by direction of the Berlin Foreign Office saying there was no intent to cause loss of American lives when the White Star liner Arabic was destroyed was intended to imply that German submarine commanders had been ordered to attack no more merchantmen without warning.

The Official Repudiation.

Ambassador Gerard, reporting from Berlin the substance of a conference with Foreign Minister von Jagow, confirmed the Associated Press despatches of earlier in the day that Germany, even before the sinking of the Arabic, had adopted a policy designed to settle completely the whole submarine problem. The statement of von Jagow made clear the following principal facts:

1. That the sinking of the Arabic if caused by a German submarine, was not a "deliberately unfriendly" act, but if the version of the incident as published proves to be true the arbitrary act of a submarine commander, and an act not only not sanctioned, but decidedly condemned, by the German Government.

2. That Germany is anxious to meet the demands set forth in President Wilson's last and original Lusitania notes.

3. That since the sinking of the Lusitania the German Admiralty has done all in its power to prevent a recurrence of such a disaster and, in fact, has taken special steps to prevent danger to American passengers.

4. That the German Government is most desirous of maintaining peace and friendly relations with the American Government.

5. That if the Arabic was sent to the bottom by a German submarine under circumstances such as testified to by scores of passengers and published in the foreign press, Germany will express its deep regret over the incident and will be ready to make full reparation.

Washington Optimistic.

The optimism immediately reflected at the State Department and the White House was taken as convincing proof that the situation once threatening a break in the friendly relations between the two countries was on the way to a settlement.

The more hopeful officials thought the views which Ambassador von Bernstorff had been urging upon Berlin ever since the sinking of the Lusitania had prevailed with the support of the Liberals in Germany who have been opposing the anti-American policy of the Conservatives. Secretary Lansing, while outwardly encouraged, was reserved, awaiting some definite declaration from Berlin, and the same attitude was reflected at the White House, where it was understood that President Wilson, encouraged at the prospect of averting a break, still is keeping his mind open until all the details are cleared up.

One fact was outstanding in the whole situation. It was that a further communication is coming from Germany outlining a policy which it is said, is expected to be satisfactory to the United States. It is understood that Germany will announce a suspension of her submarine warfare on passenger carrying ships and that submarine commanders will be instructed not to sink any merchantmen without warning, pending a diplomatic discussion of a proposal for a modus vivendi by relaxation of the British blockade against neutral commerce.

RUBE MARQUARD BOUGHT BY THE TORONTO CLUB

TORONTO Aug. 25. Pitcher Rube" Marquard, who has had one of the most varied careers in baseball, is the property of the Toronto Baseball Club, his release being secured yesterday from the New York Giants. The new southpaw has been one of the outstanding figures in baseball. He was bought by New York from Indianapolis for the reputed sum of $11,000, a then record price. However, in 1909, his first year in the majors, Marquard only won five out of eighteen games, and he was headlined as a "lemon," but the next two years he was practically the mainstay of the Giants, and during the first half of the 1912 season tied Keefe's 1888 record by winning nineteen successive games. Last year he only won 12 and lost 23 games.

Despatches from New York last night stated that "Rube" refused to join the Toronto Club, and this is not surprising in view of the many Federal sleuths that are around New York. Rube would be a great drawing card for both the international and Federal leagues, and while it is to be hoped that President McCaffery induces him to join the Leafs, yet the odds are in favour of the Feds, owing to the latter being able to offer the eccentric twirler more money than the Leafs.

In addition to securing the release of Marquard the Toronto Club also sold Pitcher Fred Herbert to the Giants, but the latter will not report until the end of the International season. Herbert has been showing good form all season, but has been up against tough breaks. He was until Luque developed his great sport the most dependable pitcher on the Toronto team, and the local fans will all be pulling for him to make good in the major.

Will Receive $500 a Minute

When Mike Gibbons collected one silver dollar for his services in his first professional boxing bout, he thought it was easy money. With it came the decision to quit the machinist's trade and adopt boxing for a livelihood.

When he was guaranteed $15,000 for boxing Packie McFarland at the Ocean A. C., Brighton Beach, N. Y., on September 11, he realized the ambition awakened by that first dollar he received for boxing and when he packs that $15,000 into his grip he will probably get enough thrills to last him for the rest of his life. Certainly he will never deceive that much money for a 10-round, no decision contest again.

Already the statistic bugs have figured out that Mike will receive $1,500 a round, $500 for each minute of actual boxing. Contrast this with his first purse. For that four-round bout he was paid at the rate of 25 cents a round, or a fraction more than seven cents a minute.

Voice of The People

Editor Examiner

Sir, I would like to ask, through the medium of your valuable paper, the correct translation of the phrase "Hock the Kaiser." It has been suggested that it means "Bless the Kaiser." If so, would it not be well to "cut out" the many peanuts that are for sale in our midst. If possible, give the correct definition for the benefit of those who do not know.

"Information."

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir, I hear something about the city putting sidewalks on St. Thomas Street. I think if the city would pave the roadway and put a curb on either side it would have better results. The road is very narrow and it does not look as if two cars could pass if sidewalks are laid.

Yours truly,

"West End."

STRIKING FACTS IN GOVT. REPORT

Building of Grand Trunk Pacific Line Reveals Many Fertile Valleys in B.C.

"The 'Back to the Land' movement is taking place steadily but surely throughout the province of British Columbia and if this movement is directed along right lines we shall soon be supplying our own markets and eventually exporting."

Such is the declaration made by Mr. W. E. Scott, Deputy Minister of Agriculture in the British Columbia Government. This official, with Mr. W. T. McDonald, Live Stock Commissioner, has just returned from an extended tour through the central portion of the province for the purpose of examining and reporting upon the new country along the Grand Trunk Pacific's Transcontinental Line, now open for through passenger service.

In his report, the Deputy Minister says:

"There have been many opinions expressed about the lands in Central British Columbia contiguous to the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific. Our observations led us exclusively to the opinion that this part of the province is a country, the future of which is assured as a stock raising and mixed farming country.

"After leaving Prince Rupert, on the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, there is practically no land suitable for agricultural purposes until Terrace is reached, 100 miles from Prince Rupert. Here the Kitsumkalum and Lakelse Valleys extend on both sides of the Skeena River. There is probably an area of 250,000 acres of land in these two valleys suitable for agriculture. Considerable development has been effected lately in the Kitsumkalem Valley. The clearing here in comparison with our coast districts is comparatively light. The soil is very productive and is well suited for general mixed farming purposes. Dairying, poultry raising and small fruits, vegetable growing may be pursued successfully. The district is particularly well suited for growing strawberries and other small fruits, the quality of the berries being very high and realizing good prices on the Prince Rupert market."

The Bulkley Valley.

"Our next stop was at Smithers, in the centre of the famous Bulkley Valley. A very large amount of development work has been undertaken during the past year in this magnificent valley. The quality of the soil [illegible] ion of the land is all that could be desired, and very good crops [illegible] Timothy, Alsike and Red Clover [illegible] Crops of oats [illegible] Peas [illegible] to the acre were [illegible] and all prospects were [illegible] the Farmers are [illegible] that [illegible] time has arrived when [illegible] develop the [illegible] and [illegible] purposes [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

British Farmer Is Provided For

Government Guarantees the Price of Wheat Until 1920—No Labour Guarantee

Examiner Special:

LONDON, Aug. 27.—Something in the nature of conscription, though the term was not employed, was foreshadowed by the Earl of Selborne, President of the Board of Agriculture, in an address this afternoon to a deputation of agricultural land-owners which visited him in London.

"Many more men have got to join the army, whether voluntarily or compulsory," said the Earl. "The agricultural labourer has done his part nobly in this war, but the response has been very unequal over the country, and I forecast that during the next year men will be taken from districts and farms whence hitherto they have not gone.

"What I shall aim at and Earl Kitchener has been very sympathetic—is to leave the farmer his foreman, stockman, carters and shepherds, but the rest of the work will have to be done by women or men not hitherto engaged in agricultural work." Earl Selborne emphasized the fact that Russia's reverses had imposed a greater strain on her allies.

"We have a greater burden on our shoulders at the present moment than six months ago," he said. "The financial strain is going to be very great and the situation is going to demand from every class greater and greater sacrifices."

The speaker stated that the navy had the submarine menace well in hand.

In the light of the country's experiences with submarines, however the agricultural and economic policy of Great Britain, including the broad questions of food production, would have to be revised, he continued. The committee which he had appointed to deal with increasing the food supply had recommended that farmers should be guaranteed 45 shillings $11.25) per quarter for wheat, beginning with the harvest of 1916 and continuing until 1920.

In view of circumstance connected with the war, however, Lord Selborne added, the Government had decided that it would not incur the additional financial liability involved in the guarantee of arrangements, however made, to supply farmers with labour.

ONE CENT EGGS CAUSE RIOT.

Vendor Arrested After Grocer Reports That Some One Stole Two Cases.

NEW YORK, Aug. 27.—The sale of eggs "fresh from the farm" at one cent each when the market prices range from thirty to forty cents a dozen, all but caused a riot in which five hundred women joined, at First avenue and 112th street recently.

Detectives Unger and Marino, who were attracted by the crowd, questioned Pasquale Guarino, of No. 2169 First avenue, who was vending the eggs and they took him into custody. It later developed that Abraham Leibowitz, a grocer, at No. 2162 First avenue, had reported the theft of two cases of eggs, and after an investigation, a charge of larceny was made against Guarino. He was held for the Grand Jury in $2,000 bail in the Harlem Police Court.

BREST-LITOVSK EVACUATED BY THE RUSSIANS

Special Cable to The Examiner.

LONDON, Aug. 27.—Brest-Litovsk, the main Russian fortress and concentration centre on the Bug line of defences, was occupied by the Austro-Germans yesterday. While the Russians offered stout resistance to the invaders during the approach to the fortress it is apparent that they did not attempt to defend Brest-Litovsk itself, but evacuated it as they did Ossowetz, in conformity with their intention indicated in the despatches from Petrograd Wednesday, to take up new positions farther east.

The Berlin statement says:

"The Russian fortress of Brest-Litovsk has been captured by Prittone forces. Announcement to this effect was made yesterday by the German army headquarters staff. German and Austro-Hungarian troops stormed the works on the western and north-western front, and succeeded Wednesday night in entering the centre fortress. The Russians then gave up the fortress."

Only Two Remain.

The Germans now are in possession of the whole line of railway form Cholm to Bialystok. The Russians having already evacuated the latter city, the lesser fortresses of Grodno and Olita are now the only strongly defended positions remaining in the hands of the Russians. Both these are being approached by the Germans, and probably will be given up when they have fulfilled their purpose of facilitating the retreat of the Russian armies.

Every bit of news from both Berlin and Petrograd indicates that the Russian troops who held Brest-Litovsk and Bielystock, as well as the rest of the rapidly-crumbling line on the north and south, have so far escaped in a complete body and that the forces of the Archduke Nicholas, still intact, will be able to elude all attempts at ensnarement in the future as in the past. This is, perhaps, the redeeming feature of the present reverse, just as it was of the enforced flight from the Warsaw salient.

The Russians have not yet entered the vast Bielovieza forest, which runs 50 miles north and south and has a width of from 17 to 20 miles. The forest is a famous hunting centre and a bison preserve. South of it are the Pripet marshes, which protect the Russian left, and, with plenty of roads and three or four railroad lines it is expected here that Grand Duke Nicholas will make good his retirement if Grodno and Vilna can hold out long enough. Even though they should fail, military observers say, the Grand Duke would be well on his way to new positions before the Germans could reach his flank. There is again talk of Russian preparations for a stand, but no indication as yet where this attempt is to be made.

LOCAL SPEAKERS WERE PRESENT

The Red Cross Society of Smith township held a festival last evening at the home of Mr. John Kennedy, 6th line of Smith. Addresses were made by Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., and Lieut.-Col. Miller. The last two speakers delivered addresses of a patriotic nature. The need for more men to help in the work now being undertaken by the Empire, was pointed out.

In the words of Mr. Burnham: "We must be up and doing, doing not only our bit, but our utmost. Armies are made up of individuals. A man such as any of you fires the great guns that demolish cities. It is upon such as we are that armies depend. Unless we raise the food and make the garments and the munitions of war, unless we supply the power behind the actually fighting units, defeat is certain. A single sentry born in Smith, neglecting his duty on the banks of a Belgian stream, may let in the enemy and ruin an empire. It is to each of us, therefore, that the call comes. Do all that you can without fail, nay, without faltering. To the men belongs the work in the field. To the women belongs the work in the hospital and in the home, providing necessaries. Each of you is as much in this great conflict as if you were in the trenches. When we realize all these things we realize as we never did before the grave responsibility that rests upon us, each and every one. To the defence of freedom and the British Empire we will devote our energies, our property and if necessary, our lives. Remember Ypres, the most glorious page in our history. Our men at the front are calling for more. We must send them, and our women must provide for them."

ABOUT HORSE COLLARS

HORSE collars should be scrubbed regularly. The necks of the horses should be cleaned to match. I insist that my teamsters scrub the collars as often as necessary, especially in hot weather, at least a couple of times a week. Everyone who has driven horses knows the rough, dirty accumulations that come on the collars. Every teamster does not seem to realize what a discomfort these accumulations are to the horse. The shoulders of my horses are washed off with cold water every hot day. I have known farmers who washed the shoulders at noon with alcohol as this dries quickly. This may be a little superfluous.

Sweat pads placed under the collars to save the horse's shoulders often do more harm than good. They too get hardened with accumulations of dirt that would otherwise go on the collar and chafe the neck. Here too a strong brush with soap and water and a little elbow grease is necessary at frequent intervals.

If milk is used instead of water in making [illegible] will keep fresh [illegible]

SOME THINGS TO THINK OVER

ARE we living up to our own ideals or our neighbor's expectations?

Am I so wasting energy on the non-essentials that I have not time and thought for the vital comradeship which I owe my family?

Do I live up to my faith that the best is none too good for the family, or do I makeshift for the loved ones, and make special efforts for outsiders?

Are we all as mindful of the little courtesies to one another as we are of the formalities observed with guests?

Are my children's surroundings such that they may become as healthy as they should?

Is my home comfortable, attractive, "home-like" and easily kept clean?

Does it fret me when the children and men folk leave things in disorder? Am I putting my desire for order ahead of their enjoyment of the informal home-life?

Am I glad to entertain those who drop in unceremoniously, and conscious that the "clean dirt" of a lived-in house is no reflection upon my housekeeping?

Is there a place on the farm-stead which I'd be ashamed to have seen?

Am I giving myself the best that is in me—to my family, or am I paying so much attention to the routine of life that I am too tired to be more than a "slavey"?

THOUGHTS FOR THE DAY

Self-respect is, next to religion, the chiefest bridle of all vices.—Lord Bacon.

The great ogre, War, devours as much when he is asleep as when he is awake.—Bastiat.

Happy are they that hear their detractions, and can put them to mending.—Shakespeare.

Economy is half the battle of life; it is not so hard to earn money as to spend it well.—Spurgeon.

You seldom find people ungrateful so long as you are in a condition to serve them.—La Rochefoucauld.

Silver and gold are not the only current coin; virtue passes current all over the world.—Euripides.

HUMBLE HEROES.

One of the minor but vastly important chapters in the British war story is being written in deeds by her fishermen—who numbered when the war broke out about a hundred thousand. The patrol work wherein they were immediately employed was, in itself, hazardous, but the mine-sweeping which they began to undertake in August, and have since daily continued, was as perilous as any work in war. It is due to the hardy English fishermen that the murderous menace of the mine has been kept well in hand. Perhaps the most striking tribute to their work has been given in the Dardanelles, where they cleared the mine areas, a work absolutely indispensable to fleet operations. No more stern test of any man's mettle could be imagined than that he should have to carry out his purpose with death doubly present in mines below the water and in the shell-bursting above. Thousands of cases of heroism of these men are already on record.—Boston Transcript.

The Russians Retire From the Fortress With Little Loss

SOME THIRTY THOUSAND MINERS IN SOUTH WALES ARE NOW IDLE

The Russians' Retirement From Brest-Litovsk Was Executed With Little Loss

All Guns and Booty Were Taken to the Rear---Grand Duke Expresses Satisfaction That Victory Will Ensue---Heavy Fighting Ceased at New Positions on the Dardanelles

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, Aug. 28.—The Russians' retirement from Brest-Litovsk was executed with little loss. All guns and booty were taken to the rear. The Grand Duke in a telegram to General Joffre expresses the satisfaction that victory will ensue. Russian armies have now reached a newly fortified front where they will likely halt.

LONDON, Aug. 28.—Heavy fighting has ceased temporarily at new positions at the Dardanelles. The gullies are filled with dead Turks as a result of a charge near Gaba Tepe.

PARIS, Aug. 28.—Tremendous artillery duels have taken place at many points on the Western front. Near Arras our artillery upset German trenches and a munition depot. Aviators continue operations.

LONDON, Aug. 28. — Italians have reached the fortifications of the Trent, and are preparing to lay siege to the fortress. Italian air craft bombarded the Austrian positions.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 28.—Grodno is being evacuated. Only sufficient troops to delay German advance now in the fortress. All military property is removed.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 28.—The loss of Russian fortresses recently gives no cause for pessimism here. Military authorities agree the Grand Duke will strike a quick blow when his enemy has advanced far enough to prevent an escape.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 28.—A hundred thousand German troops are being massed on the French frontier, preparatory to a drive on Verdun. General Von Beseler, who won Novo Georgievsk from the Russians is in command.

WAS NOT STORMED AND CAPTURED.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 28.—The general staff to-day issued official denial of German claims that the fortress of Brest-Litovsk was stormed and captured by Austro-German troops.

Brest-Litovsk was evacuated by Russians, because it was considered inadvisable to pen up within its walls a garrison of 100,000 men.

Valuable supplies were first removed.

Forts on the left bank of the Bug held off enemy until main garrison had rejoined its field armies.

Fortress was then surrendered to the enemy, the principle works having been demolished.

The Russians Evacuate the Fortress of Olita

Berlin Claims Germans Have Taken Stronghold Thirty Miles South of Kovno

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN, Aug. 28. via London. — The Russian fortress of Olita on the Niemen River, 30 miles south of Kovno, has been evacuated. Official announcement to this effect as made here to-day.

In all the wide sweep of Russian territory south of the Baltic Provinces, which has been covered during the great Austro-German offensive movement, the fortress of Grodno is now the only strongly defended position remaining in the hands of the Russians. Olita was on the principal Russian line of defence, midway between Kovno, already in the hands of the Germans, and Grodno. It is about 50 miles southwest of the important railroad centre of Vilna, which is on the direct trunk line to Petrograd.

Olita is the ninth important Russian fortress to fall before the invaders in the last three weeks.

THE GERMAN STATEMENT.

The text of the statement by German Army Headquarters follows:

Western theatre of war:

In Champagne and in the Meuse hills French trench works were destroyed by mine explosions. In the Vosges a weak advance by the French was easily repulsed.

Eastern theatre of war:

Army group of Field Marshal von Hindenburg. Battles at Bausk and at Schoenberg, southeast of Mitau, and in the region east of Kovno, continues. We took, 2,450 Russians prisoner, and four cannon and three machine guns were captured.

Southeast of Kovno the enemy was defeated. The fortress of Olita has been evacuated by the Russians and was occupied by us.

Further south German troops are advancing toward the Niemen. The crossing over the Beccowka tributary east of Ossowetz has been won. The pursuit is being carried on along the entire front between the Bobr and Suchawola on the Becowka and in the Bielowiezh forest. On the 25th and 26th the army of General von Gallwitz took 3,500 prisoners.

The South Wales Strike Situation is Assuming Serious Proportions

Striking Miners Refuse to Heed Advice of Their Executive Council to Return to Work--President Wilson Has Won Diplomatic Victory in Inducing Germany to Modify Her Submarine Campaign.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, Aug. 28.—The South Wales strike situation grew more serious to-day. Despatches from Cardiff, Newport, and other coal centres said striking miners have refused to heed the advice of the executive council to return to work pending negotiations with the Government. More than 30,000 of the 200,000 miners represented in the South Wales Federation are now idle.

Word came from Newport to-day that probably every miner in Monmouthshire district will quit work to-night unless to-day's conferences in London show a disposition on the part of the Government to recognize the miners' claims.

Four thousand miners quit work in Monmouthshire to-day.

Miners' officials arrived to-day to renew their attempts to convince President Walter Runciman of the Government Board of Trade that his arbitration award had fallen far short of promises made by the Government. If Runciman ignores the miners' representatives for the second time and refuses them a conference, at least half the miners in South Wales are expected to quit work to-night.

A DIPLOMATIC VICTORY.

LONDON, Aug. 28.—It is thought President Wilson not only has struck a great blow for peace, but has won a diplomatic victory of historic importance in inducing Germany to modify her submarine methods.

It is thought Germany is sincere in her latest representations to Washington, and intends not only to disavow the "Arabic" attack, but to promise that no more passenger ships will be torpedoed.

It is not, of course, a great achievement in itself for a powerful government to extract from a still nominally friendly people the assurance that they will not murder any more of its subjects. But it is a considerable feat to have broken at last brutal self-suffering which it is claimed in Germany can be the only law by which the action of the Government and people could be guided.

ASKS UNITED STATES TO INTERCEDE.

ROME, Aug. 28.—Italy has asked the United States to use her best efforts to induce Turkey to permit the return to Italy of Italian women and children, and men too old for military service.

MILAN, Aug. 28.—Roumanian army officers in Switzerland are ordered to report to Roumanian War Office at once.

HOW WATER FILTER IS MADE IN TRENCHES

Empty Flare Cartridge With Layers of Cotton and Coke—Water Boiled

Examiner Special:

COBOURG, Aug. 28. — Lieut. E. Curry, of the 2nd Battalion, in writing from the battle line says of his little home in the trench: "My dug-out is quite a classy one. I have a shelf chair for a bed, a small shelf for necessaries; pegs for clothing, and it is papered with sandbags that have come unsewn. Some mansion. We took the trench over from some English territorials. They say the people over the way are Bavarians. They certainly don't bother us much; about twice a day. Daybreak and nightfall, both sides start a row, and of course there is sniping at each other. They had not even shelled us till our artillery started it on them; then they put a few small shell over."

Lieut. Curry describes how they make filters for their water bottles out of empty flare cartridges, which just fit over the neck of the bottle. He says: "You punch a hole through the primer and load the empty shell with alternate layers of cotton wool and coke; half fill up the bottle with water, put on cartridges, and insert over your mess tin and there you are." "Often," he says, "our drinking water is drawn from a pit near the trench. It is always yellow and muddy, but this clears it splendidly. Of course it always has to be boiled as well. It took me half a day to make up the best, as it was necessary to thaw up materials. Cotton comes in detonators, in which the bulk explosive are packed; coke and charcoal are issued once in a while to us, and the flare cartridges are fired every night."

Glasses a Necessity
Glasses are becoming a greater necessity every day, because of the increased tax that modern civilization places upon the eyes. Small newspaper type, music lessons, long school hours, fine machine sewing, close application to office work—to say nothing of night work, moving picture shows, etc., etc.
If you are misusing the only eyes you will ever have, you had better see us at once. You save nothing by delay, and the longer you put it off the harder it will be for us to give you perfect vision again.

FIFTEEN THOUSAND FARMERS SEE STEEL TRUSS BARN
Over 15,000 farmers visited the Steel Truss Barn at the Toronto Exhibition last year and this year the Manufacturers the Metal Shingle and Siding Co. of Preston will outdo themselves in an effort to make their display greater than ever before. This Metal Steel Truss Barn is situated just east of the Poultry Buildings and is fully equipped with all modern sanitary and labour-saving stable and barn fittings. The company has spared no expense in getting together the equipment for this display and will have representatives on hand every day to show visitors the advantages of the barn and equipment.

Blood Thin and Weak Too Nervous to Sleep
Here is Another Case in Which Dr. Chase's Nerve Food Proved Its Great Reconstructive Influence
Thin blood and exhausted nerves usually go together. A considerable portion of the blood is constantly consumed in keeping up the vitality of the nervous system. Once the blood is deficient, either in quantity or quality, the nerves suffer and bodily pains result. Headaches, neuralgic or sciatic pains are the indications in some cases, while in others weakness, nervousness, irritability and sleeplessness are the most marked symptoms.
Mrs. R. E. Catlin, Elm Springs, Sask., writes: "For years I was troubles with nervousness, and could not sleep nights. Also had lack of colour as a result of the blood being thin and weak. My husband saw Dr. Chase's Nerve Food advertised, and got some for me, and wanted me to try it. I did so, and it has proven a wonderful help for me. By enriching the blood it has restored colour to my face and has built up the nervous system so that I rest and sleep well. It is a pleasure to recommend so excellent a medicine."
Dr. Chase's Nerve Food goes direct to the formation of pure, rich blood, and for this reason is the most certain means of increasing the quality as well as the quantity of blood in the human system. The feeble, wasted nerves are restored, and through the nervous system new vigor and energy is imparted to every organ and member of the body.
You will be surprised at the way this food cures puts new strength and vitality into the weakened body. And the best of it is that the benefits are both thorough and lasting. In this the Nerve Food differs from mere stimulating medicines which give rise to false hope and when discontinued leave you as weak as before. Put this great restorative treatment to the test and prove its merits in your own case. 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50. All dealers or Edmanson Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

Fell From a Load of Grain

Examiner Special

GENEVA, Aug. 28. Patrick McLaughlin, a farm hand employed on the T. J. Campbell farm near Gates [illegible] on the Rochester and Eastern railroad is at the city hospital suffering from a fracture of several ribs and possible internal injuries as a result of a fall from a load of grain in the barn.

McLaughlin climbed on a load of barley and went to sleep. It is supposed that he slid off the grain and fell upon the pole of the wagon which was standing on the barn floor. The accident is believed to have happened at noon, but McLaughlin was not discovered until 6 o'clock when Mr. Campbell went to the barn to milk the cows.

As soon as Mr. Campbell made the discovery he sent word to Geneva and the City Hospital ambulance was sent out for McLaughlin. At the hospital yesterday it was reported that at least three ribs were broken and that there were possible internal injuries.

To remove what is commonly known as moth patches put one tablespoonful of flour of sulphur in a pint of rum and apply the lotion once a day.

One should always use a mouth wash at least once a day and a nothing better is at hand 10 to 12 drops of tincture of camphor in a tumbler of water is excellent.

Would not be Without Zutoo Tablets At Any Cost

Such is the statement of Mr. A. O. Norton, of Boston, the largest Jack Manufacturer in the world. His voluntary testimonial regarding ZUTOO follows:

286 Congress St., Boston, Mass.
"I have been a sufferer from Headache since childhood and have used all, or nearly all the so-called 'cures' on the market. Some months since my attention was called to Zutoo Tablets and I have been using them ever since with the most gratifying results. I find they cure a 'sick' or 'nervous' headache in a few minutes and leave no bad effects. My family use them whenever needed with equally good results. I have frequently given them to friends who were suffering from Headache and they never failed to give quick relief. I always carry Zutoo Tablets in my grip on the road and WOULD NOT BE WITHOUT THEM AT ANY COST."

A KETTLE FOR PARAFFIN.

When melting paraffin to cover the tops of jelly glasses we put it in a small tin teakettle kept for the purpose. It is easy to pour the melted wax from the spout over the jelly, and when this is done the lid is put on and the kettle stored in a closet until another melting is required. Anyone who has tried to remove adhering wax from a saucepan used for other cooking knows what a nuisance it is. The little teakettle is kept for this one purpose; with a close lid and a little plug in the spout no dust enters, and it is always ready for use.

An Incident Of Heredity

By DWIGHT NORWOOD

"Doctor," said Norman Goodfellow to Dr. Theodore Colt, "I am thinking of proposing marriage to a lady in whose family there are traces of insanity. Do you consider me justified in marrying her under the circumstances?"

"Not if the insanity is hereditary. There is a great difference between insanity from a temporary cause and from an organic trouble that may be transmitted from parent to child. I do not consider that any one suffering from an ailment which is hereditary has a right to marry. Your question suggests a story involving a case which came within my professional experience.

"One day a young man named Severance came to consult me as to a case similar to yours. He had recently been married and all had gone happily till one day on returning to his home from business he found his wife lying on the bed indisposed. She seemed drowsy, and, suggesting that she try to get a nap, he took the evening paper to a window and sat down to read.

"Presently he heard her tossing about on the bed and, looking at her from his paper, saw that, though asleep or at least dozing, there was an undulatory motion about her that suggested the movement of a snake. He had awakened her and asked her if she had not been dreaming, but she said she had not been conscious during her nap and felt much better for it.

"Nevertheless the young husband seemed to me to have been much shocked at what he had seen. Were it not for this I would have concluded that what he had seen was the working of his wife's nerves uncontrolled during slumber. I gave him this cause in order to reassure him, but it did not. However, since I could give him no other comfort, he left me, much dejected.

Not long after his visit, taking up a newspaper, I saw a notice that he had left his house a few days before and had not been heard from since. The police had been notified, and an alarm had been sent out. Fears were entertained that he had met with foul play, since the day before his disappearance he had drawn a large sum of money from his bank.

His visit to me, the story he told and his depression led me to suspect that he was suffering from some nervous or mental trouble, and I inclined to the belief that what he had told me about his wife was a creation of a diseased brain. I did not see how I would be justified in making known my suspicions without mentioning the cause, and that I did not care to do.

[illegible] never learned [illegible] and no probable cause was ever given for his disappearance. When several years had passed his wife gave him up for dead, believing that he had been murdered for the money he had with him. Four years after his disappearance she married again, and as fate would have it her second husband was a patient of mine. I did not know that he was to marry Mrs. Severance, and I was satisfied that I had not known it, because I should have been troubled as to what I should do in the matter, for I was undecided what to attribute her first husband's disappearance to.

Within a few months after my patient's—Hammond's—marriage he came into my office one day with a wild look in his eyes and told me a story similar to the one Severance had told me. He had had a disagreement with his wife, during which she had become very much excited. During the vituperations she had hurled at him her eyes had glittered like those of an angry serpent. Her appearance during the trouble had made such a horrible impression upon him that he was afraid he would lose his mind. He asked me to give him a sedative.

Here was a worse complication for me than Severance had brought me, for I was not sure whether Severance's experience had been an hallucination occasioned by a disordered brain or had been caused by some peculiar condition in his life. But I dared not tell Hammond this, for it would be sure to make a wreck of him. I had no recourse but to say to him that he must have been suffering from some nervous weakness. Instead of giving him a drug I advised him to go on a trip, but on no account to take his wife with him.

He took my advice as to the trip, but never returned from it. News of his having fallen over a precipice in Switzerland was sent to her over the ocean, but I have always suspected that he arranged for its transmission himself. One thing confirmed this suspicion; his body was never found.

Two years after having become a hypothetical double widow the lady in this case died. I confess I was relieved. There was now no further chance of any more of my clients marrying her. Soon after her death I made some investigations as to her case through the physician who attended her. I called on him and gave him the experience of her two husbands as given to me. He accepted a theory I gave him and promised if possible to learn facts that would confirm it.

He found an aunt of the subject of my story who told him that her sister soon after her marriage had been frightened by a serpent. Six months after this episode the child, who became Mrs. Severance-Hammond, was born. My theory was that the mother's fright at this critical period affected the nature of the child.

WOMAN COULD HARDLY STAND

Because of Terrible Backache. Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I suffered from displacement and inflammation, and had such pains in my sides, and terrible backache as that I could hardly stand. I took six bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and now I can do any amount of work, sleep good, eat good, and don't have a bit of trouble. I recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to every suffering woman."—Mrs. HARRY FISHER, 1642 Juniata Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Another Woman's Case.

Providence, R. I.—"I cannot speak too highly of your Vegetable Compound as it has done wonders for me and I would not be without it. I had a displacement, bearing down, and backache, until I could hardly stand and was thoroughly run down when I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It helped me and I am in the best of health at present. I work in a factory all day long besides doing my housework so you can see what it has done for me. I give you permission to publish my name and I speak of your Vegetable Compound to many of my friends."—Mrs. ABBIE LAWSON, 128 Lippitt St., Providence, R. I.

Danger Signals to Women

are what one physician called backache, headache, nervousness, and the blues. In many cases they are symptoms of some female derangement or an inflammatory, ulcerative condition, which may be overcome by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Thousands of American women willingly testify to its virtue.

Cordite.

Cordite, the British service propellant used in all arms, from the army revolver to the fifteen inch naval gun, may be taken as a general type of modern gunpowders. Its name is derived from the circumstance that it is manufactured in the shape of string or cord, varying from one-thirtieth of an inch to nearly half an inch in diameter. It was devised by the ordnance committee over which Sir Frederick Abel presided in 1891, with Sir James Dewar as scientific adviser. It is a mixture of guncotton and nitroglycerin, with a small amount of mineral jelly to act as a lubricant and preservative.—London Globe.

A Deep Sea Mascot.

One of the favorite mascots of deep sea fishermen, to which they attach great importance, is a tiny flat stone, or bone, found in the ears of plaice and other fish. The wearer of one of these stones is supposed to be immune to the danger of drowning.

It is easy to find these stones in the ears of fish, although they are no bigger than a split lentil. Anybody who cares to look for one and to examine it will see on its surface light and dark rings, similar to those found on a larger scale in tree trunks. The number of rings tells the age of the fish, as a new ring appears each year. —Every Week.

Dwindling Captives.

Most creatures that have been tamed by man have gained in size during their long captivity, but there are several notable exceptions. The cat is one. Our house pussy is a smaller and far feebler thing than the wild cat from which she is descended. Sheep and turkeys are other instances of degeneration. The wild gobbler is considerably larger than the tame Thanksgiving bird. A full grown wild ram of the Rocky mountain species seldom weighs less than 300 pounds, and the wild sheep of the old world are said to be of equal size, while a tame ram, even of the mutton breeds, is doing well if he scales 200 pounds.—Chicago Journal.

USEFULNESS.

It is a great satisfaction at the close of life to feel that you have lived not for yourself alone, but that you have been useful to others. You may be assured also that the same feeling is a source of comfort and happiness at any period of life. Nothing in this world is so good as usefulness. It tends to the improvement of your own character.

FELL IN A FAINT.

Mrs. Edwin Martin, Ayer's Cliff, Que., writes: "Before using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I was in a terrible condition. Dizzy spells would come over me and I would fall to the floor. I could not sweep without fainting. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has so built up my system that I can wash and do my housework. Your medicine cured me when doctors had failed."

TO THE PANAMA PACIFIC EXPOSITION VIA THE CANADIAN ROCKIES.

At the present time a great many are planning their annual tour. Considerable numbers visit the popular California resorts, while many prefer the unsurpassed resorts, palatial hotels and magnificent scenery of the Canadian Rockies. This year, why not combine the two by a visit to the Panama Pacific Exposition?

Numerous people in comfortable circumstances, well able to afford a trip, have the mistaken idea that a journey of this nature is most expensive. This is not so, thanks to the modern railway facilities, an extensive trip both interesting and educational can be made with speed and comfort at a comparatively small cost. Why not investigate?

Those contemplating a trip of any nature will receive full information from any C.P.R. Agent, or write M. G. Murphy, District Passenger Agent, Toronto. mwf-44-1w34

The King's Scapegoat

An Account of a Duel Fought In the Sixteenth Century.

By F. A. MITCHEL

[This story is more than a story. It is a historical account of a duel that occurred 400 years ago and a fine illustration of the difference between the method of settling affairs of honor among men in the olden time and the beginning of the nineteenth century, when mortal combat to settle difficulties between individuals may be said to have received its quietus in the new world in the death of Alexander Hamilton at the hands of Aaron Burr.]

"How comes it, Guichot, that you are able to make so brave a show with the revenues which you have, for I know that they are not excessive?"

The question was asked of Guy Chabot Sieur de Jarnac by the dauphin, who afterward became Henry II., king of France.

Jarnac, embarrassed at such a question, was unfortunate in the choice of words used in his reply. He said that his stepmother kept him, giving him everything he required. Henry deliberately misconstrued the statement and reported to members of the court that Jarnac had boasted of a love affair with his stepmother.

Horrified, indignant at such an accusation, the young man publicly declared that whoever had made the assertion was "a malicious villain and had wickedly lied." Then, hastening to his father's chateau, he threw himself at his feet and protested that he was innocent of the charge. Having convinced his father, he returned to court intent upon avenging the injury done him.

The dauphin found himself in a very unpleasant position. When princes err there must be a scapegoat. Francis Vivowne, Sieur de Chatagnerie, a courtier in favor both with King Francis and the dauphin, a young warrior of great prowess, though a friend of Jarnac, seeing that he would confer a great favor on the future king by doing so, took up the quarrel in his behalf, declaring that it was to him and him alone that Jarnac had made his boast.

Duels at this time were a part of the feudal tradition and law of France, requiring the consent of the king. Francis referred the matter to the privy council, which after a long debate recommended that permission to fight be refused. But no sooner had the king died and the dauphin ascended the throne than Chatagnerie addressed a letter to the new king, repeating his accusation, whereupon Jarnac made a request that the duel be permitted to take place. The king consented, and arrangements for the contest were forthwith made.

Chatagnerie was twenty-six years old, while his adversary was thirty-six. The former was also of great strength and very ready with his sword. He was continually boasting of his feats of arms and ever ready to pick a quarrel. In short, he was just the man to vindicate his royal master in his contemptible cherge.

At that time the same rule of the code, that the challenged party should have the choice of arms, existed as it has since. Jarnac had accused his adversary of a lie and had been challenged; therefore he was permitted to fight in any way he pleased. Upon the advice of his fencing master he demanded the heavy armor and long double edged swords in vogue a century before. The reason for this was that his opponent had been wounded in battle in the right arm and had never regained perfect use of it, and the heavy iron gauntlet and sword would naturally hamper the movements of this arm. Chatagnerie's great strength gave him an advantage in closing with his enemy, downing him and stabbing him while prostrate. The armor in this case would be to his disadvantage. Jarnac also stipulated for heavy shields, which would be an advantage to the weaker party, who would naturally be on the defensive.

Chatagnerie seemed to have no fear whatever of making an easy conquest of his adversary. As he was accustomed to boast of the deeds he had performed, he now boasted of the deed he was about to perform. He ordered a banquet to be served in his tent on the field, to which he invited the court to celebrate his victory.

Naturally the affair was the sensation of the day. The courtiers were largely on the side of the king's scapegoat, and Henry did not deny that his own sympathies were with Chatagnerie. The provincial nobility, of whom the Jarnac family were members, regarded Jarnac as the defender of their honor and looked upon him as their champion. One of the powerful Guise family was to act as second for the royal scapegoat, and the Duke de Vendome of a rival family to the Guises asked the king's permission to act for Jarnac. He was refused and, disgusted at the king's favoritism, withdrew, followed by the other princes of the blood. The constable of France then filled the position.

The king having announced his intention to preside at the encounter, the constable made arrangements in accordance with the dignity of the occasion. The field having been selected, a space for the combat was marked out and suitable accommodations provided for the king, court and nobility, the king and his tribune in the center, the tribune being the constable and marshals of France, who were the judges.

The day of the duel was a beautiful morning in midsummer. Crowds from Paris began early to pour forth toward the battleground. The archers of the guard took the place of modern policemen in keeping the crowd from breaking through the barrier and invading the field of battle. The king arrived, attended by his sister, princes of the blood and many nobles. A singular feature was an executioner and his assistants, who were intended to take charge of the corpse of the vanquished, in case he was killed, for hanging on a gibbet.

As soon as the king was seated the herald advanced and proclaimed the combat, asserting that no one should interfere with either of the combatants on peril of his life. Chatagnerie left his tent, accompanied by some 500 of his friends. Jarnac next appeared, escorted by the grand equerry and 120 gentlemen wearing his colors. The shields of the combatants were hung on either side of the king. Then came the ceremony of the presentation of the arms, which was principally a testing of the weapons. This having been accomplished, there was another long proclamation from the herald, and the combatants having paraded around the field, preceded by their arms, after a religious ceremony in which each affirmed his cause to be a just one, they were conducted to their stations, and the herald, advancing, shouted, "Laissez aller les bons combatants," which means in plain American, "Let 'em go!"

Such is a condensation of the preliminaries to a duel in high life during the middle of the sixteenth century. The fight was by no means commensurate with the preparation, for it was decided quickly. The duelists advanced, Jarnac slowly, protecting himself with his shield; Chatagnerie rapidly and full of confidence. As soon as they met the latter sprang upon his opponent, aiming a crushing blow at his head. Jarnac, instead of warding off the blow with his sword, as was to be expected, received it on his shield and, ducking, made a thrust for his opponent's legs. He struck Chatagnerie in the hollow of the knee. Before the latter could recover himself Jarnac repeated the thrust at the same point and cut the tendons, giving a new phrase to dueling—the coup de Jarnac, which in those days was not a foul, but perfectly legitimate. Chatagnerie staggered, dropped his sword and fell, the blood flowing from his wound.

A cry of amazement greeted this conquest of the champion swordsman of France within a few seconds by one who had no especial reputation as a man at arms.

By the code of that day three courses were open to the victor—he might kill his opponent and hand his body over to the executioner to be hanged; he might spare his life after exacting a restoration of his honor by the vanquished confessing himself to be in error, or he might surrender him to the king. Jarnac called upon his enemy to restore him his honor. Chatagnerie's reply was an attempt to rise, but it failed. Jarnac, then advancing to the king, said:

"Sire, I entreat you to esteem me a man of honor. I give you Chatagnerie's life. It is our youth alone which is the cause of this trouble. Let no imputation rest either on his family or upon him on account of his offense, for I surrender him to you."

But the king, not realizing that his scapegoat was unable to continue the fight, made no answer. Jarnac raised his eyes to heaven. "Lord, I am not worthy, for it is not to myself, but to thee, that I owe the victory." Then, returning to Chatagnerie, he begged him to surrender. But the scapegoat, raising himself on one knee and regaining his lost sword, endeavored to strike. Jarnac stepped back, saying, "Do not move or I will kill you!" "Kill me," replied the vanquished man and fell back exhausted from loss of blood.

Again Jarnac went to the king and implored him to give him the victory, a victory which condemned the king himself, but Henry refused. Jarnac, expecting that his former friend would bleed to death, cried, "Sire, he is dying. For the love of heaven, accept his life at my hands!" Henry, refusing to pronounce his own condemnation, still refused till the constable joined his entreaties to those of Jarnac. Then Henry, seeing that the sympathies of the assembly were against him, said to Jarnac, "You have done your duty, and your honor should be restored to you." And he ordered that Chatagnerie be removed. Jarnac had the right to be escorted from the field by his followers to the sound of martial music, but he declined the honor. When he refused the king, having had time to curb his disappointment, called him to the tribune and, as the victor was about to kneel to him, embraced him, saying that he had fought like Caesar and spoken like Aristotle.

Never was there such multiplicity of preparation for so brief a contest, never a more flagrant case of a man guilty of a contemptible act accepting the defense of another and being judge of the issue, withholding the verdict until forced by opinion to pronounce it.

At the conclusion of the tournament the brilliant assembly broke up, and, the king leading the way, all returned to Paris.

Jarnac's victory fell no less heavily on the king than on his defender. Chatagnerie felt his fall so keenly that he refused to live after it. The surgeons bound his knee with bandages, but he tore them off. Again they put them on, and the miserable man tore them off, repeating the act till at last he bled to death.

Why Milk is White and Cream Yellow

One is often apt to forget that color is merely a reflection of light and that anything which reflects light perfectly will be the colour of that light. The most nearly perfect form to reflect is a sphere. The moon is bright because it reflects the sun. The earth is bright for the same reason, as one can see at the time of the new moon when the part of the moon hidden from the sun by the earth shines faintly from reflected earth light.

Milk is like a collection of moons. It is a liquid filled with minute droplets of fat, each of them a perfect sphere. When the light strikes these it is reflected at every angle, reflected on to other droplets of fat and by them reflected on and on until from every point in the milk the white light that strikes on the outside is reflected.

Think of marbles made of looking glass but so small that several thousands of them could be put on the head of a pin and you will see the reason for the reflection or the white colour of milk.

It is this which makes "high lights" in many colored objects. An artist drawing a silk hat on which the sunlight falls will make a white line where the sun strikes the hat, and everyone seeing the picture will feel it to be true. But if he did the same on a black derby hat we would feel it to be wrong. And it would be wrong. For while the silk hat is as black as the derby the curve and the shine reflect the sunlight and the light is white. A well polished black boot has exactly the same effect.

When, in the case of milk the number of these little reflecting drops grow fewer, then the light is not reflected so much, and the liquid grows more transparent. Absence of full reflection makes milk less white, or in a sense more bluish, as the semi-transparency of air makes blue sky, and of water, blue sea. If, however, the tiny droplets of fat become compressed together as in cream, they absorb some of the colors of the light, reflecting back the yellower shades. It is this that makes cream whiter than butter-milk whiter than cream and skim-milk bluer than milk.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

A SMART COAT FOR LIGHT MATERIALS.

By Anabel Worthington.

7231

There is never a season so hot that at some period or another in it a coat is not required. Damp days, cool days, times when there is a ride to be taken or a boating trip, and numerous other occasions make a coat desirable. It may be made of the thinnest of serge or cheviot, without any lining and with pique, or muslin collar and cuffs to give a summery touch to it, or it may be of taffetas, which is worn by old and young this season. Again, it may be of pique or linen, for this is often enough on a summer day.

The coat shown in the illustration has the new cut which is considerably wider at the hem than formerly. Of course, the garment fits flat at the shoulders, but at yoke depth the fullness begins and is folded in as pleats, while a belt holds it in position. This belt has little pocket trimmings, these being among the novelties of the season. The sleeves are plain and long, finished with turnback cuffs, and a shawl collar trims the long opening of the neck. Of course, the belt may be omitted, but it adds so much style to the coat that it won't be a pity not to use it and it should be of the coat material, rather than of leather, although this is permissible if more convenient.

The coat pattern, No. 7231, is cut in sizes 6, 8, 10, 12 and 14 years. Medium size requires 2¾ yards of 44 inch material.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and [illegible] required and age of a child.

HOME HEALTH CLUB

By DR. DAVID H. REEDER

Comfort and Health.—The person who travels much knows something of the discomforts of a poor bed. Yet many of the days and hours every one of us spends in bed. It is only those that enjoy the solid comfort of a well made bed that realize fully how greatly the health may be affected by being compelled to spend night after night in a bed that is lumpy or sags down in the middle like a sailor's hammock.

I have known cases of real sickness primarily caused by a bad bed. In many cases the sufferer gets up in the morning feeling more tired than when he went to bed. There was no real rest and sound refreshing sleep until the exhausted body gave up just before time to get up in the morning.

When one looks at the matter from a practical common-sense standpoint he at once realizes that at least one-third of his life can be spent in real luxury of a kind that will increase his comfort and health in a surprising manner. I have slept comfortably on the soft bosom of mother earth with only a blanket for a bed, but the same blanket would not give me rest and comfort on an old cot or bed worn with spring bed. Even a well made mattress will not compensate for the discomforts of poor springs.

I believe that I have tested nearly all kinds of modern beds and a few were not modern, but I have not yet found anything more comfortable than the good old-fashioned box spring, covered with a light but well made felt or hair mattress. The expense of such a bed [illegible] compared with the amount we spend on the other [illegible] our lives.

Thinking about [illegible] naturally reminds one of shoes, suits, stiff hats and [illegible]. If we could see all the pain [illegible] and deformed feet [illegible] is called upon to [illegible] we would refuse to [illegible] the use of the cases [illegible] resort to the surgeon for help and would wonder how in the world people ever urged [illegible] a shoe that cramped or pinched our toes. Not long ago a man [illegible] to me [illegible] a surgeon [illegible] a corn on each foot because [illegible] that he could not wear a shoe [illegible] what he called "perfect shoes." I think the operation will have to be performed and unless that skull of his is solid [illegible] he will have to wear sensible shoes.

High heels are a form of torture that prevents freedom and graceful movement, broken down arches are the causes of much suffering that in many times called rheumatism, sciatica or even lumbago. Corsets are to blame for many cases of prolapsus and in interfering with the circulation help on such troubles as fibroid tumor, ulceration and mal-position of the womb. The stiff uncomfortable hats of men and in destroying the hair and are probably one of the reasons why so many more men than women are bald.

PIONEER PRESERVING

(By Peter McArthur)

Who knows anything about pioneer methods of preserving fruit? Our grandmothers put away their winter supply of fruits long before the modern kinds of sugar were invented, and in the present state of the world it might be a good idea to revive some of their old recipes. This morning I was listening in a sleepy way to a conversation in which a number of women were discussing their troubles in putting up the usual supply of fruits. Owing to the high cost of sugar many of them had decided to curtail their preserving operations and an air of gloom prevailed, until one of the little party chanced to remark:

"I remember getting fresh raspberry pies in the winter time and the pioneer housewife who made them told me that she had preserved her berries merely by pouring boiling water over them in a crock until it overflowed. Then she let it stand in a cool cellar and her berries kept fresh all through the winter."

This remark had me wide awake in an instant, for everything pertaining to the pioneers is of the most absorbing interest to me. It also aroused the ladies, but for a different reason. They wanted to know how to preserve raspberries in the cheapest way possible. We all began to question the woman who made the remark, but she could not cast any further light on the question. She was only a little girl when she got the raspberry pies, and she had neglected to ask for full particulars of this unusual and economical way of preserving fruit. As a student of pioneer methods I was only able to add confusion to the discussion, for I seemed to remember hearing a sort preserving met in this way by floating a layer of melted beeswax on top of the water in the crock. But I was not sure and no one else had heard of this method so we made no progress.

It is quite possible that the introduction of cheap sugar did away with many serviceable old-time methods of doing up fruit. If so I would like a distinct public service for anyone who has any of the old-time recipes to make them public this year when economics are being urged on all of us on account of the war. Anything that will reduce expense in the preparation or preservation of food products should be given the widest possible publicity. Last year we have large quantities of almost all kinds of fruit and there should be a determined effort to save all of it. If the high cost of the approved methods makes them prohibitive let us go back to the cheaper methods of our forefathers.

If you have any of those old recipes telling how to preserve any kind of fruit from raspberries to peaches in a way that will be inexpensive and yet palatably kind send it to me and I shall ask my friends of the press to give them the widest possible publicity. In this way we may enable everyone to have a plentiful supply of fruit in this year of stress and, at the same time make it possible to use all the fruit in the country without waste. Recipes for all kinds of fruits will be welcome. Address all communications to Peter McArthur, Appin P.O. Ont.

CRUDE THOUGHTS FROM THE EDITORIAL PEN

A very ideal has been written about [illegible] many ways of over-eating and beautifying this home which every woman ought to do as far as her means and income will allow, but the sweetest homes and the most beautiful creation that ever adorned the home of any man is a patient, tender hearted godly woman, one that is so full of God's love and his goodness that she will be able to turn a log cabin into a palace. It is not always the wealthy and those that live in fine houses that are the happiest.

* * *

Success.

There are [illegible] achievements than money making. Indeed, achievement in many lines is not always success while reputed failure often is. The most successful men are not necessarily the ones loudly attracting public attention. The best and most useful women are not the bright butterflies of fashion or the stage whose press agents incessantly flaunt their pictures and their little mothings before the public.

The millions of unlauded men and women who are quietly attending to their own little tasks, every day contributing something substantial to industry, prosperity and progress, teaching children habits of honest labor and right living and supplying example that elevates the moral and intellectual level of their little communities, these are the men and women of real influence and power. Success is theirs in the fullest measure.

It is [illegible] given us all to have success as God counts success. Success consists in doing one's best. The real success is more in the trying than in the achievement. We may achieve by accident, by some help of others, or of forces that are not ours. But our ideals and our efforts are all our own. It is our purposes and our efforts that are a part of ourselves.

How shrunken and pitiful a thing is a fellow's delusion is the shining or cradled success of self-absorbed money seeking men and women. They are like that soldier under Godfrius who in hooting found a shining leather bag filled with pearls, and threw away the pearls but carefully kept the shining bag.

* * *

A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver. Why, then, are we so chary of kind words, for we know a word in kindness spoken may heal a heart that's broken and make a friend sincere. Could we but realize the full import of our every word and act, would it not lead us to weigh them more carefully?

* * *

It is her own fault if a woman is annoyed and neglected. That is a harsh statement to make, but it is a fact. Mortal man is a weakling who can no more resist kindness than a rose can resist the sun. It is a weak, selfless woman's duty, to make herself attractive and pretty in the very face of discouragement. Call it hypocrasy, tact, finesse, or by any other term, but she must turn in the edges and make allies instead of antagonists of the people about her. Spotless neatness, becoming feminine attire, truth, kindness, cheerfulness, love and the loyalty that restrains her from speaking ill of her neighbours will make many a woman loyally, even though she lacks beauty.

* * *

No true man can stand to see the woman he loves in tears, and when your kind words, your prayers and your tears fail to touch him he is past all human help.

* * *

If you want to keep your children away from sin you can only do so by making their home attractive. You can preach sermons, advocate reforms and denounce wickedness and yet your children will be captivated by the glittering saloons of sin, unless you make your home brighter than any other place on earth to them.

* * *

Plan out your life on a big scale wherever you are a father's character or a shepherdess among the hills or a tattered pet of a dressing room filled with statuary and pictures and bric-a-brac. Stop where you are and make a plan for your life now. You cannot be satisfied with a life of commonplaces and grind and indecision. Trust the world and it will cheat you, it will not destroy you. The indomitable was the name of an English man's ship that Lord Nelson spared more from demolition but that same ship afterward sent the ball that killed him and the world on which you [illegible] such easy aim at your deathless conquest.

* * *

Try to give your children the memory of a sweet and joyous childhood. It will make your memory tender and precious to them long after you have passed from earth and it will make better men and women. The cold hearted of their own children is self-made happiness by it. There is more sorrowful memory than all an unhappy memory of [illegible].

[illegible] not a man or woman [illegible] who would not [illegible] Christ's story, who would not [illegible] the [illegible] of church authority [illegible] to recognize the [illegible] of the [illegible].

AUSTRO-GERMANS TRYING TO SPLIT THE RUSSIAN ARMIES

GRAND DUKE WILL ESCAPE THE TRAP

PARIS, Aug. 28.—The resumption of hostilities between the Austrians and Montenegrins was announced in an official statement given out here to-day by the Montenegrin Consul-General.

A lively engagement occurred near the mouth of the Gulf of Cattaro. The fight lasted two hours.

The Austrians retired leaving numerous dead on the field.

King Nicholas has gone to the front.

PARIS, France (French Official Communique) Aug. 28.—French aviators were again active throughout last night, bombarding the railway station at Chattel, in Argonne.

There were no important infantry engagements last night. Some minor battles were fought along the Plateau by Quenneviierres and Nouvron, but without important results. In the Argonne the Germans opened artillery attacks on the French trenches at several points, but their batteries were quickly silenced.

ATHENS, Aug. 28.—The breaking off of diplomatic relations, and possibly war between Greece and Turkey is now considered almost inevitable. The Venizelos Government is preparing sharp protests to Turkey, amounting practically to an ultimatum as a result of fresh persecutions of Greek residents of Asia Minor.

SOME BERLIN CLAIMS.

BERLIN, Aug. 28.—Official denial was made by the Admiralty to day that Aviator Bigsworth sank a German submarine off Ostend. The U boat was attacked by a British aviator but returned to the harbour undamaged.

Kaiser Wilhelm has conferred the order of Pour Le Merite on the German Crown Prince, Crown Prince of Bavaria, and Duke of Wurtemburg.

A German submarine on Aug. 61 destroyed, by artillery fire, the Bensole factory and warehouse at Harrington, Eng., where high explosives were manufactured. The same submarine was attacked by a passenger steamer which used cannon for attack, not defense.

LONDON, Aug. 28.—The Austro-German armies are now attempting the greatest stroke of the war by concentrating heavy forces against the weakest spots in the Russian lines. The Czar's enemies are seeking to split his field forces into three armies before the arrival of winter ends the possibilities of a new Russian offensive this year.

Great masses of men and metal are being hurled against the retreating Slavs in the region of Vilna. Gen. Von Hindenburg is directing a drive at this point. He hopes to drive the wedge in the Russian line that will cut off the Brest-Litovsk armies from those operating in Courland and north to Petrograd.

In the southeast the Austrians evidently reinforced by detachments from Mackensen, are attempting a rush northward through Kovel. Their object is to throw another wedge between the Brest-Litovsk armies and the Russians under Gen. Ivanoff, still holding a section of Galicia.

A heavier blow is being struck by Von Hindenburg in the north. Petrograd despatches to-day predicted that Von Hindenburg will be heavily reinforced if fresh troops have not already come to his assistance. The belief in military quarters here is that Von Hindenburg plans not only to break the Russian line near Vilna, but to gain a favourable position for a stroke against Petrograd.

Every confidence is felt here that German strategy will not succeed. The Russian Grand Duke continues to escape trap after trap set for him by the Austro-Germans. His brilliant retreat from the Vistula line with the loss of only detachments from his rear guards convince the critics here that he will hold his lines intact and is prepared for the new offensive now promised by the Russian War Office.

LONDON, Aug. 28.—Minister of Munitions Lloyd-George, who brought about a settlement of the first strike, returned to London to-day, prepared to meet the miners' deputation.

BERLIN, Aug. 28.—Austro-Germans in Galicia have begun a new offensive movement, it was officially reported this afternoon. After several weeks of inactivity, Gen. Von Linsingen has broken the Russians' positions on the Zlota Lipa River.

German forces have occupied the town of Narew.

BERLIN, Aug. 28.—British warships have again raided the Belgian coast bombarding Ostend, Bruges and Middlekerke. The War Office reported this afternoon that no important military damage was done.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 28.—The Allies continue spasmodic infantry and artillery attacks on the Gallipoli Peninsula, particularly near Suvla Bay, but have failed to gain ground.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 28.—More than two hundred German soldiers were killed or wounded during the recent British bombardment of Zee-Brugge. A number of German guns were badly damaged.

NEWS FROM CHEMONG PARK

CHEMONG PARK Aug. 28 The last golf tea of the season was held yesterday afternoon.

The last meeting of the ladies who have been doing work for the soldiers will be held on Monday at the summer home of Mr. Baldwin.

The Misses Jewett of Toronto, who have been the guests of their aunt, Mrs. Hopwood, left for home today.

Miss Redmond Hoycke, Miss Phyllies Young and Miss Helen Mason are the guests of Mrs. Carmichael.

Mrs. F. J. Kingsley and family of Toronto motored to Chemong to spend the week-end the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Hopwood.

APPOINTED ASS'T SUPT. OF THE METROPOLITAN

Mr. Fred Whatley of this city has been appointed assistant superintendent for the district of the Metropolitan Life Assurance Co. and leaves with his family, for Oshawa, this evening, where they will in future reside. Mr. Whatley's promotion is a well-deserved one, and his many friends while sorry to hear of his departure, will congratulate him on his important appointment.

EXHIBITION WILL BE MARKED BY MILITARY ASPECT

Soldiers of The 80th Battalion Will Take Part in Programme and Recruiting Will be Continued Vigorously During The Local Exhibition.

BIG SPEAKER COMING

The military end of the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition is not being neglected this year and arrangements are being made to take advantage of the big gathering to stimulate recruiting. The 80th Battalion men will give exhibition drills at the grounds and it is likely that the band of the 80th will play. A recruiting tent will be stationed on the grounds during the exhibition, and recruiting sergeant will work through the crowds. Some prominent speaker, probably Hon. Geo. P. Graham, will be here to address the crowd, and as an added feature it is likely that a machine gun will be brought and demonstrated for the benefit of the crowd. It will be a khaki exhibition this year.

PROSECUTIONS WILL FOLLOW

If The Terms of The Notices Respecting The Weed Nuisance Are Not Observed

Sanitary Inspector Spence has sent out a number of notices respecting complaints that have been received concerning the weed nuisance. Property owners have been notified to clean up their premises within twenty-four hours or suffer the consequences. The latter involves a trip to the Police Court and a potential fine should a conviction be recorded. This action arises out of a number of complaints that have been received the weed nuisance as it exists on vacant lots throughout the city. The Board of Works Department have a number of men employed in eradicating the nuisance so far as municipal property is concerned.

Capt. Hodge's Foot Saved

Gallant Machine Gun Officer Treated Successfully in London

WITH 2ND BATTALION

COBOURG, Aug. 28 News has been received here that Capt. Hodge, who is in command of the machine gun section of the 2nd Battalion is back in duty at the front. It was feared that Capt. Hodge would lose his foot, but the skillful services of a London physician saved it. Captain Hodge had the arch of his foot broken by a horse stepping on it, and continued afterwards in command of his guns, although suffering much pain. A letter from Col. Watson, his Officer Commanding, written on August 10, commended the work of Capt. Hodge, the officers, non-commissioned officers and men of his machine gun crew the night before, and upon all occasions.

TWELVE MORE BATTALIONS

More Canadian Units to Go to England at Once to Act as Infantry Depots to Supply Reinforcements For The Front.

NONE FROM THIS DISTRICT

OTTAWA, Aug. 28 The important announcement was made this morning by Senator Loughheed, acting Minister of Militia, that twelve complete battalions were about to be sent over to England. The battalions selected are those in the various divisional areas and military districts whose recruiting was started earliest.

The battalions which have been selected from divisional area one: 33rd, Col. Wilson, London; 34th, Col. A. J. Oliver, Guelph. Divisional area two: 35th, Col. McCormick, Toronto; 37th, Col. Bick, North Bay, Sudbury and Sault Ste. Marie; 58th, Col. H. A. Genet, Toronto.

The senior battalion in each divisional area and military district has been selected to go to the front. No battalion has been chosen from the 3rd military district, Eastern Ontario, because that district has recently furnished the 38th Battalion for service in Bermuda. At the present time there are only a sufficient number of men in the district for garrison.

The official announcement states that "with a view to providing an uninterrupted supply of reinforcements it has been decided to increase by 12 the number of battalions now serving in England, as infantry depots."

The Farmers' Produce Market

Butter Still Higher in Price—Supplies Limited

A few of the later variety of fruits such as plums, pears and apples made their appearance on the market this morning. The supply was limited, likewise the demand. With the exception of a few regular lines, supplies were light. At this season of the year, the farmer is more concerned over harvesting operations and in preparing for the fall work than he is in coming to market. As the season advances the market should improve. There is still a scarcity of butter and eggs. The former sold this morning at 31 and 32 cents a pound, while the latter found a ready sale at twenty-two cents a dozen.

GIFT IS ACKNOWLEDGED BY THE BATTERY BOYS

The following letter from Signaller C. J. Downey of Peterborough, who is at the front with the 4th Battery, C. F. A., C. E. F. has been received by the Peterborough Progressive Club.

Belgium, Aug. 6, 1915

I received your letter of July 13th and parcel of socks which have been distributed among the boys from Peterborough and they all wish me to thank your club for its kindness in remembering them. They all were delighted with the quality and I assure you that they will be put to a very good use. And the boys and myself wish you would express our gratitude to the makers and tell them how much their thoughtfulness was appreciated. I am very sorry to say that all the boys that left Peterborough are not still with us, but those that are left are in excellent spirits and in the best of health at present.

We have been in this position for a month, and things are very quiet at present, but one can never tell when something might happen.

I was talking to Sergt. Ackerman the other day and he seems to be enjoying the fun very much.

We also wish to thank you for the chocolate which I am sure will be enjoyed very much when it arrives.

Thanking you once again for all you have done and wishing you and your club the best wishes of all the boys I am,

Yours sincerely,
Signaller C. J. Downey

A CAMPAIGN IN COUNTY

Arrangements Have Been Made for Recruiting Meetings at Lakefield, Norwood, Hastings, Havelock and Keene Next Week.

TO AROUSE COUNTY

The county recruiting drive will be held the first county next week, when the first of a series of patriotic recruiting meetings will be held. Plans were completed at a meeting of the local branch of the Speakers' Patriotic League, held at headquarters last night, at which representatives were present from different parts of the district. The messages that men are needed will be emphasized in every part of the county during the next few weeks, and the advantage in joining the 57th Peterborough battalion will be pointed out at the same time.

The county campaign will open on Monday night, when a big meeting will be held in Lakefield. The speakers on that occasion will be Judge Hoyeke, J. A. Sexsmith, M.P., and Lt.-Col. Miller. On Tuesday night there will be a mass meeting in Norwood. Addresses will be given by Lt.-Col. Birdsall, whose son is with the 2nd Battalion in France, Dan O'Connell, Major Cameron, A.M.C., and Lieut. Wilkins of Norwood, invalided home from the front.

At the Hastings meeting on Wednesday the complete list of speakers has not been arranged. Rev. Jas. Rollins of St. Andrew's Church will be one of the speakers.

On Thursday night a meeting will be held in Havelock, at which Judge Hoyeke, J. A. Sexsmith, M.P., and F. D. Kerr will speak.

On Friday night the people of Otonabee have arranged a patriotic meeting in Keene at which the 57th Regiment Band of Peterborough will be in attendance. The speakers will be Judge Hoyeke, Lt.-Col. Johnston of the 3rd Dragoons, F. D. Kerr and Warden Kindred.

PRESENTATION AND ADDRESS

To Mr. Harry Castle Who Is Leaving For The Front

An enjoyable evening was spent last evening at the home of Mr. Harry Castle when the men of the yard department of the Canadian General Electric Company gathered together for the purpose of saying farewell to their foreman, Mr. Harry Castle, who had heard the call from over the sea.

Some excellent solos were rendered by the Misses Palmer, Foster and Victor and also Mr. Hopwood and Mr. Gerrard while the Misses Olive and Minnie Rayner and Mr. O'Neil contributed some fine recitations. During the course of the evening Mr. Castle was presented with a purse by Mr. George Buckley, while the appended address was read by Mr. Hopwood.

The Address

To Mr. Castle. The fortune which has committed to a hostile nation the care of our country and freedom and the safeguarding of our homes, has moved us to call upon our number to nobly respond to the last call. Knowing you as we do, we were not surprised when we learned of your enlistment, but we are indeed sorry to be separated from one who has been such an esteemed friend and fellow foreman for the past several years.

In wishing you good health, God speed and a safe return, we ask you to accept this small token as a mark of our appreciation of your goodness and worth, and we sincerely hope that the absent days have occasion to be the most pleasant you have ever spent.

Signed on behalf of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, Canadian General Electric Company.

Excursion on Monday

Capt. Hall, secretary, offers for a summer and new trip for an excursion on Monday, August 30th, has been accepted by the St. Andrews Parish society. The steamer Otonabee will leave the Georgian Street Wharf Monday morning at 10 o'clock calling at East City and Street Railway Wharf. Fare for the round trip, 50c proceeds to be devoted to the funds of the above society. Take a day off and help along the good cause. 24-4t

Major Hounsell Is In Command Temporarily

57th Officer Takes Charge of The 80th Battalion Men—Capt. R. P. Watt of The 57th Regiment Has Been Appointed to The Battalion and Will Go on Duty at Once.

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

Orders were received last evening from headquarters, Kingston, that Major R. T. Hounsell of the 57th Regiment is to have temporary command of the 80th Battalion men here until the officers of the new battalion are announced. Major Hounsell whose condition of health unfits him for overseas service will be of great assistance in the training operations, and he will have charge until the appointments are made. Capt. R. P. Watt of No. 2 company of the 57th Regiment, a popular and hard working officer, will be appointed to the new battalion and orders have been received that he is to report for duty at once. Major Hounsell was on duty at the armouries this morning.

The detachment drilled this morning but had the usual Saturday half holiday this afternoon. There will be no church parade to-morrow.

Tickets for the 80th Battalion supper and concert in Victoria Hall on Thursday night next are selling fast. The soldier boy promises a big evening's entertainment and expect to greet all their friends on that occasion.

Some kind hearted citizen can make a hit with the infantry boys by presenting them with a football for use in spare moments. The parade ground in front of the armouries will make a good football ground.

Sergt.-Major E. T. Rice and Sergt. Fred Shurety of the 9th C.M.R. are home on leave from Barriefield camp.

Capt. W. C. Ackerman of the 24th Field Battery has seventeen recruits ready for the next draft for the 33rd Battery and that number will probably be increased before to-night. Eight recruits were accepted yesterday for this unit. Among them was Pat. the O'Toole, brother of Gunner Joseph O'Toole who died of wounds received in the recent battle of Ypres.

Lieut. Wilfrid Stratton of the 80th Battalion is spending a few days in Barriefield camp this week-end.

Of the recruits to-day for the 33rd Battalion now waiting orders to join the battery at Barriefield fourteen were born in Canada, two in England and one in the United States.

Lieut. J. Ewart Stratton leaves to-morrow night for Montreal whence he will sail for England to report to the War Office for instructions. He has been appointed to a commission in the R. G. Engineers.

Mr. S. J. Lockett, secretary of the Speakers' Patriotic League, is in Kingston to-day on business in connection with the campaign.

License Inspector Produces Evidence to Show That He Was Not on The "Free" List of The Review

The appended item which appears in last night's Review is self-explanatory:

Doesn't Want the News

The Review has received a number of offers to the credit of Joseph Stewart, the license inspector, who has ordered us to cut his name off our list of subscribers.

In reply to the above Mr. Joseph Stewart, the person referred to, has never been on the free list of the Review, and has never received a copy of the paper. The paper was sent to him regularly and was conducted by the Review some months ago. The date on the back of the paper is April 20th, 1915. The correspondence is as follows:

Receipt From Canvasser.

In the Review Waiting Room
Received from Mr. Jos. Stewart
$4 Advance Subscriptions
Amount $4.00 for 12 months

(Signed) Maude Bogue, Canvasser
Paid Two Subscriptions.

In addition to this Mr. Stewart states that once this year he called to the Review office and paid Mr. Dave Boyle another two dollars, stating that he had not paid out of the last $4 collected. Mr. Stewart is positive that he paid this $2 in the Review office, but Mr. Boyle says that he was in the Review office and received no money.

A HOME MATTER.

Though the war absorbs, or should absorb most of our energies, yet we have home interests to consider, and we must pay some deference to the injunction "business as usual." Not only business as usual in private and commercial life, but in civic life.

We are fighting to preserve our liberties, in order to keep Canada a country worth living in in this regard. But we cannot live on liberty alone. While we are protecting our home, we must strive to make it a home worth keeping.

To this end we must keep domestic conditions in good condition. We are improving our streets by paving and in other ways. This is done by the civic authorities. But our forefathers have improved and beautified our streets with trees, without help—but often with hindrance—from the civic authorities.

Now when we are improving and beautifying our streets with pavements, to be "trodden underfoot of men," we should consider the improvement or preservation of our street tree growth, which shelters our heads and delights our eyes.

The matter, of street tree care, in which our city authorities take little interest — and then sometimes the wrong kind of interest—is as important as the paving of our streets in which they put so much interest and so much of our money. Street paving swells our tax bills like balloons, but improvement by street trees is comparatively inexpensive. So far our street trees, our pride and our gain, have not cost the city authorities a penny, except for their destruction and ill-directed attempts at trimming.

It is, therefore, in this view, timely to suggest that the city does not take an attitude towards our street trees, that is in the interests of the public. The city sends men to hack our street trees in a reckless and unprofessional fashion.

Has the city a right to touch a twig of our street trees? The Examiner is advised that the law provides that before the city can cut down or remove a street tree it must first pass a by-law, which requires the city to give the owner or occupant of grounds opposite which street trees grow, ten days' notice, before destroying a tree.

If the city has passed such required by-law, it has not carried it out. Not only does not the joint owner of the tree get notice, but he gets impudence and contempt of his rights. The city acts with our street trees without regard to the rights of the owner as conferred by law.

The law evidently regards the owner or occupant of lands opposite which trees are planted as the owner of street trees, especially if he has planted them himself. The law requires that the by-law which alone empowers the city to deal with street trees, shall provide for compensation to the owner of the trees—the trees opposite his property — for the destruction or removal of trees—and the law further provides that the city cannot remove a street tree against the wishes of the owner, in cases where such tree stands thirty feet distant from another tree.

We are informed that the law in respect to trees is as stated. If this is so, it is plain that our city authorities are not only dealing with our street trees contrary to law, and without legal authority, but contrary to the spirit of care and respect for the public interest, that should be possessed by, and animate, worthy representauves of the people.

Is it not time that the city should be brought to take a more intelligent and thoughtful interest in our street trees?

The aldermen spend weeks and weeks, and hold countless meetings over laying a few furlongs of street pavement, that can be ripped up and put down again in a day if not satisfactory.

But without a second's consideration, without a meeting, without a word of discussion, without legal authority, somebody "off his own bat" sends forth to slay. Somebody sends out somebody to cut down or mutilate street trees that have taken half a century to grow and cannot be replaced without another half century of growth.

Isn't it time that the attitude of the civic authorities towards our street trees should be changed? Isn't it time that the city cease unlawfully applying German methods of destruction and indifference to the rights of the people, to the treatment, or maltreatment, of our street trees?

Our street trees are as dear in their way to the man who has planted them and watched them grow, to be a delight to him and others, as is the son or daughter born to him that he has seen grow up to be the pride of his life and an ornament to society.

Our city fathers should come, or be brought to regard God's beautiful handiwork, that spreads its leafy glory and shelter above our heads, with as much care and attention as they do the mud under our feet.

But so far they are of the earth, earthy.

NOT THEN AND NOW—BUT NOW.

The Amherst Guardian, Nova Scotia, feels called upon, under the heading "1911 and 1915," to say the following:

In the Dominion elections of 1911 the Liberal party was denounced from many a platform and in many a newspaper as disloyal. Though the Liberals were defeated in the fight they had popular majorities in five of the nine provinces and in the three Prairie Provinces their net majority was nearly twenty thousand. Moreover, in each of those three provinces the Liberals have been endorsed since 1911 in provincial contests. If Liberalism was disloyal, then apparently disloyal citizens were in the majority on the prairies. Figures recently given out at Ottawa by the Militia Department show that up to the end of June slightly more than one per cent. of the total population of Canada had enlisted for service overseas. In Alberta the percentage was 3.73 and in Saskatchewan and Manitoba it was 2.78. The prairies led all Canada. One set of facts provides interesting comment upon the other.

The Liberal party has no need to defend its loyalty; in face of much other other proof than the above. But comparisons are odious. Especially now are comparisons of relative loyalty untimely. All of us who are right in head and heart, are loyally one in aim and effort. In this hour of war there is no Grit and Tory; there is only the loyal and the patriotic Canadian aiming to do the best for the country and Empire. As Hon. Mr. Crothers truly said at the recent Conservative convention in Peterborough

"All party interests sink into insignificance in face of the tremendous peril and tremendous duty we are facing."

The man or party who at this time turns aside from the stern work at our hand, to exploit or serve the comparatively petty and insifinificant interests of party is inviting the hampering of the discharge of national duty. Any man who would at this time seek to inject into our national life the virus of party spirit; drive in the dividing wedge of party politics in the form of a general election or otherwise, is as traitorously aiding the enemy as the Hun who would blow up armouries, or do any act that would prevent Canadians from doing their whole duty unitedly, independently of party considerations, working to lend every ounce of aid that will help bring victory and hasten the ending of the terrible carnage and destruction attendant upon the war.

As our duty is not comparative but positive; so must our loyalty be not comparative but positive. We must forget party and only remember that we are Canadians bound by every consideration of loyalty and patriotism and duty, to second the efforts of the brave men we have sent to the firing line and strengthen them by sending more.

When a recruit offers, we may examine his teeth and take his chest measurement; but nobody asks the brand of his politics.

Away with politics till we have straightened out the tangle of the times, when we have fought and beaten the Hun. We shall then, and not till then, fight for the interests of our country in the political arena according to our political lights.

We shall only then have something to fight for, if in a greater fight we have preserved something worth fighting for—only then we shall have kept a free country and all it stands for.

We shall not have that if we permit the German to win "world domination" as he aims to do. If we don't prevent that we shall be saved the trouble of governing ourselves. We shall be under the heel of German militarism. We shall not govern ourselves, but be governed by force—we shall not have a word to say.

Is not freedom to be men; is not freedom from German tyranny something worth fighting for?

Every able-bodied Canadian is called to fight for himself, for his home, for his country, and the liberties and free institutions we now possess.

THE GREAT CAUSE FOR ALL.

We must act as the Canadians of half a century ago acted — not as theorists, but as practical men, dealing with events as D'Arcy McGee said the idealist and the practical man combined, the man of the same type as Lloyd George. As idealists we must hate the Prussian tyranny. As practical Canadians we must work and fight against it, laying our lesser antagonisms aside until we are sure that the worlds' great cause is won.—Toronto Star.

WHAT BRITAIN HAS DONE.

What would have become of us, even after the battle of the Marne, if the German fleet had driven us from the seas and had blockaded us; if Germany had been able to revictual herself in America and elsewhere? Britain goes to war. Immediately the German fleet is used to confine itself to its own territorial waters. Germany is blockaded and cut off from the whole world. She is cut off from countries which supplied her with cotton, metals and munitions of all sorts, from countries, which, too, are one million of her reservists who are unable to join. Our army is reinforced by an army which is being made up slowly but surely, of all the best fighting material, not only in Britain but in Canada, South Africa and Australia, and our financial power, which, in the twelfth month of war is capable of raising, without inconvenience to herself, a loan of $300 million dollars.—La Guerre Sociale Paris, France.

Brave Story of Battered Belgium; Her Wrongs and Rights to Redress

Special Cable to The Examiner:

We have received for publication the following striking letter from Gilbert K. Chesterton, the English man of letters:

I hope you will grant me space to say a few words about the Belgians still in Belgium. The admirable efforts of the National Committee for Relief in Belgium are going a long way to avert famine, but if the million-and-a-half destitute Belgians are to be kept alive the National Committee must have yet further support. The only conceivable cause of doubt in the matter must lie in a mere weariness in well-doing, produced not by any intellectual difficulty, but by such wholly unintellectual things as time and fatigue. I think, therefore, the best way of preventing any possible neglect of so great a matter is to repeat once more the great truths upon which rested the whole original claim, not so much on our sympathy as on our common honesty. The simplicity and enormity of the Belgian story can best be set forth, perhaps, in four truisms, all toweringly self-evident.

Badness of the Story.

First. Of course, the mere badness of the story is almost too big to be held in the mind. There have been stories of a woman or a child actually robbed of reason for life by the mere ocular shock of some revolting cruelty done in their presence. There was really a dancer of something of the kind paralyzing our protest against the largest and, by the help of God, the last of the crimes of the Prussian Kings. The onlookers might have been struck into a sort of gibbering imbecility, and even amiability, by the full and indefensible finality of the foul stroke. We had no machines that could measure the stunning directness of the blow from hell. We could hardly realize an enormous public act which the actor did not wish to excuse, but only to execute. Yet such an act was the occupation of Belgium; almost the only act in history for which there was quite simply and literally nothing to be said. Bad history is the whole basis of Prussia; but even in bad history the Prussians could find no precedent and no palliation; and the more intelligent Prussians did not try.

A few were so feeble-minded as to say they had found dangerous documents in Brussels, as if what they had done could possibly be excused by things they did not know when they did it. This almost piteous lapse in argument was, however, covered up by the cleverer Prussians as quickly as might be. They preferred to stand without a rag of reason on them than with such a rag as that. Before we come to the monstrous material suffering, there is in the existing situation an abstract reason, nay, an abstract insanity, which the brain of man must not bear. A night-mare must not abide to the end. The tiniest trace of Prussian victory that remains will make us think of something which is not to be thought of; of something like the victory of the beasts over mankind.

Prehistoric History.

Second. It must be remembered that this murder has been done upon people of such proximity and familiarity that there cannot be any mistake about the matter. There is some shadowy justification for the comparative indifference to the wrongs of very remote peoples; for it is not easy for us to guess how much slavery shocks a negro or cannibalism a cannibal. But the innkeepers and shopkeepers of Ostend felt exactly as the innkeepers and shopkeepers of Dover would feel. We have to imagine a prehistoric cavalry coming suddenly upon a scene which was civilized and almost commonplace. Imagine tigers breaking out of the Zoological Gardens and eating all the people in Albany Street; imagine Red Indians exhibited at Olympia literally scalping every passer-by from that place to Hammersmith Broadway; imagine Jack the Ripper crowned king of Whitechapel and conducting his executions in broad daylight outside the Tube station at Aldgate; imagine as much as you can of what is violent and contradictory in an overturn of all modern life by troglodytes, and you are still falling short of the fearful Belgian scene in that familiar Belgian scenery. It is idle to talk of exaggerations or misrepresentations about a case so close to us. Chinese tortures may not be quite so fantastic as travellers tell us; Siberia may not be so desolate as its fugitives say it is, but we could no more invent such a massacre in Belgium than we could a massacre in Bathurst. The things of shameless shame that have been done or something worse than prodigies, worse than nightmares, worse than devilries; they are facts.

Belgium Stands Alone.

Third. This people we have heard of daily have endured this unheard of thing; and endured it for us. There are countless cases for comparison among the bewildering and heart-rending by-products of this war; but this is not a case for compassion. This is a case for that mere working minimum of a sense of honour that makes us repay a poor man who has advanced his last penny to post a letter we have forgotten to stamp. In this respect Belgium stands alone; and the claims even of other Allies may well stand aside till she is paid to the uttermost farthing. There has been self-sacrifice everywhere else, but it was self-sacrifice of individuals, each for his own country, the Serbian dying for Serbia, or the Italian for Italy. But the Belgian did not merely die for Belgium. Belgium died for Europe. Not only was the soldier sacrificed for the nation; the nation was sacrificed for mankind. It is a sacrifice which is, I think, quite unique even among Christians; and quite inconceivably among pagans. If we even privately utter a murmur, or even privately grudge a penny for binding the wounds of so solitary and exceptional a martyr, we ourselves shall be something almost as solitary and exceptional. We shall, perhaps, be nearest to the state of that unspeakable sociologist who persuaded his wife to partake of a simultaneous suicide; and then himself cheerfully lived on.

Butchers of the Nation.

Fourth. If there be anyone on this earth who does not find the final success of such crime more than the mind can bear; if there be anyone who does not feel it as the more graphic, since it walks among the tramway lines and lamp-posts of a life like our own; if there be anyone who does not feel that to be caught napping about Belgium is like being caught robbing one's mother on her death-bed; there still remains a sort of brutal compassion for bodily pain, which has been half-admitted here and there even by the oppressors themselves. If we do not do a great deal more even than we have already done, it may yet be said of us that we left it to the very butchers of this nation to see that it did not bleed to death.

Make a small slit with a knife all round apples before baking them. This will prevent them from bursting.

Edison Victim of Acid Spray Accident

Examiner Special:

NEW YORK, Aug. 28.—Thomas A. Edison narrowly escaped losing his eyesight yesterday when his face was accidentally sprayed with a solution of potash with which he was experimenting in his laboratory, at Silver Lake, near Newark, N.J.

The haste in which he bathed his face and eyes in water and the acid that first aid as applied to him by a physician who reached him just after the accident, saved him from serious consequences, it was said.

Owing to the fact that the European war has made the importation of carbolic acid from Germany impossible, Mr. Edison has erected two plants at Silver Lake for the manufacture of that chemical.

Recently there has been complaint from the residents near the plant about the odours of the acid and Mr. Edison has been working constantly to find a means of abating the alleged nuisance. He was engaged in the task yesterday with a veteran assistant, Frederick Ott, when the accident occurred.

Mr. Edison had placed a solution of potash in a large iron container which was equipped with a spigot. Fortunately, the solution was a mild one. Mr. Edison was standing near the container when Mr. Ott turned the spigot releasing the contents. Mr. Edison did not know Mr. Ott was going to release the potash and Mr. Ott did not realize that Mr. Edison was near.

The pressure was strong and the potash solution came out of the spigot in the form of a spray. The spray splashed over Mr. Edison's face and got into both his eyes.

The inventor quickly threw his hands to his face and, though blinded for the time, made for a large basin filled with filtered water. Mr. Edison bathed his face and opened with eyes and washed them carefully.

Meantime, Mr. Ott communicated with the physician, who is kept at the plant for just such emergencies. The latter responded quickly and Mr. Edison's face and eyes were washed with an alleviative.

News spread about the plant and neighbourhood that Mr. Edison had been blinded by the accident and there was great excitement. The excitement was not allayed when Mr. Edison summoned his automobile and with Mr. Ott drove to his home in West Orange.

By the time he arrived there he had completely recovered his sight, although his eyes smarted. Mr. Edison and members of the inventor's family were excited when he arrived at home, but Mr. Edison said that he was all right and refused to let Mrs. Edison summon a specialist from New York city. Despite the accident, Mr. Edison worked until a late hour last night in his laboratory at home, Mrs. Edison said.

She said that beyond the smarting his eyes are all right.

It was said at the plant last night that had the solution been stronger, that Mr. Edison would undoubtedly have lost the sight in both eyes.

"AND A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM."

ARE values in our community SHRINKING? Is our neighboring town getting AHEAD faster than ours? Are we making a POOR bargain? Have WE cause to WISH we had done differently? Then this old familiar picture (one of the best known in the world) may start us thinking on the right track. HOME values are bound to SHRINK, if our policy of trading is WRONG. We only need to borrow the wisdom of a child to appreciate the value of trading at home. Patronize the Home Merchant.

MOWING DOWN THE ENEMY

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, Aug. 29.—The Crown Prince of Germany has opened upon another of his futile attempts to break the French line, and his latest effort is apparently directed towards the isolation of the forces of Verdun. His attempts, however, have failed, although accompanied by the usual wholesale sacrifice of the German soldiers. An artilleryman of the French Army tells how the French 75's saved the situation when the line was strained almost to the breaking point.

"After a terrible night bombardment the trenches were untenable, yet our men stood firm, and at wait till the Germans poisoned the air with their asphyxiating shells that our resistance weakened. Directly they saw our men waver the Germans hurled their troops in compact masses against our lines. The Chalade defile was black with them.

"There is not the least doubt that at this moment the Crown Prince thought he had pierced our front, and that the Chalons-Verdun railway was at last within his grasp. But he reckoned without our '7' gun.

Bloody Lanes of Death.

"The Boches had lessened the distance between themselves and our masked batteries to a couple of hundred yards when our gunners let them have it. I can only compare the effect to giants mowing grass with mighty scythes. Each sweep opened bloody lanes. The Germans attempted to bear down by sheer weight of numbers, but our guns only thundered the more terrible—it was a mad and hideous spectacle. The 75's had the last word.

"By this time our infantry had recovered itself. The marines who covered themselves with glory during these days of fighting rivalled with the fast chasseurs in dash and impetuosity, and by a series of counter attacks recovered all the ground which the poison gas had forced us to abandon.

"The Germans, who in their furious onslaught had got to within five miles of the coveted railway, lost all the ground they had gained, and left behind them over 8,000 dead.

Twelve-Year-Old Boy Who Was a Stowaway Aboard a Troopship Was in Thick of the Fighting

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, Aug. 28.—Clothed in the uniform of Canada's Expeditionary Forces, three figures passed slowly down Bay street yesterday to the recruiting station of the Queen's Own Rifles in the Bay street fire hall. It was plainly evident that they were veterans of the present terrible war, and the hundreds of people on the thoroughfare paused for a moment to watch the trio as they wended their way through the crowds.

It was a unique sight because one of the three in uniform was a mere lad of twelve. One of the men leaned heavily on a stout cane, but the other two walked erect, and none paid any attention to the gazing throngs. The boy attracted the most notice, and many wondered why it was that he was garbed in the regulation active service uniform. They would have been surprised to know that he was as much of a hero as his two companions.

The fact is that the lad, Peter Rutledge, from "somewhere in Nova Scotia," has been an unauthorized soldier of the British Empire since last October, when the Allan liner "Virginian" left Quebec with a shipload of Canadian fighters. His three older brothers had already enlisted, and had crossed the Atlantic, and the boy was all alone, because his mother had just died. He sneaked on board the boat, but was soon discovered and was put ashore. A few minutes later, however, he bribed the owner of a motor boat and he soon scrambled aboard the troopship on the offside. He rushed below and became a stowaway. Again he was discovered, but it was then too late to put him off, because the liner was on her voyage.

Regiment's Mascot.

The troops on board included the 3rd Battalion, which is classed as a Toronto unit. Members of this battalion made him a mascot of the regiment, and he was outfitted in the King's uniform. He proceeded with the battalion to Salisbury Plain and spent the winter in camp. During this training season his chief occupation consisted of dodging the officers in command. Eventually the first contingent was sent to France and Rutledge went, too. Right into the trenches he went last February, and became one of the boys in the firing line. He was enjoying the time of his life, although his friends about him were falling from German bullets. Finally came a hot engagement and one of his grown-up pals, Pte. Robt. Fulton, became a sieve from the Huns' bullets. Another time Pte. Thos. Norris rescued Fulton under great difficulties and was himself wounded. Then the three of them were taken from the trenches. These were the three who walked down Bay Street.

Boy Tells of Deeds.

Pte. Fulton was for five years a member of the 10th Royal Grenadiers before he enlisted for active service at the outbreak of the war. Before coming to Canada, Fulton was a member of the 1st Royal Scots. Pte. Thos. Norris was a member of the Queen's Own Rifles and he has just been made a corporal. In addition Private or at least Corporal, Norris has been recommended for a D.C.M. for distinguished bravery in saving a water waggon under heavy fire. After month spent in English hospitals the two wounded men were ordered home and with them came young Rutledge. They have arrived in Toronto and they are still great chums. Occasionally Rutledge "gets in wrong" by telling tales of brave deeds accomplished, but otherwise, the trio are happy together.

The three veterans are engaged in recruiting work at the present time. Corporal Norris is one of those attached to the Q.O.R. station on Bay Street, while the boy is generally to be found at the Armouries. Frequently they attend recruiting rallies where young Rutledge invariably gets cheers from the crowd. However he disdainfully ignores the salutes from other kids and prefers to mingle with real soldiers. He hopes to return to the front some day when he wants to be officially recognized. He lives at 213 Ontario street with his accepted brother, Corporal Norris.

PRISONERS EMPLOYED ON CONSTRUCTION WORK WRITES PETERBORO' BOY

A local friend has received the following letter from Pte. Dave Cummings, one of the Peterborough boys who was captured at St. Julien

Pte. D. Cummings, No. 668,
Prisoner of War,
Company 2, Barracks D,
Giessen, Germany.

Dear Friend,—I received your most welcome letter yesterday and am very glad to hear that you are well. We left Giessen last Monday for work a little ways out from Frankfort, about 80 of us, on construction work down the river, and like it not too bad. eW are allowed to bathe in the river every night and feel fine after work. The two men here who have charge of the gang I'm in are fine fellows and treat us good. I got a letter from mother and five from you altogether. I received your two parcels and they were splendid. I also received the money O.K. It is three months yesterday since we were captured, on the 24th of April, and the time seems to have gone very quickly. You were saying in your last letter that you had some German sausage? Well we get it often here, and also cheese, Limburger, and perhaps you have tasted it.

We are allowed to write a letter here every Sunday instead of the usual allowance.

Your sincere friend,
Dave Cummings.

GALLANT DEEDS OF A V. C. MAN

(From the Montreal Standard)

Glasgow has just given a rousing reception to Harry May, the first man of the city to win the Victoria Cross. When he arrived at the Central Station he was overwhelmed with congratulations.

On the platform were gathered a company of friends of the soldier. His father and mother, wearing their roosiest smiles, stood quietly there. Who could fathom their thoughts? They knew their son had performed one of the bravest feats of the war, and surely they had the right to feel exultant when Harry's name was mentioned.

And the first act of the hero as he stepped down from the carriage was to crush his way past outstretched hands and embrace his mother. There was a tear in her eye, but it was one of the joy, and soon her features were wreathed in smiles as she watched her boy being clapped on the shoulder.

Before and After Mons.

Private May, in his own words, has given an exclusive account of the deed for which he has been awarded the Victoria Cross.

"I am 30 years of age," he said, "and enlisted in the Scottish Rifles in 1902. We proceeded to South Africa at the conclusion of the campaign. My only experience out there was to take part in the Klip River manoeuvres, which embraced sham fighting, etc.

"As a reservist I was recalled to the colours. The first battalion left Maryhill Barracks for active service on 14th August.

"The retreat from Mons could hardly have been otherwise, for all the world now knows that the Expeditionary Force was outnumbered by 8 or 10 to 1.

Missing for Ten Days.

"At Le Cateau the Cameronians were ordered to take up a rearguard position. In three days we marched over 100 miles, with no rations except what we could pick up on the way.

"I was 'missing' for ten days and underwent many hardships. How I escaped being taken a prisoner I cannot imagine, but the fact that I had a wife and family at home helped a lot to keep me cheery when things looked black.

"I had heard that my brother's regiment, the K.O.S.B.'s, were near that they were in the thick of the fighting. My brother, who was younger than me, was killed three days before I won the Victoria Cross. I never had a chance to see him.

Forced to Retire.

"We had a fortnight's rest in a little village, and then the command was given that the whole of the British force was to withdraw to Flanders. We could only march when dark, and five nights we trampled. After that we entrained at a village near St. Omar when word was sent on that we were to proceed with all speed to La Bontillerie. We were wanted to fill a gap in the line. Immediately we arrived we proceeded to dig ourselves in. My platoon, along with several others, was sent on in front for duty.

"There was a ditch we had instructions to hold, and our officer, Lieut. D. A. H. Graham, took us carefully under command. After we had possession of it for a considerable time the Germans came on in increasing numbers. Our officer told us we would have to retire, as the force was too heavy to contend with. There was 'cover' on our right flank and he gave orders that we were to file along the ditch in this direction.

He Dropped Dead.

"When we got to the end of the ditch we were ordered to open fire on the Germans. They were only 7 yards distant from us. With the exception of one many Lance-Corporal Lawton, all came to the right side of the ditch. He went to the left and a bullet brought him down. Lieut. Graham saw him fall, and called our attention to him.

"At that time I didn't think of the risk I was running. I only knew that a comrade was lying exposed to the deadly fire of machine gun and rifle. Then I darted across the ditch, a distance of ten yards. I shouted to my two chums to follow.

"I reached the fallen man first, pulled off his equipment and dragged him to his feet. Then the first of my two chums came alongside, and one of them took Lawton's arm, while the other looked after the equipment.

"We started off. The bullets were coming along steadily. When we had gone ten yards or so I experienced a sensation I'll never forget. The wounded man was struck with a bullet in his back. I could hear the thud of it. He dropped dead at our feet.

Officer Hit.

"Gently we laid him down and another had we done so when one of my mates was struck on the body. He threw up his arms, and fell on the top of the dead man. I tried to [illegible] but without success. As I stood there I wondered what to do—whether to lie down and have a shot at the enemy or make an effort to return to safety.

"Just then I saw Lieutenant Graham, who had come out with a revolver. He had followed us up when a bullet through the leg prevented him coming further. Then I knew my duty.

"I am sure every other man in our platoon would have done the same as I did. Lieutenant Graham was so kind to us. On our marches, when we were without rations, he would buy biscuits and chocolates, and send them to the men.

"I reached him and shouted to a comrade to give me a hand. Then both of us carried and assisted the Lieutenant a distance of 300 or 400 yards.

"It was a nerve-racking journey that, and the other chap was brought down with a bullet.

Chums Shot Down.

"I was now alone with my Lieutenant, and I determined that he would be carried to safety after what we had undergone. Corporal Taylor was near at hand, and he came out and said to me 'Sling him on my shoulders.'

"Just as the rescued officer was hoisted up a bullet went through the corporals' arm, and he dropped his burden.

"Of course, the officer came down, too, and as he lay on the ground he implored me to leave him and save myself. But I refused to desert him, and after a stiff pull I dragged him behind a trench. Then I went for the stretcher-bearers, and was happy to see him carried in not long afterwards."

Toronto Alderman Lays a Charge

Complains That Bernard Laster Threatened to Kill Him Over The Telephone.

TORONTO, Aug 28—A long standing difference of opinion between Ald. Louis M. Singer and Bernard Lastar, resulted in Lastar being brought to court yesterday morning on a charge of threatening to kill the alderman.

The alleged threat was made over the telephone, and as Alderman Singer's hearing is good, he became alarmed. It seems that some time ago, Mr. Singer got judgment against Lastar over a real estate transaction. This legal triumph, it is said, was followed by a request from Lastar that the alderman settle another little matter of $600 in the reduced figure of $200, and this being turned down was given as the cause of the threat to kill.

"I am willing to grant bail to Lastar, but he must undertake to keep the peace toward Mr. Singer," said Crown Attorney Curry. "I don't want Mr. Singer killed, and the city put to the expense of another election."

"Quite so," agreed Col. Denison. "We must practice economy."

Lastar, who pleaded no guilty to the charge, will reappear on September 1st.

How to Lose Your Tan, Freckles or Wrinkles

A day's motoring, an afternoon on the tennis ground or golf links, a sunbath on the beach or exposure on a sea trip, often brings on a deep tan or vivid crimson or more perplexing still, a vigorous crop of freckles. A very necessary thing then is mercolized wax, which removes tan, redness or freckles quite easily. It literally peels off the affected skin just a little at a time, so there's no hurt or injury. As the skin comes off in almost invisible flaky particles, no trace of the treatment is shown. Get an ounce of mercolized wax at your druggist's and use this nightly as you would cold cream, washing it off mornings. In a week or so you will have an entirely new skin, beautifully clear, transparent and of a most delicate whiteness.

Wrinkles so apt to form at this season may be easily and quickly removed by bathing the face in a solution of powdered saxolite, 1 oz., dissolved in witch hazel, ½ pint. This is not only a valuable astringent, but has a marked tonic effect upon the skin tissues, making it firm and plump.

HEADACHE?

Thousands of persons who have never known a day's sickness in any other form are subject to frequent attacks of Headache that almost drive them mad.

Whatever the nature may be and the cause, the immediate condition that produces the pain is a congestion or filling up of the blood vessels of the brain with blood, thus causing a pressure on the brain cells and nerve filaments.

In treating all forms of Headache the first thing to do is to relieve the congestion of the blood vessels of the brain. Abbey's Effervescent Salt in laxative doses does this promptly.

Sold everywhere at 25c. and 60c.

Full blooded people who are subject to frequent attacks of Headache can be entirely relieved by taking laxative doses of the Salt every morning. Headaches from Indigestion and Biliousness are also entirely banished by continuing the use of the Salt until the normal action of the liver and stomach is restored.

Sold by F. L. Payne and McDermid & Jury.

The Estate of Late Mrs. E. W. Cox

Mother, Aunt, Brother and Sister-in-Law Are Heirs—Number of Bequests Made to Her Friends—Estate May Total a Million

According to the will of the late Mrs. E. W. Cox, which is now in the hands of the National Trust Co., her estate is to be divided into four parts and to be equally divided among her mother, her aunt, Mrs. Chas. Brown, her brother, Charles Brown, and her sister-in-law, Mrs. Charles Brown. It is understood that the estate is worth between $500,000 and $1,000,000 and among the stipulations in the will is one that her residence and all her effects be sold and turned into cash.

After the death of her husband, Mrs. Cox made a will in which she appointed Messrs. F. T. Malone and George Little who was Senator Cox's private secretary, as executors, but since that time she had made a new will in which the National Trust Co. were appointed sole executors.

In his will Senator Cox willed the residue of his estate to his two sons, E. W. and H. C. Cox. On the death of Edward W. Cox, his wife had a life interest in his share, but with her death the elder son's share now reverts to the younger son, Mr. Herbert C. Cox, who is the only male heir.

Personal Bequests.

When the late E. W. Cox died, however, he left a fairly large estate, and when the will is probated it may show a valuation close to $1,000,000, and in disposing of this estate in her will Mrs. E. W. Cox provides for her immediate relatives. It is also understood that before her death she wrote a letter to her executors in which she makes many bequests to her numerous personal friends, which is an evidence of her charitable disposition. The instructions in this letter, it is understood, are being carried out. According to the letter, certain instructions are given to her housekeeper.

The estate of which Mrs. Cox died possessed consists chiefly of Dunlop Tire shares and Imperial Bank stock, as well as many other excellent securities.

AWARDED SIX CENTS IN SLANDER CASE

Examiner Special:

DETROIT, Aug 28—Attorney Frank R. Martin sued John A. Kane for six cents and won before Justice Marschner. The fact that the costs and time involved in the case amounted to several hundred times the six cents did not detract from the joy of victory.

Martin sighed with satisfaction as he jingled the six pennies which Kane took from his pocket with great reluctance.

Several months ago Martin was retained by Kane's wife to represent her in a suit for divorce against her husband. Some time late Kane, among divers things, said to Martin, "You are a cur, you have ruined my home."

Martin started suit for slander and the jury awarded him six cents. Kane refused to pay. Martin then started justice court action and the verdict was in his favor.

How Fat Folks May Become Thin

By Elizabeth Thomas

Perhaps you are suddenly becoming stout, or it may be that you have been putting on weight for years. In either case the cause is the same lack of oxygen-carrying power of the blood. The trouble occurs in adults of both sexes and all ages, but it may be overcome very easily and without any of the privations that most people imagine necessary to reduce their weight.

Simply go to your druggist and get some oil of orticne capsules. Take one after each meal and before going to bed. Weigh yourself so as to know just how fast you are losing weight. Wonderful results have been accomplished by this inexpensive recipe, but be sure to get the genuine oil of orticne in capsule form. It is sold only in original sealed packages. Any large druggist can supply you, or a large box will be sent on receipt of $2.00. Address D. J. Lafler Drug Co., Box 240, Montreal, Can.

Evangelist G. M. Sharpe, who will speak twice to-morrow in the big Hunter street Tabernacle—at 3 p. m. to women only, and at 7 p.m. the regular service. To-morrow will be the closing of the campaign.

SOCIETY AT THE BAZAARS

Sweet Charity in Fashion's Name —Striped Silks Favoured

New York, Aug. 28.

When we think of bazaars, we naturally conjure up pictures of fancy work in the name of charity, even the wholesome odour of cruellers and the picturesque whiteness of cake. Mrs. Thompson on the corner made a specialty of her bazaars have outgrown this home atmosphere and bodies have become bazaars of fashion. No longer do we attend to buy Christmas gifts and cookies and more properly to learn what to wear and when to wear it—or just have to stock our own new dress.

Fashion Fetes in the Name of Charity.

Newport is the setting for some of these bazaars. Here on the spacious lawns of country homes, mannequins display the very latest modes from Paris, vying in smartness with the women who come to see them. There are tableaux and grand promenades, and best of all you can sip tea and view them with a conscience free from guilt, for your entrance fee goes to sweet charity.

A Costume of Satin-Striped Faille Showing the New Gauntlet Cuff and Pleated Skirt.

The latter part of last week the bazaar of the season was held at the home of one of the leaders of the Newport set. In artistic tableaux, backed by Grecian summer houses, all the summer modes were reviewed and predictions made for the coming season.

Striped Faille a Favoured Fabric.

Every dress showed at least two materials, heavy faille silk was a favoured fabric. One tall blonde mannequin wore a dress of striped satin and grosgrain silk which was particularly new and attractive. Its very simplicity baffles description, it charmed by the clever use of the stripes. The skirt had a pleated panel section, kilted one might say, but it was straight and laid in deep folds from the hip to the bottom. This was cut with the stripe cross-wise, while the coat, waist, and cuffs had the stripes straight up and down. There was a sheer vest and Quaker collar of crisp white Swiss, and sleeves of black grenadine crepe, having a striking contrast with the cuffs of silk.

Skirts Short and Shorter Still.

There seems to be [illegible] about the short skirt. The ones just made for the [illegible] were with a three inch [illegible] and the [illegible] was so short that at least one [illegible] the ankles showed between the edge of the skirt and the [illegible]. The skirt indeed is one of the interesting [illegible] of the season. [illegible] short to [illegible] the [illegible] account [illegible] about the [illegible] coat in [illegible] some [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

New Fall Dress Fabrics

In a Hundred Varieties of Texture & Tone

STACKS and Stacks of NEW FALL FABRICS await your inspection, such a display makes the choosing wonderfully easy. We cannot urge too strongly the advisability of early choosing, many lines are decidedly "scarce goods" and cannot be repeated on. In many cases last season's prices are prevailing, notwithstanding the general heavy advance in wool prices.

GERMAN TRENCHES UPSET AND AMMUNITION DEPOTS DESTROYED

Between The Somme And The Oise Great Success Was Obtained---Railroad Stations in The Argonne Have Been Set on Fire

PARIS, Aug. 28.—Tremendous artillery duels between the guns of the allies and the Germans are raging on a great many points of the western front, and, according to the official report, the allies' fire has everywhere shown a supremacy. To the north of Arras German trenches have been upset and a munition depot destroyed, while between the Somme and the Oise enemy encampments have been shelled. In the region of Armentzville many fires were started. The Germans fired at long range seven shells on the city of Compeigne, causing some damage and killing one nurse and seriously wounding a second.

Aviators Still Busy.

French aviators continue their activities against certain positions in possession of the Germans in the eastern portions of the French line. German aviators also are taking offensive measures in this territory.

French airmen have bombarded two railroad stations in the Argonne in German possession, and German aviators have thrown down explosives on Clermonte-en-Argonne. A French aviator last night bombarded at Dornach a plant where the Germans manufactured asphyxiating gases, and this morning a French squadron of airships bombarded the railroad station at Muelheim, in the Grand Duchy of Baden. All the French flyers returned unharmed.

To Try for Verdun.

New German drives in the western war theatre, particularly a great drive against Verdun, France's mightiest fortress, are forecasted in advices received received at Amsterdam from Berlin. These reports state that 100,000 German troops who have been participating in the eastern struggles are now on their way to Alsace and Lorraine with the heavy artillery that battered the fortifications of Novo Georgievsk.

Gen. von Beseler, who directed the artillery operations against Antwerp and Novo Georgievsk, is said to be accompanying the German artillery sent west. Verdun has proved a stumbling block to the Germans in the west as Warsaw was in the east. The Polish fortress finally fell as the result of German flanking movements. The same policy probably will be tried in the west by smashing attacks in the Argonne and in the St. Mihiel salient. Success in either region would permit the Germans to bring their guns to bear upon Verdun.

DRUMMERS ASK A FEW QUESTIONS

The meeting of the representatives of the Commercial Travelers Mutual Benefit Society in Toronto was described as a lively, but a harmonious one. The older members of a section of the society asked very plainly about the "why and wherefores" of the proposition to raise the rates. The meeting was adjourned until October the 9th, by unanimous vote, and a special committee appointed to go into the whole matter and make a report.

"It was a very good meeting, natural there was a great deal of discussion," she said.

"Was it hot?" asked the reporter.

"No," the secretary said, "but naturally the older members wanted to know the reasons for the proposed changes, and asked plain questions. The meeting was harmonious and unanimous in the opinion that it needed more time to study the whole matter, so adjourned until October 9th."

Local Man Receives Word of The Death In Action of His Brother

Mr. J. H. Hargreaves, 872 George Street, has received word that his brother Pte. Sidney Hargreaves of the First 4th West Riding Regiment, has been killed in action. A Halifax (Eng.) paper says:

Mrs. Hargreaves, the mother of Pte. Sidney Hargreaves, who lives at 7, Prescott Street, Halifax, and who was a member of the First 4th West Riding Regiment at the time he was killed, has received several tributes from colleagues of the deceased.

Pte. C. Holt, writing under date Sunday, July 4th, says that Hargreaves was wounded through the head. "Just at the time I was close by him," he proceeds. "It came very suddenly upon him. He was firing two or three rounds of ammunition, and he must have got his head rather a trifle high. As soon as he was hit he just spoke and said: 'They have got me.' He then reeled back and fell into my arms. He shed his blood for his country. I and several of his comrades did our best until he was taken away to the hospital, where he died. All of us send our deepest sympath. We are all very sorry to have lost him as he was always a nice lad and always very obliging, and did his duty up to the last."

A letter from Private C. Gething reveals the fact that Hargreaves was shot through the left side of the forehead by a German sniper, whom he was sniping at. The writer continues: "He will ever be remembered by his comrades-in-arms, by whom he was greatly respected and admired for his unusually strong character."

Another letter has been received from Sergeant O'Moran on behalf of the N.C.O.'s and men of the deceased's platoon. He says: "I was in charge of his half-platoon on May 20th. On the 19th we caught a party of fifteen Germans working in a wood opposite. I got eight of my men. Your son was one of them. I ordered five rounds rapid. We dropped about twelve of them, so you can rest at ease that he got two lives before they got his. On Thursday he was on sentry in his parapet. He had spotted a sniper and given him two rounds, when I warned him to get down. He said 'I will fire this and bring him down.' He loaded his rifle, and was just getting into position when they got him. He cried out 'They have got me,' and fell across the shoulder of one of his comrades, his life blood staining his comrade's clothing. We laid him down and did all we could for him, but we could see from the start it was no good."

A sad feature is that a letter addressed to the deceased from a brother in Canada reached him after he had passed away in hospital.

This letter was full of advice, such advice as is (and can only be) given by one with personal experience. Sydney certainly comes of a fighting stock. In previous wars, members of the family have invariably been represented. Two brothers fought in the South African war of 1899, the one in Peterborough being wounded five times. This brother will be best brought to mind as the conductor to the Moose Military Band and Charlotte Street Sunday School Orchestra.

The late Private Sydney Hargreaves was eighteen years of age, was the first volunteer for active service in the First 4th West Riding Regiment. The regiment being drawn up on parade for inspection, the General Officer Commanding asked for volunteers for active service, out stepped Sydney to the front, saluted, and said: "I will, sir." The General observing his youth asked why he wished to go to war. He replied, "members of my family have fought in previous wars, sir, I wish to follow in their footsteps." At this the General dismounted from his horse and shook him by the hand and wished him well.

He was also a first-class shot, as may be understood from the fact that he was engaged as a sniper. (These men have also to be quick in their aim, as well as being dead shots). The week previous to the declaration of war he won the first prize for shooting at the Regiment annual musketry meeting.

FIRE CHIEF HOWARD ELECTED TO OFFICE

HIS DEATH DUE TO STARVATION

Charles A. White, Found Unconscious in Room, Owned Bonds and Real Estate

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, Aug. 28. – Charles A. White, sixty-three years old, who lived at No. 34 Fourth street, Weehawken, N.J., died in the North Hudson Hospital in that city. Physicians of the hospital said death was due to starvation. Mr. White was a real estate dealer with an office in the Marbridge Building, in this city. Last Sunday he was found unconscious in his room and was taken to the hospital.

Gerard Kilt, of No. 1021 Woodcrest avenue, New York city, who was a partner of Mr. White, went to the hospital. Later he opened a safety deposit box at the Knickerbocker Trust Company's building, held in the name of Mr. White, and there found $20,000 in United States government bonds. Mr. Kilt said he knew of real estate valued at $10,000 which Mr. White owned, and said that he also carried an account in another bank in New York city.

Notwithstanding the money he possessed Mr. White lived as cheaply as possible. At one time he occupied a room in New York for which he paid $1.50 a week. Then he went to a Mills hotel and afterward went to the home of Mrs. Martin Hall, in Weehawken, saying he would live cheaper there than in New York. He limited himself to two meals a day. Mr. White's business associates say they know nothing about his family, except that they think a brother resides in Chicago. Mr. White lived at one time in Rochester, N.Y., and was a native of Connecticut.

BANDIT HOLDS UP JITNEY BUSSES

Examiner Special:

CANTON, O., Aug. 28.—The jitney bus hold holdup man is the latest in the category of crime so far as Canton is concerned.

A lone robber held up three jitneys here last night. He entered the car of Chester Rankin as a passenger. Soon he stuck a gun into the driver's face, and then relieved him of his day's fares. He boarded another jitney, pursuing the same tactics.

Then the robber shifted to another part of the city. This time when he demanded the driver's cash, the jitney man turned on full speed. The holdup man grabbed the wheel and ran the car into a horse and buggy, then jumped out and escaped.

Voice of The People

Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir, In the issue of the Examiner of August 27th, one of your readers would like to know the correct translation of the phrase "Hoch der Kaiser," not "Hock" as it is very often printed. The correct verbatim translation of this phrase is: "High the Kaiser," but as such an expression is senseless, the symbolical meaning is "Long live the Kaiser," just the same as the French "Vive l'empereur," and the Italian "Evviva il re." But this phrase "Hoch der Kaiser" is never used in Germany. On arrival of the Kaiser on parades or other festivities the people and the troops give their acclamation by calling three times "Hoch, hoch, hoch," or "Hurrah, hurrah, hurrah," but never "Long Live the Kaiser."

Yours very truly,
Emile Baumer.

MAN SAVES CHILD'S LIFE FROM FLAMES

Examiner Special:

WILMINGTON, Del., Aug. 28. Jacob Thompson, grocer at Seventh and Tatnall Streets, by prompt action saved the life of the little daughter of Victor Masselio, when he tore off her blazing dress as she was enveloped in flames. The child had been playing with matches in her home and set fire to her dress. She ran, screaming, to the door, and stood there with the flames shooting up over her head.

Thompson was in his store when he saw her and ran to the little girl, and, after tearing away the blazing garments, smothered the fire with his hands.

The girl was badly burned all over the body and Thompson was burned on the hands.

No Frost Danger In the West

Special to The Examiner:

WINNIPEG, Man., Aug. 28.—Comparatively high temperatures prevailed throughout the west yesterday with some rain in Alberta and clear elsewhere, and there is no danger from frost anywhere. Harvesting is proceeding at a very satisfactory rate in all districts.

The manager of the Government Labour Bureau at Saskatoon states that the supply of labour exceeds the demand, and at many points it is reported a number of men are unable to find work.

Threshing is reported from one point near Moose Jaw and a carload of oats was shipped to Winnipeg.

Calgary reports that the majority of the crop is beyond danger from frost.

BARBED WIRE PAINTED AN INVISIBLE GREEN

PITTSBURG, Aug. 28. — Barbed wire painted a foliage green is now being manufactured here for use of the armies in Europe. Barbed wire is generally galvanized, but because of the scarcity and high price of spelter a local manufacturer devised a scheme to paint it. Steel men say that reports from abroad show that at a short distance away it is impossible to see the green wire.

THE ONLY CURE FOR A WEAK STOMACH

Indigestion and Similar Troubles Must Be Treated Through the Blood

Indigestion can be treated in many ways, but it can only be cured in one way—through the blood. Purgatives cannot cure indigestion. By main force they move on the food still undigested. That weakens the whole system, uses up the natural juices and leaves the stomach and bowels parched and sore. It is actually a cause of indigestion—not a cure. Others try predigested foods and peptonized drugs. But drugs which digest the food for the stomach really weaken its power and makes the trouble chronic. The digestive organs can never do the work properly until they are strong enough to do it themselves. Nothing can give the stomach that power but the new, rich, red blood so abundantly supplied by Dr Williams' Pink Pills. So the reason for the success of this medicine is plain. Nothing can stimulate the glands and nothing can absorb the nourishment from the food but pure red blood. And Dr Williams' Pink Pills surpass all other medicines in giving that new, rich blood. Miss B. E. Johnson, Hemford, N.S., says: "For months I was a great sufferer from indigestion, food of any kind was distasteful to me, and after eating I would suffer much. Naturally I grew weak and was but a shadow of my former self. I was taking a doctor's prescription, but it did not help me in the least. Then I read of a case similar to my own cured through the use of Dr Williams' Pink Pills and I decided to try this medicine. By the time I had taken six boxes the trouble had entirely disappeared and I could eat heartily of all kinds of food. More than this I found my general health greatly improved through the use of the Pills. I can therefore strongly recommend Dr Williams' Pink Pills as a cure for indigestion."

You can get these Pills through any dealer in medicine or by mail, post paid, at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

THE MARQUIS OF CLANRICARDE

A Pen Picture by T. P. O'Connor

LONDON, Aug. 28.—Once I had a fancy for rooms in the Albany—queer old collection of chambers off Piccadilly which have been the home of many celebrated people, including Byron, Macaulay and Gladstone. I went there to make inquiries and suddenly, as I was passing into the chambers I saw a strange figure, a figure so strange indeed that nobody could have seen it passing without noticing it, even in a community so cosmopolitan and so variegated as the streets of London.

It was a small man who hurried along; he carried in his hand a corpulent and shabby umbrella; he wore an old and rather low-crowned hat; the trousers were shabby and of an extremely ancient pattern; the coat was wide in the frock and blue in colour and very shabby. If the figure had been in the streets of Paris you would have taken it for that of the chiffonier, the queer creature that lives on picking up ends of cigars and other unconsidered trifles of the Paris streets.

It may have been from what I had heard of him; it may have been that I had heard he lived in the Albany. Whatever the reason I suddenly suspected that I was looking at the figure of the Marquis of Clanricarde, and I asked the gilded porter if I was right. "Right the first time," he said with a grin; for the figure was so quaint and perhaps so unpopular that the usually stately reserve and cautious reticence of an English servant broke down and he seemed delighted to be able to point out such a strange habitant of his respectable and exclusive building.

It was something of a shock to me to find myself thus brought into living contact with one of the figures that had haunted my imagination and that of my countrymen for two if not three generations, and who, when I took human nature less indulgently, had appeared to me almost diabolic in malevolence and in guilty and crushing power. And yet I was delighted with the glimpse. It seemed to fit in the man so well with the strange old world and passing tyranny of which he was the last representative. Even the shabby clothes, which might have come out of an illustration to one of Thackeray's pictures of Early Victorian England, seemed to be just the right kind of raiment for this strange surviving embodiment of an age that has gone. It was almost as if I met on a Paris boulevard a survivor of the French nablesse who still regretted the days when he could amuse himself by potting at a peasant with his gun from the roof of his love-nest in the Bois de Boulogne.

I am old enough often to have seen his father and his brother, to neither of whom does the present Marquis bear the slightest resemblance. The old Marquis of Clanricarde ruled his estate in the county of Galway with an easy hand; was, if not loved, certainly not very much hated by his tenants. He was grand seigneur to his finger tips; loved to go down among his docile slaves several times every year, and had a good many adventures of gallantry in his early days—one of whom brought him into very unpleasant notoriety and stained his name—had once been a member of a ministry and once an ambassador; and to the day of his death, though he had a long yellow-skinned and bony face that give him the nickname of "the death's head," he looked distinguished and not unamiable. He resembled a little the same family as Thackeray's Marquis of Steyne, but he was more amiable. His elder son, Lord Dunkellin, belonged to the roysterers who gathered around the early court of the late King Edward when he was the young Prince of Wales and set the pace to the wild generation of that time; the last of whom died the other day in the person of the Earl of Kilmorey — like Lord Clanricarde, an Irish peer; and he managed to wind up his life and his adventures at forty-two. This Clanricarde of to-day has none of the faults and perhaps also none of the amiabilities that lay athwart the characters of his father and brother. He lives still in apparently strong health, though he is over tighty; he has never been mixed up in any roysterings of any kind of which the world knows. He takes his daily walk through the streets or in the suburbs of London; he is lonely instead of a social and convivial figure. There is nothing Irish about him, except perhaps the oddity and the hereditary ideas of that strange Irish landlordism which crushed Ireland for centuries and now is crushed itself, and wanders often penniless amid the ruins of its mansions and its fortunes.

The man who knew Lord Clanricarde best in his youth was Henry Labouchere. They were both attaches together in the British Embassy at Paris; and "Labby" used to draw amusing pictures of the young De Burgh—as he was then called—but whether they were true or false, as with every other story "Labby" told, nobody could aver. The main point of these stories was that the younger son of a great Irish family was as parsimonious in all his affairs, including his adventures, as if he were already in his youth an elderly miser. The young De Burgh might well have been careful about money then for the spendthrift father and spendthrift brother could not well have spared much money for a younger son—still without much money or any rights in this land of primogeniture. Then came the series of remarkable accidents by which this penniless young man first succeeded to the title of his brother, then to the brother's seat in the House of Commons, for men of that type could in the old days of my boyhood be returned to parliament even by the slaves they oppressed. And then came his father's death, and with that the heritage of the vast estates of the family in the county of Galway.

The income was not as large as one might expect from the size of the estate, for the land was poor, but it amounted to something like $100,000 a year. But this was not the only fortune to which the new Lord Clanricarde was heir. His mother was the grand daughter of the great Canning and daughter of Lord Canning who was once an illustrious viceroy of India, and through her he inherited a fortune of a million of dollars. It is certain that he has vastly increased even this large amount, for he has lived in the Albany all these years as a careful bachelor, and probably does not spend ever a few hundreds a year. His one extravagance has been to visit periodically Christie Mansions, the great art auctioneers, and there he has bought some very valuable pictures, for this queer, shabby chiffonier-like man, with the cynic heart and the penurious habits, is one of the greatest art connoisseurs in the world. It is one of the curiosities, I am told, of the chambers in which he lives, that these wonderful pictures are to be found in all kinds of strange places, just stowed away like old manuscripts. One of the greatest pictures in the world, I have heard, is nailed to the back of a door.

To the hundreds of people who occupied his land, Lord Clanricarde was unknown even by sight. He was some remote "veiled Mokanna," who was only known by his malevolent omnipotence over their fortunes and lives. For he seemed to have made a vow never to put his foot on the soil of the country in which he was born and from which he drew his income. One of the legends which added to the horror with which his name used to be whispered among the affrighted tenantry was that he had not attended the funeral of his mother in the ancestral graveyard near the family mansion. That mansion, too, I understand, was allowed to fall into decay.

The Clanricarde tenants were among the first to join in the Irish land revolution when Parnell and Davitt set the movement going in 1880, and the movement once started was never entirely abandoned. The Clanricarde estate became the hottest spot in the whole revolution; first because the tenants were so exasperated; and second, because the landlord was so impossible. There were several crimes; an agent was shot as he went to chapel; the job was regarded as so dangerous that no man could be got to take it unless a man who was ready to carry his life daily in his hands, and even one of these in the end got tired of the impossible master and gave up the job. The agent had to go armed; he was everywhere accompanied by a guard of armed police; he lived almost as if he were a functionary in the old Russia when anarchist dynamitards fought with the aristocracy.

But the weird old man in the chambers in London remained immovable, impenetrable, silent, as remote from all this world of strife and suffering and blood as if he were a malign deity in some subterranean inferno. Evictions were carried out ruthlessly: often with large bodies of police and sometimes even of soldiery, with the peasants holding cabins that had been turned into fortresses and which were defended as vigorously and bravely as the trenches of Flanders to-day. The Irish landlords themselves were as exasperated against this strange specimen of their class as the tenants, for they knew that he served the purpose of blackening all their characters and thereby helping to rouse public sentiment against them. The Tory ministers, especially the Tory Chief Secretaries, were more exasperated against him than anybody else, for they were called upon to give him the use of their soldiers and police to carry out the loathsome work of turning poor people out on the roadside and of risking bloodshed which might make their own position impossible. Sir Michael Hicks Beach, who was not a sentimentalist and had all the respect for property that is characteristic of the old English squire, once refused him the aid of the police to carry out evictions, and there were long discussions in Parliament over a famous dictum of his about using pressure "within the law"—a euphemism for refusing to put the law into operation—which brought down a good deal of criticism on the head of the Tory Minister. But Lord Clanricarde remained as deaf to the Tory Minister as to his tenantry.

At last Parliament had to take the scandal in hand; Lord Clanricarde hadn't a friend left in any party and a measure was passed which gave a modified power of appropriation; but the jealous eye of the House of Peers left some loopholes. Clanricarde fought the case in court after court up to the House of Lords; he pursued the whole enterprise with the same silent, deadly inflexible purpose; alone against all the world he fought to the end.

And now the end has come. Every court except one, English or Irish, went against him. He struggled on until at last it came to the final court in Ireland, and that court has just decided that he must give up his land. Now the land comes back to the people centuries after it had been torn away from them by the ruthless hands of the Norman conqueror; and the great and historic family of Clanricarde disappears from Irish life.

But the old man gets a quarter of a million sterling, and can look at his pictures and wander in his lonely way through suburban greens and haunts with his face white-bearded like a figure of Old Time. But he must miss the great game which he has pursued so relentlessly and so inflexibly for so many years. But Ireland rejoices at the most signal of all her victories in winning back the Irish land to the Irish people.

"Fruit-a-tives" means health. In years to come, people will look back to the discovery of 'Fruit-a-tives' and wonder how they ever managed to get along without these wonderful tablets, made from fruit juices.

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" is excellent for Indigestion, Dyspepsia and Sour Stomach. 'Fruit-a-tives' is the only certain remedy that will correct chronic Constipation and Liver trouble.

'Fruit-a-tives' is the greatest Kidney Remedy in the world and many people have testified to its value in severe cases of Rheumatism, Sciatica, Lumbago, Pain in the Back, Impure Blood, Headaches, Neuralgia, Pimples, Blotches and other Skin Troubles.

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" has been one of the great successes of the century and the sales are enormous, both in Canada and the United States. 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size 25c. At all dealers, or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

TIRED-OUT KIDNEYS

Kidney troubles are so frightfully common because the kidneys are so easily upset by overwork or excesses of eating and drinking. Cure is effected not by whipping them up to renewed effort, but by awakening the action of liver and bowels by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. This rests the kidneys and makes them well. Backache and urinary disorders then disappear.

The Guelph Council.

The proposed action of the Guelph City Council, in refusing to pay any more premiums on soldier insurance, is causing a stir in that city.

Had "Cholera Infantum."

WAS WASTED TO A SHADOW.

Cholera Infantum is one of the most common summer complaints of infants, and many die who could be saved if taken in hand on the first sign of the trouble. It begins with a profuse diarrhoea, very often accompanied by vomiting, and the matter ejected from the stomach has a bilious appearance. The child rapidly loses flesh and becomes weak and languid.

Mrs. W. Fallis, 455 Jones Ave., Toronto, Ont., writes: "I have used Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for my three boys, and I do believe it saved their lives. One of them had cholera infantum so bad he was wasted to a shadow, and the doctor had given him up, but 'Dr. Fowler's' cured him. I have also used it myself for colic and find it an excellent remedy. I would not be without it in the house."

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is the original remedy for the cure of all bowel complaints. It has been on the market for the past 70 years.

When you ask for "Dr. Fowler's" see that you get "Dr. Fowler's."

SHOT HIS WIFE THEN SUICIDED

Examiner Special:

CORRY, Pa., Aug. 28.—Frederick Braedon, a prominent business man, shot and killed his young wife, Opal Purdy Braedon, in Wright avenue near his home here. Then he turned the revolver upon himself, sending a bullet through his brain. He lived only a few minutes after the shooting.

The murder and suicide have created a profound sensation. Braedon, the junior member of the decorating firm of Weeks & Braedon, was regarded as one of the city's leading merchants. His wife, many years his junior, was popular and active socially.

She was returning from an entertainment and dance at the Driving club at North Corry, when she was killed. With another young woman, Mrs. Braedon stepped from a trolley car in East Washington street and started towards her Wright avenue home. Braedon, who had evidently been waiting for her, stepped up and took her arm. The young woman who had accompanied Mrs. Braedon from North Corry passed on into her home.

Then Shoots Himself.

Braedon and his wife continued along Wright avenue. As they approached their home Braedon drew a revolver from his pocket and placing the barrel of the weapon against his wife's right ear he fired. Mrs. Braedon dropped to the sidewalk dead. Her husband walked away from the body and then shot himself.

Neighbors aroused by the shots summoned the police. Patrolmen found the bodies of Braedon and his wife and carried them to the morgue. Coroner J. T. Barker announced an investigation of the double killing.

Avoid bathing when the body is perspiring or within two hours after a meal.

CANADIAN LEAGUE TEAMS TO VISIT PETERBORO

Peterborough is to have a chance to see some professional ball after all this season. A series of three games between Ottawa, the four-time champions of the Canadian League, and a picked team of Guelph and London players, under the guidance of Knotty Leo, of Guelph, is being arranged for Peterborough. It is said, that the games will be played on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Sep. 9, 10 and 11. Local fans will welcome an opportunity to see some of the familiar Canadian League faces again.

Stock Markets

New York Stocks

The following new securities were added to the New York Stock Exchange list: $8,500,000 twenty year six per cent convertible New York Central debentures, $861,000 additional capital stock of the Atlantic National Bank and $1,500,000 Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis first convertible five per cent. bonds.

Any person sceptical of the luck a four leaf clover can bring its possessor should consult Horace M. Kilborn vice-president of the National City Bank, New York. Mr. Kilborn received one on a souvenir box at a dinner recently. He was back at his desk yesterday after a severe attack of ptomaine poisoning.

Members of the New York Stock Exchange adopted a resolution to ask the governors of the Exchange to close the board on Saturday preceding Labour Day. They need the rest after the recent wild speculation in war stocks. The governors will act on the petition at a special meeting next week.

The price of New York Stock Exchange seats was advanced $1,000 on Wednesday to $59,000, when the membership of the late George I. Lovett was sold to Walter Dreyfus for that sum.

Three other seats on the Exchange were sold for $58,000 each. They were those of Richard T. Wilson, Jr., Hamilton F. Kean and the late Walter J. Currie. The purchasers were Irvin F. Westheimer, Roy C. Megargel and Edward J. Duffy respectively.

John D. Ryan, president of the Anaconda Copper Company, is expected home from the West next week.

The government's brief in the action against the American Can Company is to be filed in Baltimore next week. The case is to be heard on October 5. The government alleges the company is a combination in restraint of trade.

In despatches from Boston it was said "a million parade curtailed trading" on the local stock exchange. The Tennessee Copper tip apparently had not reached that city.

Tennessee Copper Mystery.

Following some mysterious development which added $10 a share to the value of Tennessee Copper stock in fifteen minutes, according to the estimate of speculators on the New York Stock Exchange, the directors of that company held their regular monthly meeting.

Prior to the meeting it had been said, in company circles, the directors probably would make an important announcement after they had adjourned. That announcement, it was intimated, would have to do with the various contracts the company is supposed to have made with Russia, China, the Du Pont Powder Company and other purchasers of the products of the company's mines and smelters.

At the conclusion of the meeting, however, the president of the corporation declared nothing was to be made public.

In reference to the sensational movements in the price of the stock he said he deprecated the fact that what he regarded as an investment issue should have become the football of wild speculation on the Exchange.

According to one of the stories circulated in connection with the advance in the quotation for the stock the company is contemplating the issue of about $2,000,000 convertible bonds to redeem the outstanding bonds and to provide new money for war order business. The new issue, it was said, would be convertible after two years into stock at about $60 a share, the stockholders to have the right to subscribe on a basis of about 5 to 1. Nothing official could be learned about that. The bonds that would be retired under such an arrangement are callable at 103. In banking circles 100 was bid for them.

New York Press Comments.

Sun—The copper stocks are responding to apparent improvement in the metal situation.

Wall Street Journal—The selling of stocks is not impressive and a new short interest appears to be forming.

Financial America—The tone of the stock market is strong, with heavy buying of U. S. Steel.

World—Bullish enthusiasm continues in the stock market, which is still in control of the public.

Journal of Commerce—Reflecting a super abundance of supply, rates for money continue easy, with little prospects of advance.

Pays Tribute To Industry Of France

LONDON, Aug. 28—Mr Rudyard Kipling, who has just returned from the western fighting front, in the Daily Telegraph yesterday morning, after paying a tribute to the glorious bravery of the French women, who, he says, virtually live on war, he declares:

"France is a country where there is not one young or middle-aged man who is not at the post of duty assigned by the military authorities."

The trenches, he says, are built and drained as if France realized the war was going to continue for five years, and the army is made up of hard-bitten fighting men, full of health and vitality, whom he saw on parade. But it is of the "Soixante Quinze," he rhapsodizes, declaring its work beautiful and its breech mechanism a dream of simplicity and efficiency.

"How would you like to graze a cow under shell fire?" he asks, after saying the men, women and children of France are wonderful.

He closes with a tribute to the fervour and fertile industry of all France and by insisting that nothing England can do, however great, will more than keep her abreast of such an ally.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

Friday morning the boys enjoyed a war canoe trip down the river. After lunch the boys played games, finishing up with a good swim. There will only be one more trip before the school commences. Boys who wish to take this trip will leave their names at the office.

A bicycle trip has been arranged for Monday morning to Lakefield. The boys will leave the building at 9.30 and proceed by way of the river road. Arrangements are being made to visit several of the power houses on the way. Bring your lunch and your chum.

It is the intention of the Boys' Work committee to hold a bicycle meet for the boys in September. Races from a quarter mile to five miles will be run off. Now is the time to practise and get in shape for the meet.

British Consul And Escort Were Attacked

LONDON, August 28.—A despatch to Reuters Telegraph Company from Petrograd says:

A telegram received here from Teheran, Persia, reports that the Russian and British Consuls and their military escorts have been attacked at Kenghever by an armed band led by M. O. Schunemann, the German Consular Agent at Tabriz. The British defended themselves with rifles but suffered some losses.

A Cabinet meeting was held with the result that a request was sent to the commander of a Persian brigade of Cossacks who were encamped four days march from Kenghever, to send a detachment there immediately.

Gibbs—"So you went after the job? I thought you believed that the office should seek the man."

Dibbs—"I do; but this is a fat job, and I thought it might get winded before it reached me."

Hearty Send-Off To Detachment From 59th Batt.

Barriefield War Camp, August 28. The big stir in camp yesterday was the leaving of the draft company of the 59th Battalion for overseas service. The men got their first real taste of Lt.-Col. Dawson's "pep" as he made his inspection of equipments and rations, and it must be said that it was a most creditable one. The entire company of 250 men and officers, matched out from the lines at two o'clock in the afternoon in full marching order. They were followed by the band and drum and inside the camp grounds rang with their cheers. One would have thought the men were going to some military festival, rather than to the slaughter trenches of Europe. But such is the spirit of the British soldier that, in the face of the most terrible conditions, he is cheerful and pleased with the privilege of throwing himself into the defence of his country and King.

Lt.-Col. Dawson paraded the entire 59th Battalion and then addressed the men of the draft, encouraging them to be loyal to one another as well as to their country. The spirit of comradeship was necessary among men who were going out to do battle, and the weak must have the help of the strong.

The draft gave three cheers for the Colonel, and for its officers, and then moved into position at the head of the battalion. At 2:45 the battalion headed by its fine bugle band, and accompanied by the new brass band swung out of the camp grounds to the main road, and to the tune of "Tipperary" marched into the city, where it entrained. The men of the battalion gave the draft a great send-off, and were themselves longing for the time when they would be on the way to the front.

The draft was in command of Captain Fisher and under him were Lieutenants Smith, Malloch, Kennedy and Staff Lieut. Stagg was the only Kingston officer, and was formerly in the 11th Regiment.

CUTTING THE CABLES.

How It Is Done In Wartime In Deep and Shallow Waters.

Cutting submarine cables in wartime is by no means so easy a job as it sounds.

Briefly the method is as follows: The cruiser detailed for the work steams slowly at right angles to the cable route, dragging after her a special kind of grapnel, like a five pronged anchor with shears attached, which grip and cut the table at the same time. This grapnel is connected with the cable cutting ship by a strong rope formed of strands of steel and hemp interwoven, and attached to which is an instrument called a dynamometer, that shows when the cable is hooked.

By steaming once or twice backward and forward the cable can be cut in two places at, say, half a mile apart, and the severed portion can then be dragged away by another kind of non-cutting grapnel and left lying on the ocean bed at some distance away, where it is, of course, impossible to locate it, rendering any attempt to repair the damage a very difficult and laborious operation.

Such is the usual method adopted for destroying an enemy's cable in comparatively shallow seas. In the case of ocean cables submerged at great depths, however, the mode of procedure is somewhat different.

A similar five pronged grapnel is used, but it is a noncutting one and simply grips the cable, holding it fast. The fact that it has been hooked is, of course, notified to those on board by the dynamometer, when the ship is immediately stopped and the cable hoisted up toward the surface.

It never reaches the surface, however, for presently the lifting strain becomes too great, the cable snaps of its own accord, and, the two ends flying wide apart, the severed cable settles back to the ocean bottom obliquely, leaving a gap of possibly a thousand yards or more between the portions.—Pearson's Weekly.

Selling a Masterpiece.

Millet, who was a farmer's son, having in mind his boyhood, tenderly painted his wonderful "Angelus." He took it to Paris and hawked it about, but no one would have it. At last the Belgian minister gave him $300 for it. Six years after Millet's death the picture sold for $32,000, and in 1889 James F. Sutton, president of the American Art association, bought it for $115,000.—New York Telegram.

General Strike is Threatened

HEAVY FIGHTING AT DARDANELLES

WALKOUT ON WEDNESDAY IF AGREEMENT IS NOT REACHED

200,000 South Wales Coal Miners to go on Strike if To-day's Conference at London Does Not Settle The Matter---Men Claim The Mine Owners Are Making Huge Profits Out of The War And Not Sharing it With The Men.

LLOYD-GEORGE IS ON THE JOB

LONDON, Aug. 30.—A general strike of two hundred thousand South Wales coal miners unless to-day's conferences here settles the dispute, was predicted by the miners' officials who conferred with the members of the Cabinet to-day. Mass meetings were held throughout the Wales coal districts Sunday. The spirit of the men was adamant. They cheered the speakers who accused the mine owners of taking huge war profits and refusing to share them with the workers, and denounced the Government's arbitration award. The majority of the meetings adopted resolutions favouring a walkout on Wednesday if no agreement is reached to-day. Representatives of the miners met Minister of Munitions Lloyd George this forenoon and immediately afterward conferred with President Walter Runciman of the Government Board of Trade. Four representatives of the miners were closeted with Lloyd George after the operators' committee had left.

ATTACK ON DARDANELLES MADE BY LAND AND SEA

Turks Claim The Repulse of Severe Attacks---Allies' Heavy Artillery is Shelling The German Lines Continuously in The West, Especially Around Arras and in Flanders

LONDON, Aug. 30.—A new land and sea attack at the Dardanelle resulted in heavy fighting. The Turks claim repulse of severe attacks and claim hitting Allies' warship and a transport.

LONDON, Aug. 30.—Russian troops continue to fall back everywhere except in the Riga region. The Grand Duke frustrated a plan to turn his flank. Peasants are waging guerilla warfare on the Germans.

PARIS, Aug. 30.—The Allies' heavy artillery is shelling the German line continuously. In Arras and Flanders the bombardment is exceptionally severe.

LONDON, Aug. 30.—The treaty between Bulgaria and Turkey was not signed when Bulgaria was informed the Allies would consider the treaty unfriendly. Bulgaria will join the Allies if her "rights" are restored.

LONDON, Aug. 30.—It is reported here that General Joffre plans a big French offensive move in mid October co-operating with the British troops

LONDON, Aug. 30.—A prominent financier here states that Germany can only fight six months longer for lack of copper manganese and money.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 30.—General Von Beseler, the conqueror of Antwerp and Novo Georgievsk, has been appointed Governor-General of the captured portion of Poland. The civil administration has been removed to Warsaw.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 30.—The enemy made a strong attack against our positions at Kaliskirt which was repulsed. Our troops made counter-attack.

BERLIN, Aug. 30.—A British passenger steamer shelled a German submarine in the Irish Sea though the submarine didn't attempt attack. Attention is called to the British claim that ships are armed only for defence.

MOSCOW, Aug. 30.—The announcement was made to-day that the ministry should be reorganized under the guidance of an energetic premier for aiding the production of munitions.

THE GERMAN SUBMARINE POLICY.

BERLIN, Aug. 30.—Grand Admiral Von Tirpitz, creator of the German submarine policy that gave rise to difficulties with America, believes with Chancellor Bethmann-Hollweg and Foreign Secretary Von Jagow, that all differences with America should be adjusted at once. Von Tirpitz, does not look with favour on a formal disavowal of the attack on the Arabic. He desires that the most friendly relations between the United States and Germany be established in the negotiations already in progress, but is not yet convinced this end can only be attained by a repudiation of the act of one of his submarine commanders. Germany hopes that the American Government will consider informal representations already made to be sufficient. Until the official report of the submarine commander is made, the question of whether the action of the submarine commander shall be disavowed must rest largely upon this report, which is expected at any moment.

End of Three Year Whaling Trip

The Schooner Cameo Arrives at New Bedford, Mass., After Thrilling Voyage

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., Aug 30 A whaling voyage of three and a half years, replete with thrilling incidents, ended to-day with the arrival here of the schooner Cameo Captain J. T Edwards

Two boats with twelve men aboard were lowered for a whale on June 25 and both were lost to the view of the schooner for 48 hours During the night swinging lights and explosives failed to find them, but a daylight search over the seas found them on the second day

Another unusual event was the fall of a boat steered from the upper rigging 104 feet to the deck, the man suffering a concussion of the brain During a storm two boys aloft escaped serious injury when the mast on which they were working was carried away.

Grandmamma—"What are you doing in the pantry, Tommy?"

ENEMY'S PLANS HAVE BEEN COMPLETE FAILURE

Object of Russian Attack Was Not so Much Military as it Was Political---Plan to Induce Russia to Seek Separate Peace Has Come to Nothing.

LONDON, Aug 28 — The Daily Chronicle publishes an interview on Russia's position and Germany's real aim by Bernard Pares, professor of Russian in Liverpool University, who for six months acted as the English official eye-witness with the Russian armies Professor Pares writes:

In the last few days one feels anchow, that the tension of Russia's position, and therefore the whole allied cause, has slackened perceptibly Everyone has become more at ease For myself, who have followed the military and political position very closely, both in Russia and here, I will go so far as to say the crisis is passed From the time, when the enemy began his great thrust in the southeast of Galicia, I was quite certain that he was aiming at one thing he was trying to bring Russia to separate herself from her allies. If he could not do that he could do nothing. On the eastern side the idea of conquest of Russia or of forcing peace on Russia was always from the start ridiculous.

Russia Will Make No Peace.

Russia could never be compelled to make peace She could only be induced to desire it For this object, there was a perfectly clear programme, of which every detail soon became apparent. Of course, the Russian army had to be beaten or driven back, with as many losses as possible

Above all, Russia was to be persuaded that her western allies could do nothing for her. Poland was to be won, and then a liberal peace was to be offered to Russia The Germans have had their success; they have made their shot They have failed, and they know it to be the turning point of the whole project To my mind, the much more important fact of last week was the announcement made by Minister Sazonoff to all public men and writers in Petrograd He is a very quiet man, and his simple straightforwardness is one of the greatest reasons for the immense confidence which his country places in him

Short But to the Point.

"His announcement, which had not a word that could be dispensed with, amounts to this "That the German successes have been accompanied by repeated negotiations for peace, which Russia has refused unconditionally, and that whenever they were renewed they would be refused again."

"But this meant the collapse of all that Germany had been playing for Military success is secondary

"We are approaching the time when the Russian roads will break up The country through which the Germans will have to advance is at first a marshy plain, and later on a plateau, broken with innumerable cross gullies, in which the grand army of Napoleon perished."

VON BESSLER IS GOVERNOR

Is Given Power Over Entire Occupied Russian Territory

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 30.—Word was received here from Berlin that General Von Bessler, conqueror of Antwerp and Novo-Georgievsk, had been appointed Governor-General of the entire occupied Russian territory. This announcement is certified to the Posen Tageblatt, which also says that the civil administration of Russian Poland, heretofore at Kalisz has been removed to Warsaw

ACTIVITY IN THE WEST

Many Western Grain-Growers Have Contracted for Part of Their Crops—Threshing is General

According to the latest weekly reports threshing will be more or less general throughout the Western Provinces by the end of August. Indications all point to the fact that the operation this year will be a more expensive one than formerly. Labour, for one thing, is considerably higher than last year, being as high as $3 and $3.50 a day in Saskatchewan. On account of the size of the crop the term of employment will be longer as well. Additional expense in the matter of binder twine will also have to be met, as in the past years farmers have found two or two and a half pounds of twine sufficient for an acre's crop. The quantity required this year is stated in some instances to run as high as four pounds. This extra requirement is mentioned in many instances, and it means either one or two things, that farmers are becoming more liberal in their use of manila or that the crop is, indeed, running far heavier to the acre than it ever has before.

Making Crop Contracts.

Growers of grain, wheat particularly, are watching the market very carefully, and some, indeed, have taken advantage of the dollar level and contracted for as much as half or three-quarters of their crop at that price Others, again, are still hesitating, being inclined to the belief that last year's war prices will be repeated this year, regardless of the larger crop and the changed conditions It is pointed out in one instance that the fall market is in danger of being swamped by heavy deliveries, and a movement is already on foot to market the grain gradually, to hold it in prairie granaries, and to feed it out slowly The matter rests entirely with the banks as to whether the latter institutions will be willing to advance credit upon grain in storage.

Cattle Shipped East.

Considerable activity is reported in cattle, many carloads of animals, including hogs and horses, having been shipped east during the week. General conditions are quiet.

C. P. R. land sales in Alberta are said to have increased during June and July to such an extent that the volume eclipses any other two months' period since 1913. The railway is stipulating that purchasers must settle upon the properties bought, with the result that present and future sales mean settlement and not speculation Most of the purchasers are from the United States, and are of a most desirable class.

Finances Are Now Alarming German Press

Berlin Vorwaerts Point Out The Impending Difficulty

AMSTERDAM, Aug 28 — The Berlin Vorwaerts, in discussing the new German war loan, directs attention to what it characterizes as the alarming financial situation which Germany must face at the conclusion of the war

After the war the Vorwaerts the Imperial debt and pensions alone will demand an annual expenditure of at least two and a half billion mark ($625,000,000), or a little less than the united ordinary and extraordinary Imperial expenditure for 1912 In other words, the income of the Empire hitherto will only suffice to pay the interest on the national debt For all other expenses new sources of taxation must be created Whoever remembers the taxation controversies of 1909 and 1909 can easily imagine into what internal political difficulties the war is leading us.

"I wonder why Miss Winslow is such a social favourite She doesn't sing nor play nor even recite."

"Probably that's the reason."

A Notorious Pickpocket Freed

Aged Women, Dying of Cancer, Had Served Sentences in Six Prisons

SPRINGFIELD, Aug 30 Lou West, alias Maud Mitchell, perhaps the most notorious pickpocket and shoplifter in the United States and Canada was pardoned from the Hampden County Jail Monday by the County Commissioners and sent to the home of her son in Toledo to where attempt will be made to prolong her life

Four physicians examined the aged woman and found her suffering from incurable cancer and District Attorney Nile who prosecuted the woman in May of this year recommended her pardon

She is 68 years old and known as the "Queen of Pickpockets and Shoplifters

Twenty-one arrests in three country and Canada are noted in her record She has been arrested for vagrancy as well as larceny She has deposited bail of $7,000 and has been committed to criminal institutions six times and paid fines and costs amounting to $250.

Perhaps no other woman in the country is as well known in police circles as Mrs West She has been recognized as the head of a band of pickpockets and shoplifters whose thefts run well over the $100,000 mark, and whose activities took in every large city in the country She was arrested in Springfield in December, 1911 for shoplifting was admitted to bail and fled

In the Spring of 1914 the police received word of her arrest in St. Louis and her sentence of one year in the City Workhouse Upon her release Captain Boyle of the detective bureau went to St Louis to bring her back

Mrs West denied she was in Springfield in December, 1911, and said that on the date of her supposed arrest in the city she was giving a birthday party for her son in Cleveland and produced several affidavits to that effect

Governor Major of Missouri demanded additional proof from the Springfield officers and as a result the finger print system of identification received one of its severest tests in America, but it

BOY PRONOUNCED DEAD IS REVIVED

Frank Caruso, 4, Unable to Breathe After Accident, Saved by Heroic Treatment

NEW YORK, August 30 Frank Caruso, years old had been declared to be dead at St Vincent's Hospital when he was restored to life as a result of heroic treatment He probably will now recover.

While his mother was in another room of their home at No 215 Thompson street Frank went into the kitchen and, curious to see what was boiling in a large kettle on the stove, he pushed a kettle of scalding water over upon himself

As he screamed the water ran into his mouth and he inhaled it into his lungs The scalded throat swelled so quickly that to such an extent that by the time Mr Caruso arrived from his grocery store the child could not breathe and his face was becoming livid

At the hospital efforts were made to open an instrument in the throat

The operation was hazardous, for it was impossible by that time to know whether the lungs were filled with water or not Dr Philip L O'Hanlon, who was in the hospital to see private patients, passed into the operating room a nurse came out and said the boy was dead

Dr O'Hanlon, who has had years of experience in emergency cases while at Bellevue Hospital and as a Coroner's physician, asked if the child had advised that a certain remedy be tried This was done but it would not go down through the throat

Dr O'Hanlon ordered hot cups quickly Dr O'Hanlon said As a nurse brought the hot cups to the bedside in the room and had lifted the boy's head and had opened his mouth and he was dead

Dr O'Hanlon opened the cups tonight with the aid of forceps and pulled it so far that the severed throat was open to a sufficient extent to admit the other cup into it This was shoved down into the lungs and then the work of artificial respiration was begun

The result was that within half an hour Frank was breathing almost normally and had recovered consciousness With a speedy arrangement of bandages to bind the new arrangement of the throat Frank was sent to a ward and the hospital physicians under Dr O'Hanlon's direction began the work of preparing serums to the cure of the boy

At midnight the last report was given to Dr O'Hanlon having saved the boy's life that physician was asked if he considered it necessary that the child would be watched by a nurse during the night He answered

NO NEED ON THE ROAD.

Mr Peterson South Bay Ont writes I became terribly afflicted with a sort of eczema on the head I tried four different doctors, seeing each a fair trial, but the disease grew worse and spread to my arm I got Dr Chase's Ointment and it has entirely cured me I gave away many more but I want other sufferers to know about this splendid Ointment

Author of England's Anthem.

The tune of "God Save the King" can be traced back for centuries and has been credited to many composers, and certainly appropriately—if there is anything in a name—to Dr. John Bull. But the honor of wedding the words and music together and calling them the national anthem is undoubtedly due to Henry Carey of "Sally In Our Alley" fame, who boldly published them both as his own in 1742. And later on his son petitioned for a pension on the strength of his father's authorship.

A City of Boiling Springs.

Carlsbad has been humorously described as being built on the lid of a boiling kettle, which is almost literally true, as it stands on a crust of comparative thinness, through which rise several mineral springs. The most abundant and most used of these springs is the Sprudel, which discharges 130,000 gallons a day of various temperatures. The water of the hot springs has been famous for more than a century as a "cure" for various complaints.

Femininity and Fear.

"I have," says an observer of persons and events, "seen girls so timid and shrinking that they were afraid to go bathing for fear that they might drown, afraid to go rowing for fear the boat might upset, afraid to go driving for fear the horse would run out, and afraid to help with the housework for fear of injuring themselves internally, but I never yet saw a girl who was afraid to get married."

BIG TRAGIC DREAM.

A Grim Ghost Story Set in a Haunted Dutch Castle.

The following remarkable ghost story is told of two brothers, members of a distinguished family of the Netherlands: The young men were officers in the same regiment and were very popular. These young officers were exceedingly anxious to see a ghost and determined to pass a night in an old haunted castle, where scenes of horror. It was alleged, marked the hours from dark till dawn.

It was Christmas eve, and they provided themselves with a good supper and a bottle of wine each, a fire, lights, and loaded pistols. The hours wore on. No ghost was seen; no ghostly sounds were heard. The younger brother, wrapped in his cloak, laid his head on the table and deliberately resigned himself to a comfortable sleep. The elder brother, though exceedingly weary, determined to remain awake.

After awhile a noise roused him from a reverie into which he had fallen. He raised his eyes and beheld the wall opening in front of his seat. Through the opening glided a tall figure in white, who signed to him to follow. He rose and followed the figure through long, damp, dark passages till they reached a large, brilliantly lighted room, where a ball was going on. Above the strains of music and the din of voices pierced a strange, sharp, clicking sound, like the notes of castanets.

Bewildered and dazzled by this sudden transition from darkness and silence to this gay festive scene, it was some moments before he could collect his senses, but he was shocked by perceiving that these gayly dressed ladies and their richly uniformed cavaliers were skeletons, and the curious sound that impressed him so strangely was the clicking of fleshless jaws!

The figure at his side ordered him to take a partner from this hideous throng, which he refused to do. Irritated at this refusal, the figure raised his arm to strike, but the officer instantly leveled at him the pistol he had continued to grasp and discharged it full in his face.

With the shock and report he started to his feet. The white figure, the ballroom, the fearful, ghastly dancers, all had vanished, and he was in the room where he had supped, but his brother lay dying at his side.

He had shot him in his dream and awakened only to receive his last utterance. From that awful Christmas night he was an altered man, and after a few years of unavailing anguish of remorse he found himself unable to bear the burden of his regrets and put an end to his life.

Not Found.

The wise and industrious father was chiding his son for procrastinating.

"You are always late," scolded the senior. "Why don't you be like the early bird? You know, these days the first come are the first served."

"That may be, pop," laughed the frivolous youngster, "but I don't want to be like the early bird. He is generally served up on toast."

A Sign That Works.

She—Do you believe in signs and portents?

He—Well, I don't carry my belief to an extreme, but when my respected employer comes into the office in the morning looking as though he had spent the night wrestling with an attack of acute indigestion I always regard it as a sign that I am in for a bad quarter of an hour.

Why Cook Left.

"Why did your cook leave so suddenly?"

"She made two cakes last Saturday—one for us and one to take to her married sister. When she wasn't looking I exchanged them and took for our own use the one she had intended to give away.

WATER WAS BAD.

GOT DIARRHOEA.

Change of water, change of diet, catching cold, eating unripe fruit, etc., are all causes of diarrhoea.

The safest and quickest cure for diarrhoea, dysentery, colic, cholera, cholera morbus, cholera infantum and all looseness of the bowels is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry.

Mr. W. J. Quinn, Shelburne, Ont., writes: "About two years ago I was out in the West for harvest. The water out there was so bad that I took diarrhoea, and became so bad I was not able to work. I procured a bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, and when I had taken half of the bottle the diarrhoea stopped, and by the time I had taken the entire bottle I was able to resume work. I sincerely recommend it to all those troubled as I was."

There are a great many imitations of "Dr. Fowler's" on the market, so see you get "Dr. Fowler's" when you ask for it.

The diarrhoea remedy that has been on the market for the past 70 years.

Are you a good guesser?

The General says:—No man living can take three different kinds of Roofing and determine in advance by such tests as bending, twisting, tearing, or smelling, how long each will last on the roof. The best you can do is to make a guess. That is why is guaranteed by us 5, 10 or 15 years according to whether the thickness is 1, 2 or 3 ply. Most roofings look alike, and even trained chemists can judge roofing qualities only by the raw materials that are put into the roofing and not from the finished product.

Certain-teed Roofing

The responsibility of the biggest Roofing and Building Paper Mills in the world stands behind our guarantee and this makes it unnecessary for you to take the risk of guessing.

Certain-teed Roofing has made good on the roof throughout the entire world. Ask your local dealer for further information. He will quote you reasonable prices.

A GREAT PRIESTHOOD DIVINELY APPOINTED

The Mosaic Arrangement and the Aaronic Order.

God's New Order of Priesthood—Each Member Called and Chosen—The Great High Priest Especially Honored—His God-Given Commission — His Sacrifice of Himself—Under Priests of This Order—Membership Limited in Number—The Great Purpose for Which This Priesthood is Ordained.

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its publication.]

Albany, N. Y., Aug. 29.—Pastor Russell delivered a masterful address here today, from the text, "No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron." (Hebrews 5:4.) He said:

The Apostle's statement forming our text is made in connection with his discussion of the Mosaic arrangement and the Aaronic Order of priesthood. Christ, while on earth, could not be a priest, because there was already a priesthood ordained of God—the family of Aaron. No Israelite could take part in this priesthood except he were of Aaron's lineage. To presume to take part in it without God's invitation would be sin. To this day the Jews respect the Aaronic priesthood and no one could serve as a priest unless he could show his genealogy back to Aaron. The Jews now do not know who belongs to the priestly family. Therefore they have no priest and no such service as a priest would render.

In his Epistle to the Hebrews St. Paul calls attention to another priesthood. He declares that Jesus, who was not of the tribe of Levi, has become a Priest of a still higher Order than the Aaronic; moreover, that God had foretold our Lord's Priesthood long before. (Psalm 110:4.) His was a Divine appointment to this Priesthood. The call to be the Messiah and the highest of all priests was from the Father.

Here we have another proof that our Lord Jesus was not the Father. He could have only such honors as the Father would give Him. God glorified Him in giving Him this great Priesthood. The Apostle quotes from the Prophet David respecting Jesus, "Thou art a Priest forever after the Order of Melchisedec." Melchisedec was a great personage who lived in Abraham's day. So great was he that, after Abraham had won a great victory and wished to show his appreciation of God's goodness, the patriarch came to Melchisedec, "king of Salem and priest of the Most High God," and offered tithes of all he had captured. (Genesis 14:18-20.) Since the inferior offers gifts to the superior, Melchisedec must have been greater than Abraham, who in turn must have been greater than Aaron, his descendant. How much higher than Aaron, then, must he have been who was a type of Christ and of Christ's Priesthood!

We see that our Heavenly Father has conferred a very great honor upon our Lord Jesus Christ, in appointing Him to be the world's great Redeemer, High Priest and King. He is the One through whom will come all the blessings upon the world that God has designed. But before God could recognize Him in that position, He must prove our Lord, as the Bible declares.

"Worthy to Loose the Seals."

Elsewhere St. Paul points out that our Lord Jesus left the glory which He had with the Father before the world was and took upon Him the form of a servant; and being found in fashion as a man, He humbled Himself still further—all that He might do the Father's will. His obedience to the Father finally led to the Cross. "Wherefore God hath highly exalted Him, and given Him a name that is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow." (Philippians 2:5-11.) In that exalted position He is the Antitype of Melchisedec.

This is corroborated by our Lord's own statement in the Fifth Chapter of the Revelation. There is pictured the Father, seated upon the Throne of Glory and holding in His right hand a Scroll, written within and without and sealed with seven seals. This Scroll represented the Divine Plan that God had purposed in Himself before the foundation of the world. What was in that Scroll nobody knew but Himself. The entire Plan was in God's own power; and, as the Apostle declares, before the foundation of the world the Father foreknow that our Lord would be the One worthy to open the Scroll.

Throughout Heaven and earth the proclamation was made, "Who is worthy to loose the seals and to look therein?" Nobody came forward. Then St. John began to weep. After he had wept much, an angel touched him and said, "Weep not. The Lion of the tribe of Judah hath prevailed." The Lion of Judah was the Strong One of Judah, of which tribe God had prophetically declared that Messiah should come—of David's lineage. Here was the Strong One, competent to do the work—absolutely perfect.

The difficulty with every other person in the world was that all were imperfect. But Jesus was sent into the world with all the qualities of perfection—in the image of God. When He became the Man Christ Jesus, He was qualified to fulfill the Divine Purpose. But He must be tested. No one heretofore had proven worthy, because the conditions that God had attached to the honor were very stringent. God was looking for One competent to be entrusted with the charge of affairs—a Prime Minister, as it were, One who would fully represent Him in the Kingdom work and be associated with Him forever. For so high a position God had purposed that this One should be made partaker of the Divine nature.

Immortality—"Life in Himself."

The Scriptures tell us that God has immortality; i. e., He is not liable to death. All the angels are mortal; not that they are dying, but that they could die. A mortal is not a dying person, but one liable to death. God has supplies to continue existence to those who will be obedient and loyal to Him. To all such He is pleased to grant everlasting life. But He is immortal, not susceptible to death in any sense. He is not dependent upon food, water, air, rest, or anything else. Jesus says, "As the Father hath life in Himself, so hath He given to the Son to have life in Himself." (John 5:26.) This is so high as to be beyond human comprehension.

God purposed that this One whom He would so highly exalt should also have this quality of immortality—life in Himself. But first He must demonstrate His loyalty to the fullest degree. Jehovah determined that the first opportunity to prove worthiness of this position should be given to the Logos, "The Word," the One first created by the Father. (Revelation 3:14; Colossians 1:15; John 1:1-3.) Those who believe in the doctrine of the Trinity hold many very unreasonable views. They say that Jesus did not become a man, that He merely bid Himself in a human form for a time. Not so says the Bible. Our Trinitarian friends are driven to some such ridiculous position by claiming that Jesus was co-equal with the Father, a very unscriptural claim.

The Son of God left the glory which He had with the Father, was made flesh and dwelt amongst us. He was no ordinary man, no sinful man. We behold in Him a glory that no other man had—a glory of perfection. (John 1:14; Hebrews 7:26.) He became a man for the very purpose of carrying out the Father's Plan, which He could not then fully know. He knew that the first step of preparation was to be made a man. The next step was to present Himself for sacrifice. From those who interpreted the Law, He knew that there was nothing that He could do in His priestly office until He was thirty years old. When His thirtieth anniversary came, He presented Himself to the Father in consecration and was baptised by John.

"The Heavens Were Opened to Him."

There, at Jordan, the Father granted the Son the opening of His eyes of understanding. There He became the slain Lamb. At the very moment He made His consecration at Jordan He died, so far as His covenant with God was concerned. And so it is with His followers. The very moment we make our covenant with God, we are dead indeed to sin and to all earthly interests. Our death dates, not from the time we actually die, but from the time we give up our will. So God there counted Jesus dead. He was the sacrificial Lamb. To Him was given the right to open the Scroll.

So we read that at His baptism, when the Holy Spirit descended upon our Lord, "the Heavens [the higher things] were opened unto Him." (Matthew 3:16.) The deeper things of God's Plan became open to His mind. Never before had He seen the meaning of these things. They were hidden from Him, as from any natural man. The natural man—whether perfect or imperfect, "receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." (1 Corinthians 2:14.) Jesus became a perfect natural man, and as such He gave all that He had in consecration. Then God begat Him of the Holy Spirit to the new nature. From the moment of spirit-begetting, old things passed away and all things became new.

After Jesus had received the Holy Spirit, He went immediately into the wilderness for forty days. During that time He was a Bible Student, thinking over the Scriptures, which from boyhood He had heard read in the synagogue. Having now received the illumination of the Holy Spirit, He could understand what was meant by the manna in the wilderness, by the serpent erected upon the pole, by the bullock of the Atonement Day sacrifices and by the Passover Lamb. The whole Plan of God for human salvation was opened to Him. He had "loosed the seven seals." By that time He fully understood all that He was to suffer. He saw that He was to give up His life sacrificially, that He was to be crucified.

Then, after all the stress of Bible study for forty days without food, the Devil came and tempted Him. This was the opportunity, in His weakened physical condition, for the Adversary to present a temptation. But our Lord withstood all of Satan's suggestions, and finally the Devil left Him. We have no record that Satan ever again tried to tempt our Lord.

God thoroughly proved the One who was to be the great Antitype of Melchisedec, the Priest upon His Throne, partaker of the Divine nature. And Jesus demonstrated His worthiness, not only during those forty days in the wilderness, but during the following three and a half years, clear down to Calvary—even to the death of the Cross. Now He is the highly exalted One, far above angels, principalities, powers, and every name that is named. He is at the Father's right hand—the chief place of favor. Our Lord Jesus is God's great Prime Minister—next to the Father Himself.

Further Contents of the Scroll.

But the Scroll in God's hand contained more than this. It showed that the Father, who had called the Lord Jesus, had called Him to be the Head over a Church, which is His Body. Nineteen hundred years before the Messianic Kingdom was due to be set up, God sent Jesus into the world that He might open up the way and that Jews and Gentiles might come in and participate with Jesus, first in the tests and afterwards in the honor. In the Book it is written that not only a bullock, but also a Lord's goat must be offered in sacrifice on the Atonement Day. Thus the Church are to be sharers in the sufferings of Christ and in the glory to follow.—Hebrews 13:11-13.

So all the work of this Gospel Age has been with a view to perfecting this company. First the call went to such Jews as were ready, that these might be brought into the Church, to be of the Spiritual Seed of Abraham. But there were not enough of them; and so the door was thrown open to the Gentiles, that as many of them as desired might come in and be fellow-heirs with the Jews. All these are to be members of the Body of the great antitypical Priest and King, "after the order of Melchisedec."

God is now calling merely the class that is anxious to come to Him. The Apostle speaks of some who were feeling after God, if haply they might find Him. (Acts 17:27.) Now there is only one way to come to Him, and that way is by membership in the Body of Christ. Those who will walk in this narrow way shall become joint heirs with Christ. Some say, "I think that I will wait a little while." They are not altogether ready to sacrifice—to give up all to the Lord. To such the Lord says, "Very well." Jesus said to some in His day, "Sit down and count the cost." It is better that one should not put his hand to the plow than that he should do so and then look back and wish that he was not there.

"If any man will come after Me [be My disciple], let him deny himself, take up his cross and follow Me." So then, dear friends, we see the conditions. And whatever the Father's providence may be for us, we wish to have. Jesus did not specify what was to come to Him. The Father had specified our Lord's experiences before the foundation of the world. As for you and for me, our part is to do the Father's will—to drink whatever cup the Father shall pour for us. He does not give us the honor of drinking so great a cup as our Saviour drank, however.

"Gather Together My Saints Unto Me"

For each consecrated child of God the great question is, "Am I walking in the steps of Jesus?" Have we entered into a Covenant with God, as our Lord did? Faithful is He who has called us. If we fail to get the great prize of our High Calling, the fault will be ours alone. God is ready to do for us as He was ready to do for Jesus.

Now to come back to the statement "No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God." Did we call ourselves? No, indeed! How did we come to a knowledge of the Truth? Thank God, we have had the ears to hear His Message! Thank God that this privilege came to us—that we were called of God! To what were we called? Hear the Call that applies to Jesus and to all His disciples—the Call to which Jesus responded, and to which you and I are to respond. It reads, "Gather My saints together unto Me; those that have made a Covenant with Me by sacrifice." (Psalm 50:5.) By nature we were sinners, like all the fallen race of Adam. But even as sinners we may have been trying to do our best. Then the Message reached us, speaking peace through Jesus Christ, a Message telling us that if we gave ourselves to God we would be forgiven our sins, begotten of the Holy Spirit and accepted into God's family.

God's arrangement is that our Lord Jesus is to sanctify and make saints those who have taken these steps. He will impute of His merit to such, to make up for their natural imperfection. To give them of that merit would make them perfect human beings. To impute the merit is to give them a credit on God's account books.

God has arranged that nothing shall come to His altar except that which is without blemish. We cannot come, therefore, except as our Lord Jesus shall make up wherein we are short of perfection. Christ has proposed to do this, in order that you and I may have acceptance through Him. Is that not a blessed arrangement? It is made to permit us to share in the sufferings of Christ that by and by we may share in His glories. (2 Timothy 2:11, 12.) All that He has He will share with His faithful Church; and by way of encouraging us He says that He will make all things work together for our good.—Romans 8:28.

Our Father will bless our trials and difficulties. He will not permit us to be tried above that we are able; with every temptation He will provide a way of escape. (1 Corinthians 10:13.) I trust that we all shall be of one mind to accept this wonderful provision of God's grace, that we may be fully accepted members of this great Melchisedec Priesthood, of which our Lord Jesus is the Head. As soon as the last members of this Order are completed, the entire number—144,000—will stand with the Lamb upon Mount Zion, having His Father's name written in their foreheads.—Revelation 14:1-5.

Cures Biliousness Prevents Brights Disease

The Certified Statement of One Has Proven the Efficiency of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

Mr. Colin M. Kiel, Craighurst, Simcoe county, Ontario, writes: "My mother and I have both used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills with great satisfaction. We find that there is nothing to equal them as a prompt cure for torpid liver, biliousness and indigestion.
